PRIZES ON PATENTS.

How to get $100 and Perhaps Make a Fortune.

We secure patents and to induce people to keep track of their bright ideas we offer a prize of one hundred dollars to be paid on the first of every month to the person who submits to us the most meritorious invention during the preceding month. We will also advertise the invention free of charge in the National Register, a weekly newspaper, published in Washington, D. C., which has an extensive circulation throughout the United States and is devoted to the interests of inventors.

NOT SO HARD AS IT SEEMS.

The idea of being able to invent something strikes most people as being very difficult; this delusion the Company wishes to dispel. It is the simple things and small inventions that make the greatest amount of money, and the complex ones are seldom profitable. Almost everybody, at some time or another, conceives an idea, which, if patented, would probably be worth to him a fortune. Unfortunately such ideas are usually dismissed without thought. The simple inventions like the car window, which could be easily slid up and down without breaking the passenger's back, the sauce pan, the collar button, the nut lock, the bottle stopper, the snow shovel are things that almost every one sees some way of improving upon, and it is these kind of inventions that bring the greatest returns to the author.

The prize we offer will be paid at the end of each month, whether the app lication has been acted upon by the Patent office or not. Every competitor must apply for a patent on his invention through us, and whether he secures the prize or not, the inventor will have a valuable patent.

Martial law has been proclaimed at Cuba.

Illinois Prohibitionists met in conference at Springfield, February 28.

Great Britain has agreed to send a representative to the proposed International Monetary Conference.

The New Zealand government has forbidden the exportation of arms and ammunition to Samoa.

The statue of General Grant has been placed in the National Capitol by the Grand Army of the Cumberland.

Kentucky's prohibition convention met at Louisville and nominated T. B. Demaree of that city for governor.

Congressman W. L. Wilson, of West Virginia, has been appointed in place of Postmaster-General Bissell, resigned.

The anti-lottery bill has passed the House of Representatives, and only awaits the President's signature to become a law.

The fifty-third Congress adjourned sine die, Monday, having crystallized into legislation only a few of the long debated bills.

The House of Representatives has refused to ratify the payment of $425,000 damages awarded to Great Britain by the Behring Sea arbitrators.

By the repeal of the Delaware "bottle law" children in that state are prohibited from entering saloons for the purchase of intoxicating liquors.

Count Tolstoi is said to be the author of the recent manifesto censuring the Czar for his determination to maintain the autocracy of Russia.

THE sketch of Mrs. Maria H. Gordon, of Boston, was written before the death of her noble husband, Dr. A. J. Gordon, which will account for the absence of any allusion to his heavenly promotion.

THE announcement telegraphed by some unauthorized person to the effect that Mrs. Cleveland has joined the W. C. T. U. is, so far as our president knows, utterly without foundation. Mrs. Cleveland is a loyal friend of the temperance cause, but we have never heard of her joining any organization.

MISS WILLARD wishes it stated that any articles of hers that have appeared in Sunday papers have been published without her authorization. She has repeatedly declined advantageous offers to contribute to these papers, and would not knowingly do anything so inconsistent and so harmful to the society of which she is the president.

TEMPERANCE legislation for Indiana has materialized from the recent chaos of debate in the form of the new Nicholson law. This act to regulate the sale of liquors has many of the features of the Scandinavian system, in its proscription of elegant furnishings, devices for amusements, screens and partitions, none of which are permitted. In its limitations as to the amount of liquors to be sold and consumed on the premises, which must be located on the ground floor of a building and exposed to the view of the public, and in its prohibition of the saloon privileges to minors, the best of the Swedish regulations are included in the Hoosier law. The important and most commendable portion of the bill is its provision for local prohibition by remonstrance of a majority of voters in any township or ward. As we read over the many sections of this elaborate and labored piece of regulation, we wondered why it is that partial prohibitions and commands—thou must not do so and so and thou must do this and that—are so popular with the majority of people. If there were no revenue from the traffic, would it submit to these proscriptions?

WE notice that some of our contemporaries are writing editorials on different topics treated by Miss Willard in her annual address, into which they were introduced because of their correlation with the temperance movement. This is a good omen, and shows that the broader view of the question enlists a much larger constituency; but our president wishes it to be distinctly understood that no one but herself is responsible for the views she expresses in this annual message; it is rather a statement to her comrades of what has been specially in her thought during the year, and is thrown out for the consideration of the local unions in the way of topics of debate and conversation and for subjects of essays and addresses.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE is in New York soliciting subscriptions to pay off the debt of the Temperance Temple, which by the stipulation of the contract must be done within twelve years of the laying of the corner-stone, which was done in 1890. The National W. C. T. U. has occupied this building for three years, the beautiful Willard Hall being daily used for temperance and other reform meetings, and the publishing house which issues from one hundred to one hundred and thirty millions of pages annually, having a fine suite of rooms. Marshall Field, the merchant prince, has recently subscribed twenty-five thousand dollars to the Woman's Temple, and Mrs. Cyrus McCormick, widow of the celebrated inventor, ten thousand. Mrs. Carse is in pursuit of other large subscriptions and her well-known energy and skill in securing money for philanthropic work makes it practically certain that she will succeed. Mrs. Carse's wheel is being sent out by thousands in response to applications from all parts of the country. These come chiefly from children and young people, who by securing a dime apiece from a dozen persons, each of whom receive in return a lithograph of the Temple, get for themselves attractive prizes, among them a whole set of silver spoons.

THE Woman's National Council has done well and wisely in making Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson its president. No more "perfect flower of womanhood" blooms in America's garden. Noble, gifted, accomplished and large-hearted, Mrs. Dickinson will be equally trusted and beloved by women of every guild. We have heard but one expression and that we have expressed. A mind so comprehending and sympathies so mellow as those of Mrs. Dickinson, make her that rarest of all creations—a universal solvent. We felt strongly drawn to Mrs. Rachel Foster Avery for president, her graciousness of character and remarkable executive abilities qualifying her for this high office. But Mrs. Avery could not accept, and we rejoice that a choice so admirable was made and call attention to the fact that of the five general officers of the Woman's Council three are white-ribboners of National reputation: Mrs. Dickinson, president, Dr. Anna Shaw, vice-president, Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, treasurer. The old officers of the Council voluntarily retired. This will be a relief to Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, the former treasurer, who has now so many extra cares, resulting from her new position as vice-president-at-large of the National W. C. T. U. It ought to be said that this woman of rare wisdom was the central power at our recent Polyglot Petition meetings in Washington. She arranged through Senator Frye for the presentation to the President of the United States, presided at the great meeting in Convention Hall, was chairman of the committee on resolutions of the Woman's Council, and in every way sustained her reputation as "the unstampedable woman from Maine." Good and great women have gathered at Washington this year in numbers gratifying to the veterans, and have conducted their work with wisdom. When they go again they will be classified into two groups answering to the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the plan that Miss Willard urged in her address as first president of the society.

TUESDAY, February 19, was preëminently W. C. T. U. day in the great Woman's Council at Washington, D. C. The National corresponding secretary, Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, gave an admirable address in the morning on "Woman's Mission to the Church as Minister and Missionary." In the afternoon the work of the organization was presented by the National treasurer in a most spirited address, which received heartiest commendation from all. The latter half of the evening was given to our work, Miss Willard presiding. Miss Kearney and Mrs. Hoffman gave short addresses in the very best vein of each. Lady Henry Somerset was to have been the last speaker of the evening, but, to the regret of all, she was unable to be present. However "the Chieftain" occupied the time, and held her delighted audience in one of those addresses which are so preëminently her own.

WE understand that quite a number of leaders of the W. W. C. T. U. have already registered berths in the Berlin for the two hundred dollar tour and the great convention in London in June next, including a visit to Paris and Switzerland, which is being organized by Dr. Lunn Among those who have secured berths are our recording secretary, Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman; our treasurer, Mrs. Helen M. Barker; our associate editor, Miss Jennie A. Stewart; Mrs. A. F. Newman, of Nebraska; Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi; Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, of St. Louis; Mrs. Sarah Vail Thompson, of Minneapolis; Miss Elizabeth Yates, of Round Point, Me.; Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, of Winthrop Center, Me.; Mrs. S. M. Perkins, Cleveland, O.; Mrs. Elizabeth Boynton Harbert and family, of Evanston, Ill., and Mrs. R. B. Chambers, of West Grove Park, Pa. Those who are intending to go should write at once to the Pilgrimage Secretary, Review of Reviews, Astor Place, New York, N. Y., for the plan of the steamer. It seems likely that the steamer will be filled at an early date.

OUR president has often spoken of "a reciprocity treaty" between the white-ribboners of England and America. She has expressed the belief that a "change of works" would greatly advantage both, and certainly the last three years illustrate the reasonableness of this view. None but the most stolid mind could fail to perceive that "the organized form of the Crusade" has gone forward by leaps and bounds within this period. The stay of our leader in England gave a strong impetus to systematized methods and the wider outlook, while the presence in this country of Lady Henry Somerset has incalculably raised the standard of teetotalism and home protection in circles that have not been wont to consider them at all. Since her visit to our country in August last, aside from the vacation months in the Catskills where they kept two stenographers busy, and we fear were far too closely occupied themselves, our leaders, one or other of them, have spoken in every New England and Middle state besides several Western ones and in Maryland and the District of Columbia. Miss Willard has spoken fifty times and Lady Somerset not less than one hundred, and we know by the size of their audiences that the total number reached must have been at least a hundred thousand. Beside this the great Convention in Cleveland and the Polyglot Petition meetings in Washington were landmarks in the history of our organization. Three stenographers have been constantly at work receiving letters and articles by dictation, and many leading men and women from all parts of the United States have been met; while in Boston the white ribbon has been carried into the most cultured circles, literary and philanthropic. They now cross the sea to help work out the details of the great World's Convention in London (June 14 to 21) at which the Polyglot Petition will be presented. Early in the autumn Miss Willard and Miss Gordon will return to attend state conventions. With hearts full of gratitude to God, let us bid them Godspeed and bon voyage.

THE BUILDINGS OF SELF AND UNSELF.

BY ROBERT HOLLOWAY.

And dost thou build and building fill,
And yet dost build, and higher still?
And all for what, for only what?
That others see and thou mayst joy?
The world indeed doth see and laud,
But seeth only Self.

And God Himself doth also see
This building thine and thee.
And seen from heights of Truth and Light,
'Twere built to sink and sink outright,
Till deepest depths of endless night,
Its place were found.

A building firm He'd have of thee,
Whose walls on Goodness laid,
With Mercy's cement spread,
Do rise for naught of Self;
'Gainst every human's woe do stand,
For every human's wealth.

Compassion sweet doth form its roof,
True Brotherhood its floor.
Its windows, all of Love,
Do radiant Truth shine forth;
Its doors give welcome wide
To all the suffering Earth.

Not floating o'er, some narrow purposed flag,
But banner broad and clean and bright,
For angel hand thereon to write,
"A common good to all of men,"
"All curse suppressed,"
And "Peace on all the earth."

From all of error's hosts engaged,
From wrongs disturbed, from greeds enraged,
Flames in fiercest heat shall glow,
And furious storms shall blow.
Yet it shall stand in glory grand,
Unto eternity.

MC CRACKEN'S BOY.

In Three Chapters.

BY HELEN RACHEL ROBB.

Chapter III.

Ike came to consciousness with Doc's soft tongue licking his cheek. He opened his eyes and found that he was lying in a rocky gorge, with the moonlight shining peacefully about him flecking the rocks and grass with little patches of light that were broken up into queer patterns by the branches over his head. A little stream was flowing somewhere not far off, for he heard its soft lapping, as if it were whispering to itself some strange story that his ears were not yet quite made ready to understand. That sound always reminded him of the voice of the little baby sister at home, and where was home?—And where was he? he wondered.

"Whar we be, old feller?" he whispered, and tried to reach his hand up to pat the face of the faithful friend standing over him; but the arm did not move, only a sharp, excruciating pain was the result of the effort. Then slowly, one by one, came the remembrance of the things that had happened in the past day. He finally remembered it all distinctly, up to the moment when it seemed as if a door was suddenly closed upon all his former life. He knew that he must be seriously hurt; the agony was now growing more terrible every moment, as thoughts rushed through his mind, and the heart was striving to take up its accustomed work and send the life force through the mangled little body.

He would probably die here—"An' O, who'll take keer o' mammy an' the baby?" he wailed. "Oh, God, let me live an' git well! I mustn't die, I can't die!"

And then the still, small voice that has been sounding all down the ages whenever a torn, human heart has listened to it, spoke, "I am with you—I am with you."

"He'll be with mammy, too, I reckon; yes, I know He will!" he exclaimed.

A peaceful rest then came, a calm that was above and beyond the reach of the pain that was racking the little body. The soft breeze that floated past his ear left him the same words, "I am with you."

The little baby voice of the brook lisped them, the branches of the trees, stretched out like great hands over him, dropped the words, as the October wind loosened their bright leaves from the twigs that had held them all summer; the same message was even in the mournful, sobbing sigh of sympathy from the dog by his side.

The shadows cast by the moonlight had visibly changed their direction when Ike heard men's voices in the distance; they came nearer, and he tried to call, but his voice was so weak that only Doc, close beside him, could hear it; so he whispered, "Go an' bring' em, Doc, good old feller." The dog had been listening also, debating, apparently, what course he ought to pursue, and now bounded up the steep sides of the ravine. Ike heard his bark, and knew that he had found the men and was bringing them to him.

The voices came nearer and nearer, he saw the light of lanterns, and then heard Aunt Nancy's voice—she was coming, too, to find him! With a short bark Doc jumped to his side and licked his face encouragingly, then there were men crowding about, and Aunt Nancy was kneeling beside him, touching him caressingly with her hard, wrinkled hands, her tears falling on his face.

One man stooped and lifted him very gently and carefully, but there was a scream of agony, and then he knew nothing more till he opened his eyes in Aunt Nancy's cabin. Some one was holding the light above him, and the kind-faced doctor, whom he had often seen riding through the village, was bending over him.

Ike opened his eyes very wide, and again had to go through that slow process of recalling events. The doctor put something in his mouth and told him to swallow it; he obeyed, and closed his eyes wearily. When he opened them again there was no one else in the room but Aunt Nancy.

Every object in the little cabin was familiar to him. He knew each broken brick around the fireplace there, where he had sat so often to warm himself on cold days, listening to the stories Aunt Nancy told, as she ironed at the table by the window. He remembered how those rusty, old andirons would change color from a dull brown to a rich black, as the heat increased, when he threw on the wood he had brought for her in the back of his wagon. There on the mantel was the brass candlestick that she always kept brightly polished with ashes. She was very proud of it and had told him many times about her "old man" giving it to her as a wedding present.

Beside the fireplace was the shelf that held the cracked cup and the two plates that comprised her table ware. The shelf was covered with blue paper that he had found in a store box and brought to her a few weeks before. Everything he looked on was suggestive of the pleasant times he had spent with his friend. His eyes fell on the quilt that covered him. It was a marvel of yellow, red and green, pieced together after a pattern that Aunt Nancy called "de steppin' stones o' Jurden." Her daughter, dead years ago, had made it, and it was always folded away as the most precious treasure in the cabin. He had never before seen it on her bed, and felt, even now, the honor she had done him in spreading it over him, and thanked her in his heart.

He looked up into the kind, dark face above him and whispered:

"I'se goin' to die, ain't I, Aunt Nancy?"

"Yes, honey, you's gwine ter be wif de bressed Jesus mighty soon," she answered, her voice choked with sobs.

He tried to say something more, but was too tired for further effort just then. Seeing this, she said encouragingly:

"Yer mammy'll be hyah soon. I'se done sont fer her."

He was glad of this. Perhaps she would come in time for him to tell her.

His eyes traced the distracting patterns of the quilt, and he recalled the significance of the figures as they had been explained to him, till, from weariness the eyes closed involuntarily, and he slept for a short time. At last the eyes opened, and looking around he asked eagerly, "Has she come?"

"No, honey, chile, not yit, but she'll be hyah d'rec'ly," Aunt Nancy said, smoothing his head.

"I'll tell you, Aunt Nancy, for maybe I won't be hyah when she comes," he said, looking earnestly into her face with the blue eyes that even then wore the expression that told they were soon to see the things that mortal eyes cannot behold.

"Yes, honey, what ye want ter say," she answered, bending with her ear close to his pale lips.

"Tell her," he gasped, "that He'll be with her always. Tell her all about Him, like you told me." There was a long pause during which the little face grew more pinched and sunken. Again he roused himself. "Tell her 'bout the money. Hit's in a box, 'twixt the logs covered with a piece o' mud."

After another pause, "Hit's 'hind the table, 'long side o' whar the gourd hangs. Thar's nineteen nickels, just needin' one to make the dollar."

The face was growing ashen in color, and the breath shorter. He waited for some time and then whispered:

"Hit's to buy a yarn skirt fer mammy an' one fer the baby." Another rest, and then,

"I'd like to kiss the baby."

The eyes closed, and the breath seemed to have ceased. Poor Doc, who had crept under the bed when his little master was laid on it, slipped out, and, gazing into his face, gave a piteous whine and licked the pale hand lying on the quilt. The eyes opened again and the lips moved in an effort to speak to the dumb creature that had been his sympathizing companion in so many griefs. He seemed to understand and laid his nose against the little hand. The eyes did not close again and no change was visible, but when, in a few minutes the old negro stooped to moisten the white lips, she found that the breathing had ceased, and the weary heart, that had ached so often in its twelve years of struggle, was resting in perfect peace.

His mother came within an hour, and the burden of her weak, selfish grief was, "How'll I git on without Ike?"

The father had been killed instantly and carried home at once, while search was being made for the boy.

In the early morning light, a kind neighbor drove a wagon slowly along the country road. In it was the widowed mother with her baby in her arms, and the old negro woman beside her; behind them, covered with a sheet, was the still form of the one who had, so many times, passed over that same road, weary and lonely and hungry. All his wants were supplied now.

Aunt Nancy gave every word of the message to the sobbing mother, and, when they reached the house, looked for the spot in the wall that Ike had described. She found it easily, for the lump of mud had been removed, but there was nothing in the little cavity. She thought he might have made a mistake about the location of the spot, and searched the walls carefully wherever the clay was loose, but there was no money there.

Afterwards she found a little pink pasteboard box, empty, lying on the ground outside the window. She dusted it carefully with her apron, and held it in her hand, debating what should be done with it. At last she put it in her pocket, and later, with tears raining upon it, it was folded in the one white handkerchief she owned, and wrapped up with the many colored quilt in the bottom of the box that held her small stock of treasures.

SOME OF OUR WOMEN.

VIII.

Maria H. Gordon.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Mrs. Maria Hale-Gordon, long the president of the Boston W. C. T. U., was born in Providence, R. I., August 19, 1842. Her father, Isaac Hale—one of the early abolitionists, and a man now eighty-two years of age—was born in Newbury, Mass., while her mother, Harriet Johnson, was a native of Newbury, Vt. Her father is an early riser, and walks twice a day to his place of business. "His eye is not dimmed, nor his natural force abated." His Puritan ancestors left England in 1636. Mrs. Gordon possesses her father's vitality in a marked degree. Her husband, Dr. A. J. Gordon, is known throughout the length and breadth of the country as a Baptist clergyman and an author. With him she has passed nearly twenty-six years of happy married life, blessed with eight children, six of whom are living.

Mrs. Gordon is a born leader, and plans a campaign for no-license or prohibitory amendment with the skill of a general. The secretary of the Boston W. C. T. U. in her annual report, now ready, well says: "Never was our city more thoroughly organized for any campaign than that of the prohibition amendment, under her leadership. Every ward and every precinct has its efficient chairman, under whose direction literature could be distributed to each voter of the city with the utmost dispatch." Mrs. Gordon is not more deeply interested in temperance than in foreign missions, especially in the Congo region, with its wonderful possibilities for the instruction of the heathen and the spread of the gospel. She is an efficient helpmate to her husband in evangelical work. No obstacle deters her in the line of duty. She is physically strong, and imbued with a high and holy zeal, and when she reads the words, "Thus saith the Lord," she proceeds with indomitable purpose in temperance and missionary work.

In January of 1877 I went to Boston by Mr. Moody's invitation to conduct meetings in connection with his tabernacle work. On the day of my arrival I entered Berkley Street Congregational church where I found a great congregation of women, and on the platform, giving a Bible Reading, sat the wife of the most distinguished Baptist minister in New England, Mrs. Maria H. Gordon. I knew that she and her husband were among the closest friends of Mr. Moody, that they were devoted to every good word and work, and that by reason of the remarkable talent and character of the wife she had the power to be a true yoke-fellow and comrade of her husband. From that day I counted them both among my dear heart-friends.

From that time Mrs. Gordon and I have worked together side by side in the white ribbon cause. At the great convention in Saratoga in the summer of 1880, Dr. Gordon was chosen to preside over the united temperance forces of the nation, and Mother Stewart and I with several other temperance women and men were made a committee to escort him to the platform and the chair of the presiding officer. It came into my mind then that he was our temperance Hercules, so stalwart, stately, noble did he seem in face, figure, bearing, voice and all the attributes of a great and well poised character. It was at that convention that I became convinced of my duty to leave the Republican party of my father's and of my heart's affection in times past, and to join the unpopular political movement which had Prohibition as its central idea. In this new departure I had the warm sympathy of these dear friends and felt not a little stayed and steadied by their earnestness.

For fifteen years Mrs. Gordon was president of the Boston W. C. T. U., during which time she headed the heavy enterprise of preparing for the National Conventions, one of which was held in her husband's beautiful church. Indeed, it was in that church that I first presided after my election as president of the National W. C. T. U.; it was there that our work was systematized under the head of departments, with responsible superintendents; it was there that I had the honor to name Mrs. Mary H. Hunt as superintendent of the department of scientific temperance instruction. Many other notable events connected with that Convention I should be glad to record, for they were historic, and will be a part of the record of the temperance reform; but our second Convention in 1891, in Tremont Temple, and the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in Faneuil Hall, were still more notable, and in both Mrs. Gordon was of the central group. She is a most acceptable public speaker, her voice uttering no uncertain sound on the vexed questions of the nation, seeing as she does with clear, spiritual vision that all reform must begin, continue and end in Christ.

She is of a most hopeful temperament, with a bright, sparkling countenance, and is the centre of a beautiful and happy home.

Both of her sons are graduates of Harvard University, the eldest daughter is married to a minister, one of the daughters is a student in Wellesley College, and two are at home, where the constant cares and calls require the help of these faithful daughters. It was my good fortune to be present at the breakfast table in the Gordon home in 1890 when the young son, who was then a student at Harvard, and the great and good husband joined in urging the wife and mother to fulfill her duties as a voter on the school question that day. They were not obliged to do much urging, for Mrs. Gordon is instant in season and out of season in every good work, as everybody knows who knows her at all.

The increasing cares connected with the great missionary enterprises in which Dr. Gordon is engaged seemed to oblige his competent and faithful companion to give even more of her help than in the past, so that she has resigned the position of president of the Boston W. C. T. U. after long years of intelligent and faithful service. She feels, however, that she is still one of us, and we know that as the years go on she will do all in her power for the white-ribbon movement, of which she has been an exponent so loyal and true.

A VISITOR'S IMPRESSIONS.

BY REV. HENRY S. LUNN, M. D.

The first visit which any one makes to a new country is always interesting to himself, and the impressions of a visitor are sometimes of interest to those who dwell in the country visited. I trust this may be the case as I jot down at the editor's request, a few of my own impressions of a very hurried journey through this great country. It may be that my impressions will need to be somewhat discounted because of the hospitable reception with which I have everywhere been greeted.

I shall confine myself in these notes to subjects of special interest to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL, and I will commence what I have to say by referring to the great impression produced both on my own mind and that of my wife who accompanies me, by the splendid addresses to which we have listened during the last few days in the city of Washington. I have never been present at a meeting which had to suffer a greater disappointment than the historic meeting held in the Convention Hall of Washington, to launch the Polyglot Petition upon its errand of mercy around the world. That both the great leaders, Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard, whose names have from the first been bound up with the history of this unique document, should have been laid aside by sickness on this memorable evening, was a matter of the profoundest regret. Nevertheless, this fact only served to bring out into stronger relief the wealth of talent and the eloquence possessed by the W. C. T. U. I would not like to differentiate between the many excellent lady speakers who faced the ordeal on Friday night last so successfully, but I can only say that as speaker after speaker rose under these trying circumstances and addressed the great audience suffering from this serious disappointment and succeeded in entirely banishing the gloom which had settled upon the meeting earlier in its proceedings, my admiration for the eloquence and ability of American women rose to even a higher level than it had previously attained.

I have been privileged to attend for a while the great gathering of the National Council of Women, which is holding its triennial session in this city, and there again I have been impressed alike in the management of the meeting by its able president, and in the clear, concise and vigorous addresses that have been given by the great force of legislative and executive power which is lost to the life of the nation by the present laws, which exclude from her councils and from any share in the government those whose claim to citizenship is so clear and unmistakable. I felt both on Friday night and this morning that the Methodist church would find it increasingly difficult at the approaching Quadrennial Conference to continue to exclude from a share in its deliberations the noble women who have represented this church on these occasions and their many gifted sisters throughout the length and breadth of the United States.

There is one other phase of your national life to which I should like to refer which has greatly interested Mrs. Lunn and myself, namely, the union of both sexes in your schools. In New England we visited a large academy where both sexes were being educated under the same roof, and in this city we have had the opportunity of visiting your great public schools and seen the sexes growing up in a way that is unknown in our own country. As I listened this morning to a girl in one of the higher classes in one of these great public schools explaining her lesson before a class-room composed of forty or fifty boys and girls I found an explanation of the wonderful gift of speech which is so characteristic of American women.

I think also that another valuable feature of your national life is due to this mixing of the sexes in your educational institutions. I refer to the marked politeness of American men to women of all classes. It may seem to some of your readers that there is room for improvement in this respect, but certainly the much-vaunted politeness of France is greatly inferior to that which one sees displayed on every hand in this country in this particular, and it is displayed without any regard to the rank or station in life of the woman who occasions it. In the elevators and hotels, if the humblest woman enters, every man at once removes his hat, and so in other departments of life the same politeness strikes an Englishman, as he does not find a corresponding display of this virtue in his own country.

There is one other feature in your national life which has very much impressed me, to which I think I ought to refer, and that is the tremendous strength of the moral forces in this country. I am well aware that in saying this I am running counter to much that has been said by my good friend, Mr. W. T. Stead. But it seems to me, after seeing your great cities, that, as one of your most thoughtful Chicago ministers put it to me, "Mr. Stead succeeded in the most remarkable manner in learning all about the dark side of Chicago life, and learning it with a considerable amount of accuracy, but at the same time did not learn all he ought to have learned about the forces that are working for purity, truth and justice in our midst." As this gentleman to whom I have referred, expressed it, and I quite believe what he said was true, "I could in half an hour give you such a picture of the religious and philanthropic activities of Chicago as would enthuse you as thoroughly as Mr. Stead's account must have depressed any who read it." That feeling came over me to-day as I listened to the noble women of the National Council of Women and thought of the tremendous organization there represented.

On looking through your editor's letter, I see that I am asked to say something with reference to the proposed W. W. C. T. U. tour. All I have to say now, beyond the mere business details which can be learned from my secretary, Review of Reviews, Astor Place, New York, N. Y., is that I hope this arrangement will secure the presence of a large band of your most enthusiastic workers at this great convention which is to be held at London. I feel that there is much to be gained for both nations by that glorious alliance between English and American workers which is typified in the well known portrait of Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard, linked arm in arm. I hope that the friendship between the presidents of the two great temperance unions on each side of the Atlantic will only be a forerunner of many friendships to be formed this coming summer between the officers of these two great unions which are destined in the near future to win glorious victories in the cause of temperance, purity and righteousness.

THE FRATERNITY OF REFORMS.

Teetotalism and Prohibition.

V.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

What is the matter with the temperance cause? Only a willful optimist will answer, with reference to its present progress, "It's all right." There is encouragement in the Great Petition, to sit in the shadow of which at Washington I have traveled far. In it the bitter cry of mothers, wives and sisters, tortured by the Drink Fiend, has at last become vocal in the ears of rulers. In its march around the globe let us hope that the whole round world is to be bound, not with gold chains, but with ribbons white about the throne of God, in whose universal kingship is our sure hope of final victory.

There is yet larger encouragement in Mrs. Hunt's whitening map of our country, sixteen millions of whose school children are now under the ægis of scientific temperance education. The public schools being conquered in all the states save four, she has begun on the Universities, and has the promise of the prospective American University which the Methodists are building at Washington, that it will have a department for the teaching of teachers in scientific temperance, which is also encouraging as the earnest of new triumphs among collegians. So is the current investigation by the Seth Low committee of the results of the drinking usages, which is probably to be accompanied by an official investigation by the National Labor Bureau, an appropriation for which is pending at this writing.

The Watterson-Satolli exclusion of liquor-dealers from official positions in Roman Catholic societies, followed as it has been by the Dominicans' life vow of total abstinence, and the united blast of Catholic trumpets in New York city against the proposed Sunday opening of saloons, all show that we are to have larger aid from this great church in the future than we have had in the past in fighting the saloon.

In Great Britain the proportion of abstainers in the Christian ministry is gaining. Canada's plebiscites show that the Americanism we are in a measure surrendering, is to be conserved in the new New England of our Northern Provinces. Harvard's banishment of tipple from commencement banquets is also a ray of hope and promise, and several notable public banquets of late from which wine was absent.

But all this encouragement is overshadowed by the three horrible facts that for about a third of a century past the consumption of liquors, by gallons, has multiplied nearly three times as fast as the population, while the number of prohibition states has decreased in inverse ratio, and, worst of all, the great total abstinence religions of Buddha and Mohammed, including half the race, have been, to a large degree, drawn by so-called Christian nations into the use of alcoholics. The first home in the land, even when occupied by church members, sets an evil example, and the temperance vote, despite resounding church resolutions, does not increase. Even the states that have prohibition are either relaxing enforcement or talking about "resubmission"—to saloon domination.

It is not the part of wisdom to hide these serious facts, but rather to face them and find some means of hastening victory. Nor is it necessary to conclude that our methods have been at fault. All the methods now in use are needed, but we wish to suggest the greater use of one of them as the need of the hour, namely—to borrow from the University Extension idea—let us have Scientific Temperance Education Extension, the teaching on public platforms everywhere, by reliable physicians and other specialists, of the facts that the law requires to be taught in the schools, but which are often not taught or not taught well because teachers and parents are not sufficiently informed and interested.

Nothing in the educational field is so characteristic of our period as the "extension" of studies from "commencement," before which we only learn how to study, out into life. School studies of civics, of citizenship, of sociology, of literature, in evening classes, clubs, Chautauquas, are multiplying on every side. No class of studies is more interesting than chemical experiments, with accompanying lectures, by persons of unquestioned ability. Many who would not attend the usual temperance lectures, who are not yet ready for the higher education of prohibition, could be interested in the study of its first principles in teetotalism, by experiments, introduced perhaps in health talks, such as the Y. M. C. A. have found popular, and such as pastors and other temperance leaders might well unite in asking capable Christian physicians to give in every community.

No one will be an abiding Prohibitionist until he has been convinced that teetotalism, rather than moderation, is his and every man's duty as to alcoholic beverages. Whether men become Prohibitionists or not, the breaking up of drinking usages will surely be promoted by a larger enlistment of scientific specialists in out-of-school teaching of the harmfulness of even a moderate use of intoxicating beverages. I think that Dr. Benjamin Ward Richardson's statement that a tippler who was never intoxicated is likely to bequeath weakness and disease to his children, and is even more likely to do so than one who has an occasional debauch, ought to be placarded over our land as diligently as have been the nostrums of quacks, and especially ought it to be repeated by doctors and scientists on the public platform of every city and village, and in every country school house.

In the writer's judgment what the American people need most in temperance work is to be convinced by such scientific temperance addresses as scarcely any one save Mrs. Hunt and Joseph Cook are now giving, that even beer is really a harmful drink. The most impressive temperance lecture I ever heard was one in which Rev. J. S. Ostrander, by the aid of a miniature distillery and other appliances (which I have secured for brief use in one of my lectures on "Practical Christian Sociology") showed to the audience the constituents of a glass of beer, the water, the alcohol, and the so-called "nutrition," which costs at the rate of $125 per barrel, and which, as a nasty sediment, he vainly offered any one ten dollars to eat, when separated from the fuddle. Such an apparatus, used by a druggist of consistent practice, or by a physician, or by any educated person in a scientific manner, might be made very effective if combined with popular citations of the testimony of physicians that alcohol has no definite food value, as a medicine is not suitable for self-prescription, and usually admits of a safer substitute.

I am the most radical of Prohibitionists, born a twin of the Maine law in the same year and state, and a party Prohibitionist from my first vote. I am firmly convinced by a study of this problem in all parts of the land, that we shall more swiftly reach the goal we seek, the breaking up of drinking usages, if we recognize that a great majority of our present population need first principles, a conviction that not drunkenness only but drinking also is always harmful, and that beer is as injurious as brandy and the introduction to it. Let us by scientific lectures and literature of unquestioned authority, make it impossible for any, in school or out, to doubt that drink is a curse.

CORRESPONDENCE

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

Dear Union Signal:—Another long interval has passed since last I sent you a record of passing events on this side—an interval so filled with fast recurring events of deepest interest, that the difficulty has been to find time to spare from helping to make the history of our time in relation to our many-sided reform, for the purpose of recording it. Yet many recent occurrences have been well worth the time and space. Noble women aided by good men have in recent days won a signal victory for purity and temperance by the much debated decision of our London county council in the famous "Empire" case, by which the official imprimatur was refused to gilded vice, greatly to the chagrin of many butterfly aristocrats and numerous others—shareholders whose seventy per cent dividends had been swelled by the "Empire" facilities for drinking and debauchery. This case was a nine days' wonder, and during that period the newspaper discussions were so voluminous that the fate of the Empire, rather than that of a music hall, might have hung in the balance. One great daily paper surpassed itself, which is saying much, in the degree of mud-throwing to which it descended; but others took a truer view, and ably supported the friends of sobriety and virtue. After the council did its part the question soon became reduced to its proper proportions, and the town agreed that right had been done. A remnant, of course, thinks otherwise, and threatens to make difficulty at the coming county council elections.

The current week is full, as the next three will be, of absorbing interest, as the battle is fought once again for the control of London's civic parliament. Your chieftain, Miss Willard, has, with singular aptness, styled our London county council an "organized millennium." Certainly during the whole six years of its existence—so new is real local self-government in greater London—the council has labored hard and well to bring millennial changes into the lives of the struggling masses. Six years ago, and three years ago (the election being triennial) the present writer had a part in the struggle which by dint of much effort gave London a "progressive" council. On both occasions a large majority of members were fully pledged to an advanced temperance policy, and the result has been the carrying out of a program that has filled liquordom with dismay.

Among other things, the council has extinguished every liquor license—of which there have been many—that has come within its control when property has been purchased for public improvements; it has uniformly refused to sell or rent land or property for liquor selling; has prohibited the sale of liquor in music hall auditoriums; insisted on a purer standard of management and conduct of music halls, and abolished the use of liquor in the lunatic asylums under its control, with the result that the ten thousand inmates have been greatly benefited and much money saved. This is but one line of progress. On all others an equally good record is shown. Thus it is that the forces of good and evil are joining issue, and the election of March 2 is fraught with far-reaching issues. The white-ribbon women are practically throughout London on the side of the progressives, and are displaying most gratifying activity. The Woman's Signal begins this week a series of articles on woman's duties in view of the election, and will be a powerful factor on the right side.

The opening of our Parliament has revived interest on all hands in the legislative aspects of the temperance cause. On the opening day notices were given of a dozen bills dealing with as many phases of the question, but all these were eclipsed by the renewed mention in the "Queen's speech"—really the government program for the session—of the government local direct veto bill. Sir William Harcourt, Chancellor of the Exchequer, has never swerved from his promised firm support of this measure, and the great bulk of our temperance people who have set their hopes upon it view the renewal of the promise with much gratification. Activity is being shown in many quarters in organizing support for the bill, and it is fitting that when Lady Henry Somerset returns to England next month she will find arrangements already made by the B. W. T. A., Speakers' Bureau and Political Departments in several parts of London, in many other counties and in Scotland for great meetings, at which she will be the principal speaker, and the first object of which will be to formulate and strengthen the popular demand for the power to suppress the liquor traffic.

The first of these great demonstrations is to be held in the City Temple, and Dr. Parker, the famous pastor of the church there, is to preside. It will be an epoch-making time, and a fit prelude to a series of meetings great in themselves, but greater still in respect of their purpose and of vast value and credit to women who are organizing them.

The Polyglot Petition has been the subject of favorable comment in a number of our newspapers latterly. The immediate occasion was the publication, through the temperance press agency here, of a statement which comprised three interesting items: that nearly four millions of people had signed the petition in over forty languages; that it is now to be presented to the United States government, and next summer to our own; and that recent additions have been made by the sending out to America of over one hundred signatures of leading men and women. These latter were gathered with much care. They include the names of some of the best known members of Parliament, county councillors, magistrates, heads of public bodies, clergymen, ministers and others whose names and personalities loom large among social reformers. Many more will, no doubt, be added before the formal presentation next June. The newspapers have remarked upon the Petition as a striking evidence of the extended influence of women's temperance work and of the earnestness and persistency with which it is pursued.

TWO GREAT MEETINGS.

Dear Union Signal:—The second Triennial Council of Women opened February 18, to last fourteen days. Mrs. May Wright Sewall is the president. It is not a union or a society or a federation of clubs, not a completed body, but a body in process of forming. It is a council of women's organizations. Its members are all national bodies of women, its representatives are of national repute.

The first Triennial Council was held in 1891 with nine societies as members. Miss Frances E. Willard was its president, and its sessions lasted three days. The second Triennial Council has twenty members and lasted fourteen days. These twenty members (all national societies) form the council and furnish for the platform but two representatives each.

Each society follows its own constitution, is never interfered with and never opposed. The field is broad as the world and varied as human desires. All creeds and religious beliefs, as well as all political and philanthropic affiliations here find tolerance and receive a respectful hearing. It is a living illustration of what Miss Willard has called the "sisterhood of woman now growing up around the world." All have a fair field in which to display their diverging sentiments, and careful attention is accorded to each in turn. Side by side with the missionary societies of Free Baptists and of Friends stands the Council of Jewish Women. The "League of Colored Women" receives the same consideration as does the influential "Woman's National Indian Association."

Heretofore it has been the object of organization to bind together those who agree, especially those who are working on the same lines. To work in harmony with those with whom we do not agree has been thought to be impossible to women. But here is an organization which is a triumph of female philanthropy. A difference of opinion on one question does not prevent harmony on other themes, or a chivalrous generosity toward all. In her address Mrs. Sewall, the president, said: "The muse of history takes us to Seneca Falls in August, 1848. Without that meeting the Board of Lady Managers would never have existed. Without that meeting the International Council of Women of 1888 would have been impossible. Thus the National Council of Women of the United States would have been unborn, and the present demonstration impossible. Within the last seven years a transformation has been wrought. The impulse to this was given by the great occasion out of which these two organizations sprung. That impulse has itself been strengthened by a hundred other new currents, consistent and harmonious yet diverse."

What bearing has this organization upon the future of our nation? Not many years and the tale is told. The destiny of the human race is in woman's hands, after all.

A four days' session was held in this city of the convention called the Continental Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The personnel is dignified and impressive. Although it is only four years since the society was organized, it has a membership of eight thousand. Mrs. Harrison, wife of the then president of the United States, was the first president general. She was followed in office by Letitia Green Stevenson, wife of Vice-President Stevenson. As two years is the limit of service for an officer, a new president general was chosen at this session. The choice fell upon Mrs. Mary McPherson Foster, whose husband has a position of trust under the government. But being the wife of her husband is not her only qualification. She is known as a lady of rare gifts and graces and deeply interested in the order.

The Congress is composed of twelve national officers, three hundred delegates and regents from forty-three states. There were some fine addresses. My ear was ever bent to catch words that indicated a forward movement among these new recruits to woman's organizations, for woman's faith in woman. I heard such words. To me they foreshadow a broader activity. These women are from the higher walks of life, women of culture, many of them favorites of fortune. What but the confirmation of their distinguished birth would have brought them into the arena of a woman's congress to make speeches, vote for candidates and join in earnest debate? I see in it a promise of nobler things. God has perhaps taken this way to call them forward into fuller service to the race.

These women did not at first desire a separate organization. They rapped loud and long at the doors of the body called the "Sons of the American Revolution," demanding admittance by right of birth, saying the blood of Revolutionary heroes flows in the veins of the daughters equally with the sons. Their prayer was strenuously denied, and they were in a measure compelled to embark alone. They find this much better than a silent partnership with their brothers would have been.

Last fall they tersely refused to send a fraternal delegate, when invited to do so, to the Council of Women, but at this session the Congress sent greetings to the Council (in session at the same time in this city), and invited the president and secretary of the Council to stand on their platform and address them. Mrs. Sewall and Mrs. Avery did so, and afterward had the pleasure of presenting to the Council a delegation from the Congress. In the delegation was Mrs. Mary McPherson Foster, the new president general, and Miss Mary Desha, known as being instrumental in the defeat of Congressman Breckinridge, who had been the husband of her dead sister. So a path seems to be opened looking toward future fraternal relations.

A handsome, full-length portrait of Mrs. Harrison has been purchased, and will soon be hung in the White House. The two most famous generals of the Civil War are represented by their daughters in the same chapter. These are Miss Mildred Lee, daughter of Gen. Robert E. Lee, and Mrs. Nellie Grant Sartoris, who trace their ancestry to Revolutionary sires.

Indeed, taking it all in all we seem to be living in Revolutionary days—for women! Mrs. Clinton Smith.

WOMAN'S TRIUMPH IN SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

Dear Union Signal:—It was surely opportune that after more than twenty months' wandering and working round the world, clasping hands and exchanging ideas with men and women who are working for the betterment of humanity, I should reach Australia at such a critical time.

The woman's suffrage bill, which had been presented to our legislature four times since 1886, has passed its second reading in the assembly after having successfully passed through the legislative council, our upper house or senate. Its fate was really trembling in the balance. Opponents of the bill had reserved some force and had formulated some astute plans for its defeat at the last moment. Being a constitutional change the bill could not be passed by a mere majority, however large, in either house, unless there was a majority of all the members present to vote personally.

It needed thirteen out of the twenty-four members of the Upper House, and twenty-eight out of the fifty-four assemblymen to pass the bill. The devices were—first, to induce some of its supporters to pair. It was no matter how few voted against the bill, provided there were not twenty-eight to vote for it. Second, the enemies moved amendments to change the bill so as to imperil its passing through the upper house when submitted to it in an altered form. The amendment most strongly pressed was for a referendum, and as the ministry which had brought it forward the previous year, had wanted to pass a referendum bill and failed, and as the woman's suffrage bill was the first measure they had proposed to submit to the referendum, the enemy who loathed the idea of any referendum whatsoever, and who would have voted dead against it if it had been proposed, advocates the postponement of adult suffrage until it had been put to the popular vote.

This would have told in two ways. The upper house fear that the referendum would put an end to them altogether and would probably have thrown out the bill. If they had carried it with this amendment it would probably have delayed the obtaining of the vote till the election after next. Not till 1899 could the women's votes be exercised. The ministry therefore wished the bill to be passed this session and did not hamper it with referendum conditions. Only one amendment was carried, making this slight differentiation between the male and female voter—that if a woman lived more than three miles from the polling place, or if she declared that by reason of her health she would probably be unable to go to the polling place on election day, she might vote through the nearest postoffice with sufficient security for secrecy. As our postmasters are not appointed for political reasons, we may trust them not to exceed the restricted powers given, which are the same as are given to absent male voters whose domicile is in South America.

The third plan of operation was the common one of talking against time, or as it is called, of stonewalling. This has been adopted on other questions towards the end of this session. When the house is in committee any member may talk as often as he pleases and as there is no "closure," as long as he pleases, till five or six in the morning in one case. If by this means weary members were worn out and left the house, it was of no consequence how many opponents left, but it was of vital consequence that the division should be called when there were fewer than twenty-eight present.

The work of the stonewallers was telling; one, two, three of our supporters walked out, and went to their homes; a little more eloquence, and there would certainly not be twenty-eight of our friends left. Here one of the labor members stepped into the breach. Mr. Hourigan proposed an adjournment till the following morning at half-past ten o'clock, and, to the great disgust of the opposition, that was carried.

On the following day our friends came forward in good order, and when the division was called there were thirty-one votes to fourteen counted for a bill which gives full suffrage to adult women, twenty-one being the age for registration for both sexes. On the same day the bill was referred back to the legislative council, and after there had been three or four hours of debate, the last dying struggle of the opposition, it was passed with the amendment.

It was intended to insert a clause preventing women from sitting in Parliament, and we were quite willing to forego that privilege, but somehow no such clause was suggested as an amendment, and I do not see anything in the body of the short bill to prevent women from being nominated or elected.

When we obtain the Queen's assent, the machinery for our registration will be set in motion, and we must then press upon all earnest women the duty of exercising the power given to them.

In tracing the history of the movement and its advance from Dr. Stirling's bill of 1886, and Mr. Caldwell's of 1889 and 1890, which were all for the limited suffrage for women householders and tax-payers, and for the upper house only, which had a small property qualification, to the bills of 1891, 1893 and 1894, which demanded adult suffrage on the same conditions as men for both houses of legislature, we see how much it owed to the temperance party, and especially to the W. C. T. U.

The actual Woman's Suffrage League grew out of the society for the promotion of social purity, which merged its efforts in the larger aim to make woman's voice as effective as that of men in legislation. The president of the Society became the president of the League, and all the members declared their adhesion to the new organization. A little later, the great temperance and Prohibition party saw that with the vote given to all women their influence would be more than doubled.

A restricted vote given to women of property would not meet the case with either of the bands of social reformers. It is the daughters of the poor who suffer from the vices of the sons of the rich, and from those of the older of the rich themselves. Man-made laws are not likely to seem perfect justice to women, and class legislation cannot do justice to classes which are unrepresented.

The drink traffic, in its manufacture and in its wholesale and retail distribution, is so strongly intrenched in capital that class representation cannot fight against it, and the conviction that the limited suffrage given to women would strengthen the upper house, the conservative and capitalistic body made many radical reformers oppose it, and demand absolute equality.

In this the women caught hold of the labor party, which has recently become a great force in Australia and in New Zealand. They protested against making use of women's votes in order to strengthen the power of money. They wanted the votes of their wives and their daughters to have the same weight for the legislative assembly as the votes of men, and they hoped to put an end soon to the upper house altogether.

One reason why the suffrage is more easily obtained in an Australian Colony than in an American state is because here we only vote for representatives and not for officers. American women are really more eager to secure honest and able administrators than to vote for capable legislators. Our city officers and the civil servants under government keep their offices during good conduct, and are neither displaced nor threatened when an adverse vote in the house changes the personnel and the policy of the responsible ministry. So many of your officials, municipal, state and federal, fear displacement by the woman's vote that they are a strong opposing body.

Besides, neither of the American political parties can see that the vote of women will be of advantage to them. In Australia the restricted vote would have strengthened capital, the full vote is likely to strengthen labor. This removed woman's suffrage from the position of a Utopian fad into the realm of practical politics.

The Labor party in Victoria, in New South Wales and in Queensland, have put adult suffrage on their program, and in a longer or shorter time they will win it. Everywhere adult suffrage is supported by the Temperance party which, however, is by no means so strong in proportion to the population as it is in America. It is supported by single taxes and all varieties of land reformers. And it is a fact not without significance that the two British colonies which tax land values, and the colonies in which proportional representation has been brought forward as a new and practicable reform, are those which have given equal rights to both sexes.

A PERSONAL STATEMENT.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Numerous letters of greeting and inquiry concerning my health have come to me in these days so full of pain and suffering. I am unable to reply to the kind messages, beyond sending a few lines to the friends through THE UNION SIGNAL, in which I wish to express my thanks for their kindness. The world would be little without sympathy.

While it is true that I was confined to my bed for many weeks and suffered beyond all calculation, lingering for some days between life and death, I have no reason to believe my constitution is broken, and I believe a year's rest will restore me to my usual vigor and strength. The years of unceasing toil and travel have told on me, and the reaction has brought about a collapse of nerve force that nothing but perfect rest can restore.

With warmest greetings to the women of my native land, and every hope of a speedy recovery.

Yours in the cause,

JESSIE A. ACKERMANN.

ONE secret of sweet and happy Christian life is in learning to live by the day. It is the long stretches that tire us.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

DEAR SISTERS:—In response to my request in a recent letter for brief accounts of the

in your unions, a few answers have come, and while the balance are on their way hither we will consider those already in hand. These accounts are not given in the sense of reports, but as suggestions, henec localities are not mentioned. Local unions can readily see how many of these efforts are practicable to them.

The following inspiring reply comes from a union, which, the corresponding secretary writes, "boasts but twelve members":—

"The best thing we did was to drive out a druggist who was selling liquor. The next best thing was to secure the passage of an anti-cigarette law. We next obtained one hundred and seventy-five signatures to the Polyglot Petition; circulated a suffrage petition; also one asking an amendment to a saloon law requiring a saloonist to publish his petition thirty days previous to presenting it at court."

This next response may help others who have not known how to have scientific temperance instruction laws enforced in their public schools: "Ever since we have had the law which guarantees to every child in our public schools the right to the knowledge of the effects of alcoholics and narcotics upon the human system, our union, through its energetic superintendent of this department, has labored faithfully and earnestly to have the study introduced according to law. Temperance physiology, with text-books in the hands of pupils, has been taught only in the high school and the eighth grade of the grammar school. In lower grades it was taught orally. We all know that when a study is left in that way with no specific time set apart for it, it usually falls far short of what it should be. The superintendent of this departments feeling that all her powers of persuasion and entreaty had been exhausted as far as the superintendent and school board were concerned, proposed to the union that at election time, the new member of the board elected be one favorable to our cause. This was accomplished. Then we circulated a petition, asking that this study be given as prominent a place in the curriculum as other studies. The petition was signed by the most prominent women of the town, mostly mothers, and was presented to the board while in session. A few months later our committee was invited to meet with the board and it was arranged that text-books should be placed in the hands of the pupils in the fifth grade and in the lower branches it should be taught orally, and a specific time set apart for it."

One union looks upon

at one time as the climax of the year's efforts and tells how it was done: "One Sunday morning our pastor, a firm friend of the W. C. T. U. and a voting Prohibitionist, preached a powerful sermon from the text, 'Where the word of a King is, there is power.' At its close he urged a full attendance at the evening meeting, saying in substance that the women of the W. C. T. U. have found the source of power and that the organization is to-day one of the mightiest forces for the promotion of the cause of Christ. The church was well filled, one of our speakers gave a powerful address which was followed by an appeal for members by the pastor. Six of us then canvassed the audience for new names, twenty being the result, about half of them honoraries. We attribute our success to previous faithful seed sowing and the help of a friendly and courageous pastor."

I wish the next practical communication had reached me when the bitter winter was at our doors. New unions —and old ones—are sometimes at a loss, even in the face of great need, as to "What to do next," and might have found a suggestion in the following. (However, there's another winter.)

"The work of conductor and motorman on trolley cars is one of great exposure during the winter weather. On many lines the platform of the motorman is not enclosed. If the car is heated, no heat reaches him, and he must stand in the teeth of the storm. Much sympathy has been expressed in our city for the trolley employés, and for that reason attention has been drawn to the 'Coffee Work' of our union. This is nothing new, for it has been one of our chief interests for years. During the winter months we have given hot coffee to the employés at the terminus of a street car line. We employ some one to make the coffee and have it ready in pails for the men as they come in from their long, cold trips. They have always been grateful for the coffee, and appreciative of the fact that it takes the place of the alcoholic stimulants to which they are sorely tempted to resort when almost perishing with the cold. Serving hot coffee to the men is practical sympathy for their suffering, a precaution against danger to passengers and a preventive temperance work."

Thus by many good means the women, who are "a great host," are striving to hasten the day of His coming whose reign shall be one of universal peace and love.

Mother Experience.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

PRAYER.—With my soul have I desired thee in the night: yea, with my spirit within me will I seek thee early.—Isa. 26:9.

PROMISE.—If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.—John 15:7.

The other night in Washington tossing feverishly on my bed from an attack of influenza, my head must have been full of the Temple Wheel, for in my dreams I seemed to be forming chains of wheels and trying to compute their number; they increased more rapidly than I could count, until every place was full; they were piled up by the hundreds of thousands. Finally I awoke, utterly worn out by my big contract. I cannot but think the feverish dream will in a few months become a reality. In the last letter received from Miss Sara Johnson, Chicago, she writes: "Orders continue to pour in for the Wheel; we must have a larger clerical force in the office. To-day we received four hundred and twenty-five orders for wheels." I have written her that I shall not be content until the orders average a thousand a day. The circle is rapidly widening; almost without an exception the persons who have filled Wheels and returned them order more, they find it so easy to fill them.

Lady Henry Somerset yesterday propounded the following question during a conference with her and the Chieftain about the Temple. "How many Wheels must one fill to secure a dozen Temple souvenir spoons?" "Forty-eight," I answered. "I should think," she replied, "that a great many would strive to secure a set of the beautiful spoons." A set (half a dozen) can be earned by filling twenty-four Wheels.

Little six-year-old Elsie Thorp, Pawcatuck, Conn., was the first child that filled a Wheel. Her sister Estella and her brother Leslie have each sent in their Wheels filled. Mrs. Thorp writes that Elsie was very much pleased with the game of Brownies which we sent her. She says as soon as the baby gets her Wheel filled she is going to send for more.

Mrs. Monblo, Sheldon, Washington, writes: "Lytle succeeded in filling his Wheel even quicker than we thought. He wants the Educational Game of Checkers. His sister has become so enthused she wants a Wheel also. Please send her one."

We do not expect people to be as unselfish as Mrs. M. E. Stevenson, Clarke city, Ill., as children and adults both usually work better if there is some personal reward to compensate them at the end of their labor. This unselfish woman writes: "I return my Wheel filled. I do not want any premium as I consider I am amply repaid by being able to add my little towards helping to pay for our Temple. Please send me another Wheel."

One of our youngest unions—born only in January in the city of New York—the Lathrap union, whose president, Mrs. A. T. Hull, is a most devoted white-ribboner, has sent for two hundred Temple Wheels. One hundred of these is to be filled in order to place the name of our illustrious, lamented and beloved Mary T. Lathrap, for whom this union has been named, on a tablet in Willard Hall. The Lathrap union only numbers twenty-five members but Mrs. Hull is confident they will fill their two hundred Wheels as they are all greatly interested in the Temple. All honor to this brave young union and its noble, earnest president.

Mrs. E. C. Butler, an aged member of the Old Ladies' Home in Boston, sends $1.61 which she collected in her mite-box. Mrs. Gratia Decker Magann, of Tickfall, La., sends $19.15 to complete the payment of $100 to place the name of her mother, Mrs. E. M. J. Decker, on a memorial tablet in Willard Hall. This work was undertaken by the white-ribboners of Ontario county, New York, and on learning that they lacked $19.13 of the full amount Mrs. Magann sent her check to cover it. The Y's of Lockland, Ohio, sent $50. These young workers have not pledged a specific amount to the Temple, but we feel sure they will raise $100. The W. C. T. U. of Abingdon, Ill., sends $30 to apply on its pledge. This makes $45 credited on the pledge. Mrs. Mattie M. Barton, of Croton, Mich., sends $4.60 to be applied on the Newaygo county pledge.

Mrs. M. A. Tunis, of Somerville, N. J., writes, enclosing $20, to be applied towards a tablet for Somerset county. She writes: "A few days after the close of the Fair I visited the wonderful Temple, and was so impressed with it I then and there asked for some mite-boxes, and promised I'd do what I could towards filling or having them filled. Some months later at our executive committee meeting I told them what I had undertaken, and they were so enthused they thought we should pledge $100 and have our county's name inscribed on a tablet. More than a year has passed, and the enclosed is about all we have raised so far, yet I am not discouraged, and you may give us credit for this amount."

Mrs. Evalyn N. Graham, Newark, O., sends $1 for Mrs. Woodbridge's memorial. She writes: "I loved Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge dearly. She has been a great inspiration to me during my seven years' work in the W. C. T. U., and I wish to contribute to a tablet in her memory."

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money order and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1113, The Temple, Chicago.

"MICHIGAN, MY MICHIGAN."

(In Memory of Mary T. Lathrap.)

BY MARY BYNON REESE.

Thy favored soil with treasure teems,
From out thy heart flows wealth untold,
The winds that sweep thy guardian lakes
Waft to thy coffers shining gold.
Of greater price this jewel rare,
Whose glory thy proud fame outran,
Framed this new legend in its rays,
To "Michigan, my Michigan!"

Bend low in anguish, sore bereaved,
Pour ashes on thy kingly head,
With sackcloth gird thy stately form,
Lie prostrate by the sainted dead;
Not for the life that none could save,
But for the boon she wrought to win
Denied by thee—to break the bond
That leagued the state with licensed sin.

Lift up! lift up, oh, comrades, true!
Sharers with her in toil and care,
Lift up until you reach her goal,
The topmost heights of answered prayer.
Henceforward may your slogan be "The cross she lifted in the van,
Shall swiftly change to Freedom's Crown,
For Michigan, my Michigan."

Fair Michigan, our Michigan,
The world claims heritage with thee,
White ribbon hosts in every land
Thank God for her on bended knee;
And pilgrim feet and loving thought
Will journey where her ashes rest,
To wreathe with Love's white Immortelles
Our peerless genius of the West.

WHAT TOBACCO WILL DO FOR A BOY.

BY MABEL GIFFORD.

"What do you mean to make of him?" asked the lady visitor.

The beautiful young mother smiled a fond mother's smile and caressed the golden curls of her four-year-old son. "A good man, I hope," was the answer, and the fair little face looked up into the mother's eyes quite seriously and then turned toward the lady visitor. "Me must be bery dood, 'tause mamma's dot only one of me."

The lady visitor went away thinking what a good beginning that young mother was making. Her home was in the far West. It would be years before she would see mother and child again, and she pictured in her mind the noble young man the child would grow to be.

The mother did try to make a good man of her boy, and she began by trying to make a good boy of him.

"Pitty fire; me do it," little Franklin often said, puckering his baby lips in proud imitation of his father while he watched him smoking his cigar.

His father shook his head and said: "No, no, it's not good for little boys," and the pretty mother laughed, it was so cunning of Franklin.

Oh, the passing years, they sped by so quickly! Such a very short time it seemed when Baby Franklin stepped out of kilts and began to go to school with his book and slate. Such a brave, bright little man, and he learned so fast! His was a sturdy little soul in a stout little body.

One day Franklin came home weak and pale and alarmed his mother. She ran over the list of children's diseases, for Franklin certainly was "coming down" with something.

"What is it, dear? How do you feel?" she questioned as she hastened to him. She stopped abruptly as she stooped to kiss his lips, and her own cheeks grew white. She had smelled tobacco on his breath and about his clothing. He reluctantly confessed that a boy had given him a cigarette and had told him that smoking was "great fun after that you got used to it." They had gone behind a shed and smoked, and the boy had said Franklin must not tell his mother, "Cranky mothers always spoil a feller's fun."

"Don't you ever smoke another cigarette," said his mother, "and don't you ever do a thing that a boy tells you must be kept a secret from your mother."

"Papa smokes," said Franklin. "I want to do like papa."

'But he's a man; tobacco isn't good for little boys."

Franklin's father came home that night quite out of temper. "Those temperance folks are always stirring up some sort of a breeze," he said knitting his brows and looking over Franklin's head; "if it isn't one thing it is another."

The mother looked across the table, with a sympathetic face. "And what is it now?" Franklin was busy with his supper and seemed absorbed with his glass of milk. His afternoon adventure was still fresh in his mind.

"Oh, it's tobacco this time. I have been interviewed this afternoon by two of them."

Mrs. Melvin looked at her husband thoughtfully. "How disagreeable, dear," she said at length; "did they tell you that you ought to save the amount that you spend for cigars and send it to the home for inebriates or the heathen?"

"No, they gave me some 'scientific temperance instruction'; told me that tobacco was undermining my constitution; that it began with my grandfather and increased with every generation."

"What's 'generation'?" inquired Franklin suddenly.

"Well," answered his father, "I am one and you are another. Now (turning to his wife)look at our boy, where will you find a boy as robust as Franklin? He has outstripped all his classmates. Tobacco does not seem to affect his brain or body."

Franklin recalling the condition of his brain and body that afternoon, colored and shrank back.

Mrs. Melvin still looked thoughtful. "Grandpa Melvin had a wonderful constitution, but you are not as strong as he was, and Franklin is less robust than you."

"That is a natural result," answered Mr. Melvin a little impatiently, "children inherit from both sides of the family, you know. If I had any ailment these temperance cranks would say tobacco caused it."

Mrs. Melvin's face lightened. She had great faith in her husband's knowledge of things in general and in particular.

PRACTICAL BENEVOLENCE.

BY ULRIKA FELDTMAN BRUUN.

The Christian religion is a religion of benevolence and mercy. The Lord Himself laid the foundation when He gave Himself to save a fallen race from the curse of sin and death, and on this foundation every Christian must build. The closer a person walks with God the more abundant fruits of benevolence will spring up in his own life. He who has the love of God in his soul feels like having mercy on every poor, sin-bewildered wanderer whom he meets on his way. Generally, however, those who are rich in love and sympathy are poor in purse, and can only help on a small scale. It therefore becomes all the more important to help the right persons and in a practical way.

"The poor are always with you," appealing to your sympathy and asking for your aid. They are innumerable, and can be divided into several classes, but there is especially one class who are in need of combined efforts from friends of truth and mercy. This class is the homeless poor, who are without work, food, money or friends: who go shivering in the cold without mittens and overcoats, in torn shoes and stockings, and who come to our homes and offices, asking for work or money, for food and lodging. It is these people who are most in the power of the tempter, and who, recruiting the army of criminals, become a menace and a burden to society if they are not rescued in time. It thus becomes a great responsibility how to deal with these unfortunates.

It is of course true that those who beg the most are least worthy of help. A bold beggar is sure to have more money than the benevolent soul who deprives herself of her necessaries to give him, while an honest person will often suffer both hunger and cold without asking for aid. It is also certain that the greatest number of those who are reduced to extreme destitution are drunkards, who in spite of all the money they can beg or steal will die in the poor-house if they don't end their life in the prison or on the gallows. If benevolent people only were sure that all who ask for help belonged to this class they might well close their hearts and pocket-books for them; but unfortunately we are not able to search the hearts. It might be that among those many unworthy ones there is a young man who is a stranger unable to obtain employment, who has probably searched all over the city for months seeking for work. He has pawned everything he can spare to keep up life; but now the last article is gone. He is hungry and tired and cold. He looks through the windows of some nice residence, sees the brilliantly lighted rooms and the fire burning brightly on the hearth, hears the glad laughter of happy children and the enchanting music from the piano. He thinks of his mother and sisters and his childhood's happy days; tears gather in his eyes; his heart is almost bursting. Then he says to himself, "I must try once more for mother's sake; she would feel so badly if I should die." So he goes softly and knocks at the door asking again for work or bread. Suppose he is sent away with an angry look and the door shut in his face. What would be the consequences? The poor fellow might end his life in despair or enter upon a career of crime and vice.

Such people ought to be helped; woe unto us if we do not help them! "He shall have judgment without mercy who showeth no mercy." But here comes the question, how shall we know the right persons to help and the right way?

One thing is sure, that the honest poor are more grateful for work than for any other gift you may bestow on them. There ought to be some way of providing such people with work so they could earn enough to pay for their food and lodgings until they could obtain permanent employment. The W. C. T. U. who are doing such grand work for the destitute and fallen, and who are constantly burdened with care on account of their inability to provide for the needy who come to their different missions, ought to have a wood yard, a temperance lodging house and a five cent lunch room, where poor people could get food when they had a nickel. Then they would not be compelled to eat the saloon-keeper's lunch and be ruined by drink and corrupt associates. This would be real help, for it would be helping people to help themselves. All assistance given for nothing serves to degrade the needy and robs them of their self-respect, breeding idleness and crime. An establishment such as outlined above would not only save innumerable honest persons from entering the path of vice and degradation, but would also help in reclaiming those already fallen. There are, as we know, thousands in this city whose lives are an unbroken chain of sin and wretchedness. This is the fruit of our seven thousand saloons: Drinking, begging, stealing and drinking again; tramp, tramp, tramp, from the saloon to the police station, sometimes to the jail; then out and to the saloon again.

Such a man comes in to our gospel meetings, is moved by the singing, prayers and exhortations, asks for prayer, signs the pledge and desires to live a Christian life. He has neither home nor money. What will you do with him when the meeting is over? Turn him out in the street on a cold winter night and leave him to his fate? If you give him money the evil spirit may take possession of him again, and lead him into the next saloon. God says, "Love your neighbor as yourself," and "Be given to hospitality." What can you do with him? You cannot take him among your home circle, for he is probably "a thousand strong." If you are a warm-hearted Christian, you will give a ticket for a lodging-house, or go with him and pay for his bed; but then you lead him right into temptation again. In many of these lodging-houses they are drinking and cursing all day long, and it is both cruel and foolish to take a person who is struggling to break away from the habit of intemperance to such dens, where all the outcasts of humanity are huddled together. Still we have to do it, because there are no lodging-houses in connection with our churches and missions.

It is to be hoped Christians will begin to do some practical work of this kind. It will be a great power in rescuing the fallen and helping to make the paths plain for stumbling feet. Think of these helpless, hopeless souls set free from the chains of sin, and made happy spirits with God forever! May it be our greatest ambition to practice benevolence for Christ's sake, such benevolence as will undertake to supply the needs of both soul and body, and reach far beyond the borders of time into the endless eternity.

THE HARM OF DRINKING.

[Following are extracts from a paper on the above topic by Ding Ai Ngük, matron of the Foochow Girls' Boarding School. It is a witness to two truths: (1) The oneness, if we may so speak, of the gospel of temperance wherever it be preached. (2) The oneness of testimony to the evil wrought by the serpent whose trail covers the wide earth.]

Shall we who have been called from darkness into the light, still cling to the things of darkness?

Those who are in the power of rum, cannot see its harm.

Those who think a little drink does no harm, have never investigated the effects of rum-drinking.

The best way to stop drinking is for the government to prohibit.

Chinese people drink rum and when it has ruined their bodies, they say the evil spirits have made them sick.

Some food cannot be eaten if left over night, but intoxicating drink is the product of food left long enough to ferment.

When satan would have you commit some sin, he first makes you drunk.

Our duty as Christian women is to keep strong drink from our children, teach them the harm of drinking, and prevent others from tempting them to drink.

FAN.

BY J. L. HARBOUR.

A slender girl of about fifteen years, with jet-black eyes of remarkable brightness and a tangled mass of shining black hair falling over her brow from beneath the torn brim of a ragged straw hat, stood at my mother's door one morning in November, and asked:

"Can you just lend me a cup of coffee and a cup of sugar and flour enough for a bakin' of bread? I'll pay it all back when I can."

My mother had never seen the girl before. She was untidy in her dress; her shoes were not mates, and they were buttonless and full of holes.

"What is your name?" my mother asked.

"Fan."

"And your other name?"

"Tracy."

"Where do you live?"

"Oh, just a little ways down the road, the first house from here. I believe they call it the old Peters' place."

We knew the place very well. No one had lived there for years. The house, which was in the woods a short distance from the river, had been shabby in its best days, and now was little better than a hovel. Scarcely a pane of glass was whole, and such of the doors as remained were off their hinges. The floors were sunken, and the plaster was falling from the walls. The house was unfit for human habitation.

The girl's appearance seemed to indicate that the new family was in harmony with the condition of the house.

"Do your parents live there?" my mother asked.

"I ain't got but one parent—my dad. We just come here three days ago, and dad was told he could live in the old Peters' house rent free, and if he can get work we'll settle here."

"How many are there of you?"

"Just dad and me and my little brother Carey; he's only six, and little for his age."

My mother gave the girl the articles for which she asked, whereupon she said, with a sudden outburst:

"I'll tell you, honest now, that mebbe I sha'n't be able to pay you back these things. Dad ain't got work yet, and mebbe he won't get anything to do; but if he does and if I can, I'll pay you back."

We did not see the girl again for a week, but in that time we learned a little more about the Tracy family.

Mrs. Hornby came over to our house one afternoon to "set awhile." Mrs. Hornby was an elderly person of so much leisure that she spent most of her time in "setting awhile" in the homes of her neighbors; but she had so much gossip to relate that she was not, as a rule, unwelcome.

"You've heard about a man named Tracy and his two children moving into the old Peters' place, haven't you, Mis' Harley?" asked Mrs. Hornby.

"Yes," replied my mother. "The girl has been up here to borrow some things."

"Oh, I reckon so! I guess they live mostly on what they can 'borrow.' They'd better call it begging, and be done with it. Have they paid you back?"

"No; but the girl was honest enough to tell me she couldn't pay me back if her father did not get work here."

"Work!" ejaculated Mrs. Hornby, contemptuously. "I guess that all the work that Tracy fellow does won't hurt him much nor do his family any good. He spends most of his time down to Jim Fifer's saloon near the ferry. My! I'd lead the way and carry an axe if the women of this neighborhood would go down there some night and tear down that saloon to the ground!"

"Then the Tracy's are so poor because their father is a drinking man?"

"Yes; and you may well say poor. I was going by the old Peters' place yesterday, and I just thought I'd step in and see how the children were getting along in that old shell."

"Have they made the old place at all habitable?"

"Well, the man has exerted himself enough to hang a door or two and patch the floor up some. They don't use but two rooms, and all but one window in them are boarded up. They've got a rusty old cook-stove, one or two old chairs, a battered and patched-up old bedstead, a little pine table and an old red cupboard, and that's ev'ry stick of furniture they have, excepting what that girl, Fan, has made out of some old boxes. She's a terror, that Fan is!"

"One must allow a good deal for her surroundings and the influence she has probably been under all her life," said my mother.

"Well, she needn't be so saucy, anyhow. She just as good as told me that she didn't thank me for coming around, and I going there with the kindest motives! And when I asked her if she didn't have a broom to keep the place clean with she had the impudence to ask me if I couldn't lend her mine, as I probably had no use for it, or I wouldn't have so much time to attend to other folks' dooryards—the saucy thing!"

"Did you see the little boy?"

"Yes, and he had better manners. He sat back in a corner on a box and kept as quiet as a mouse. He's a pale, sickly-looking little fellow, and he walks a little lame. I've seen him out in the timber picking up sticks to burn. I've heard of them 'borrowing' things all over the neighborhood, but I haven't heard of their paying anything back."

However, the next day Fan came up to our house and returned the sugar she had borrowed the week before, and asked for some more flour. My mother, who was frying doughnuts, gave Fan three or four of these, in addition to the flour, to carry home to her little brother.

"Oh, I'm ever so much obliged, Mis' Harley!" Fan exclaimed, with tears in her eyes. "Carey'll be so pleased! I was trying to make up my mind to ask you for one for him, but I was ashamed. Dad don't earn scarcely anything, but he's husking corn now for a farmer, and I hope he'll have steady work for awhile."

But the next evening we heard that "Dad" had been at Jim Fifer's saloon all day, and we knew that Fan's hopes had come to naught. At ten o'clock that same evening my father, as he was preparing to go to bed, heard what seemed to him a light, timid knock on the front door.—The Youth's Companion.

THE Prince of Wales is a very hearty laugher. On one occasion his Royal Highness laughed very heartily at a Hindu school boy. The youngsters had been drilled into the propriety of saying "your Royal Highness," should the Prince speak to any of them; and when the heir-apparent accosted a bright-eyed lad, and, pointing to a prismatic compass, asked: "What is this?" the youngster, all in a flutter, replied: "Please, it's a royal compass, your prismatic Highness," on which came peal after peal of royal "laughter without any control."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I have been hearing and reading more about the reception of the Great Polyglot Petition in Washington. You will remember I told you something about it last week. How I wish every Cozy Cornerer could have been in the great Convention hall in our National Capital when the opening exercises in connection with presenting the Petition took place. Imagine the long strips of muslin festooned and entwined from the immense iron rafters all around the great hall, and after all that could be hung up was disposed of, there were piles of it left in great rolls in various convenient spots.

While the big choir was singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and "Hallelujah," the people kept coming and coming until the large hall was filled to overflowing. Of course they were all disappointed when they learned that the two great temperance leaders, Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, were kept away by illness. But the exercises were so good and there were so many fine speakers who explained about the Great Petition and what it was going to do that the people went away at the end, feeling all stirred up and ready to "down" King Alcohol at once. Then, too, it was a great thing to have seen the immense Polyglot or "Poly Pet" as some one has humorously called it.

Although some Congressmen were present on the platform at this meeting, that wasn't enough for the earnest white ribbon workers, so they kept holding meetings and talking about the Petition in the different halls and churches of the city all through Saturday, Sunday and Monday. As this was an important week in Washington on account of other great gatherings of women there at the same time, you can imagine a great many people heard about our "Poly Pet," and signed it, too!

But the most important part came on Tuesday. Miss Willard and Lady Somerset had arrived Saturday evening and helped in the later meetings. So they were ready to go with the other leaders to the White House for the purpose of presenting the Petition to the President of the United States. As the great document was so bulky they took only a certified copy with them. President Cleveland knew they were coming and was all ready for them in the Red Room of the Executive Mansion. He listened gravely to the reading of the Petition by Mrs. Hoffman and to Miss Willard's earnest speech in presenting it; then he said some kind, approving, pleasant words in response. (Don't you wish he had just up and signed it then and there? Why do you think he let such a good opportunity go by?)

After their interview with Mr. President, the white ribbon ladies had a nice visit with Mrs. President who, you will be glad to know, is a total abstainer and always turns her glass upside down!

And so our Great Petition has been seen and heard of by our Congress and Chief Executive. It has had a good "send-off" for its trip around the world, don't you think?

A PRIZE FOR COZY CORNERERS!

To the boy or girl reader of THE UNION SIGNAL Cozy Corner who sends the best essay on "WHAT I HAVE LEARNED ABOUT THE WORLD'S PETITION," I will give as a reward of merit a copy of "Our Illustrated Authors." This is a new game just published by the W. T. P. A. and is very nice for either old or young. The conditions are as follows: First, the essays must be received on or before May 1, 1895. Second, they must contain from three hundred to five hundred words. Third, they must be written on only one side of the paper.

Articles about the World's Petition are to be found on page 8 in THE UNION SIGNALS of February 21 and 28. Our next week's paper will have the speech of Miss Willard at Washington, D. C., which tells all about the World's Petition. Look out for it.

Now to work, dear Cozy Cornerers.

HOME PROTECTION.

It was truly said in the address of our president at the meeting where the Polyglot Petition was first presented in Washington, February 15, that "Home Protection is the key-word of the W. C. T. U." The philosophic reason for this is not far to seek. All the world is on the keen jump like a hunted hare for protection; every industry seeks it, every evil enterprise finds it, and most good enterprises strive for it in vain; but the bright, consummate flower of Christian civilization is the Home—it is the gospel's crowning triumph, the harbinger on earth of heaven. The chief corner-stone of the state is the hearth-stone; its protection should be "the chief concern of all good government."

Whatever tends to build over against the waste places of the home is worthy to enlist the devoted efforts of all good men and women. So far as government has put itself on the side of the home it has done this on the material plane; the property rights of the proprietor of home have been sacredly guarded, but the dual proprietorship of husband and wife has not as yet been recognized, even in this lowest range of jurisprudence; while the higher laws that should shield the home from deterioration are not yet on our statute books at all.

But the more practical Christianity that is fast forging its way to the front in everyday affairs perceives that the most sacred interests of the home are those grounded in the moral and spiritual nature of those who dwell there—hence the hand-to-hand encounter between the liquor traffic and universal womanhood, while universal manhood indorses, aids and abets, and will ere long, as we believe, fit woman out with peaceful weapons in this sacred war.

Now the words, "Home Protection," exactly express the present situation. They are educational in the highest sense, and, if employed as the name of a rising party of righteousness, would do more to educate our people away from the thought that "protection" relates to the tariff than any other single stroke could do, for we have always believed that the true tariff of the nation would be one that protected the home while those "of the contrary part"—viz., politicians of the old régime, believe that the protection of corporations and monopolies other than that most priceless of all monopolies and corporations—the home, should have thrown around them the guarantees and safeguards of the state.

The white ribbon women have from the first believed that the phrase, "Home Protection," had in it "a spell to conjure by." We have set forth this fact in sermon and song, platform and plea and prayer. We urge it once again, and we shall never cease to bring it before our brothers and sisters of the larger hope,—that whether they will bear or forbear, we shall at least have delivered our soul, and we call upon good women everywhere to write articles for the press and private letters to leaders showing that they hold the same belief we have here frankly expressed and which they have so long and sacredly cherished. If the white ribbon papers throughout the nation and the women of thought and influence would use these two levers of power (the press and the postoffice box,) they could revive and increase the sentiment in favor of this name, and we urge them so to do, to the best of their ability. And may God defend the right.

A TEMPERANCE "OUTLOOK."

Under title "A Temperance Program," the Outlook offers for the consideration of its readers, a plan for the regulation of the liquor traffic which it hopes will form the "basis for a discussion which may lead at last to some agreement among all temperance workers." It would seem necessary at the outset of such discussion to agree upon a definition of "temperance," for there evidently exists among reformers a difference of opinion concerning the idea of which that word is the expression. The W. C. T. U., for instance—and it will be admitted that this organization forms no insignificant part of temperance forces—would define temperance work as effort for the abolition of the drink traffic, root and branch. The Outlook apparently regards as temperance work any movement for its regulation; in other words, its idea of temperance is compromise with, rather than destruction of, the evil.

Part of the Outlook's program is the abolishment of the present license system as an acknowledged failure, and the substitution therefor of a tax levied on the real estate owners of places where liquor is sold. The present system, it says, is open to the criticism that "it appears to a portion of the community to give public approval to the liquor traffic." We fail to see how the transference of the tax from the liquor seller to the land owner would be any the less a sign of public approval.

It is further suggested that no one be permitted to open a saloon without permission from the owners of property in the immediate vicinity. That is, if a man can secure the consent of a few other men he is free to engage in a business so detrimental to the public welfare as to make even an appearance of "public approval" undesirable.

The program includes the customary restrictions with regard to hours of closing, selling to minors and habitual drunkards, etc. In fact, it is a program which will doubtless find immense favor among the liquor-sellers. It presents a line of "temperance" work which will commend itself to "compromisers" everywhere, and so far falls in beautifully with that kind of "temperance" of which the Champion, Wine and Spirit Gazette, et al, proclaim themselves enthusiastic adherents.

The local option part of the program won't seriously disturb the liquor men so long as that means man option. Real local option "given to every community" would doubtless cause them some uneasiness.

While the platform offered by the Outlook for discussion and amendment may be "temperance" from the standpoint of those who regard the drink evil as "necessary," it is not our idea of Christian temperance. Not so do we understand gospel teachings concerning our duty to God and to our neighbor. We suggest—seeing that suggestions are solicited—that the word "Christian" be used in the title to qualify the word "temperance." This amendment adopted, a sense of fitness and Christian consistency will reveal the advisability of further revisions of the program.

AGGRESSIVE CHRISTIANITY.

It is not often in these latter days—these days of reform and aggressive Christianity—that the W. C. T. U. receives aught but encouragement and commendation by word and deed from the churches. Time was, indeed, when the church looked askance at the white ribbon movement and regarded with marked disfavor the methods of its leaders in the attainment of its avowed object, Christian Temperance. But as it began to apprehend more fully its aims and purposes, and to recognize the power which gave it being and the spirit which animates it, the church came at last to see in our organization a valuable ally. It saw in this concerted action of Christian womanhood against the destroyer of home the result of those teachings it was itself zealously promulgating. In fact, it recognized in the W. C. T. U. its own legitimate, if somewhat precocious, offspring.

It appears, however, that there are here and there to-day leaders in the Christian church who refuse to admit that W. C. T. U. effort is inspired by the true gospel spirit. "I cannot feel that your methods are in harmony with the kingdom of God," writes the pastor of an evangelical church in one of our western cities. Taking it for granted that this student and expounder of gospel doctrine has a true conception of the kingdom of God, it will naturally occur to the consecrated workers of our organization that he cannot possess a very clear idea of the calling and election of the W. C. T. U. A zealous white ribbon friend has for some months provided him with THE UNION SIGNAL, but his evident lack of knowledge concerning our "methods" leads us to believe that he has not read it very carefully.

From his letter one would gather the impression that the W. C. T. U. adhered to and was promulgating the idea of force in the establishment of Christ's kingdom, and that the batteries of the white ribbon host were all directed against the liquor seller. For his criticism—offered in a kindly if prejudiced spirit—is based upon the words of the Master, "If my kingdom were of this world then would my servants fight," and "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Now if our friend will take the trouble to inform himself concerning the written and spoken utterances of the W. C. T. U. he will find that it holds decidedly radical views on the peace question. He will find that it takes even more advanced ground along this line than the churches themselves; that it deprecates even the suggestion of that kind of warfare which is symbolized by the sword and the gun in the hands of impressible youth; and that in National and state conventions it is voicing its sentiments on the popular movement of the churches known as Boys' Brigades, with no uncertain sound.

True, we believe that force is necessary in overcoming the many forms of evil which surround us, but it is a force which comes through concord, not strife; through coöperation, not competition. Our ministerial friend seems to have rather confused ideas about force. "Love," he says, "and not force (i. e., the ballot) will save the world from the fearful curse of liquor drinking." Now white-ribboners know, if Rev. Mr. —— does not, that Love is force; that it is the supreme force of the universe—"the greatest thing in the world." It was Love which twenty-one years ago called into existence the W. C. T. U.; it is Love which inspires all its efforts and dictates all its policy to-day. The white-ribbon movement is a manifestation of the divine mother Spirit working in and through Christian womanhood.

"God fulfills Himself in many ways." Love works in many directions, uses many weapons, and the ballot is in these times one of the most potent agencies for the advancement of the kingdom of heaven upon earth. It is a weapon which in the hands of the masses of women would be used not to destroy life but to save it, not to stir up strife but to promote peace. While the ballot can not be called exactly a spiritual weapon, still it is a much less carnal weapon than the sword. And as once, in the more primitive stages of human existence, the sword was the symbol of progress, so in this more advanced, but still transitional era, the ballot is the lever which moves the world. In the age of brute force, the sword; in the age of brain force (where the equality of the sexes is recognized), the ballot.

We can conceive of a day—and believe it is coming—when the warfare between good and evil shall be carried on and fought to a finish upon a still higher and more peaceful plane; when the weapons shall be altogether spiritual—but that millennial day is not yet. Like many truly good people who fail to interpret rightly the signs of the times, our friend's chief grievance against W. C. T. U. women seems to be that they want the ballot.

The methods that "resist not evil" are in his opinion the only methods that are "in harmony with the kingdom of God." It is pertinent to inquire in this connection, What then do the churches stand for if not for the resistance of evil? In the light of the Apocalyptic messages to the seven churches, and in view of the fact that it was the Founder of Christianity Himself who gave to the Golden Rule its affirmative form, we can hardly apply to the doctrine of non-resistance the interpretation indicated by our reverend critic. By the "Do good" of Christ and not the "Do not evil" of Confucius and Buddha—by the positive and not the negative form of the Golden Rule—is the policy of the W. C. T. U. formulated. We would call the attention of this minister of the gospel, and of all who think as he does, to our "Declaration of Principles" recently outlined by the general officers of the National W. C. T. U. as the "latest and most authentic statement of our raison d' être," and reading as follows:

We believe in the coming of His kingdom "whose service is perfect freedom" because "His laws, written in our members," as well as in nature and grace, "are perfect, converting the soul."

We believe in the gospel of the Golden Rule, and that each man's habits of life should be an example safe and beneficent for every other man.

We believe that God created both man and woman "in His own image," and, therefore, we believe in one standard of purity for men and women, and in the equal right of each to hold opinions and to express the same in the home, on the platform, in the pulpit and at the ballot-box.

We believe in a living wage; in an eight-hour day; in courts of conciliation and arbitration; in justice as opposed to greed of gain; in "peace on earth and good will to men."

We therefore formulate, and for ourselves adopt, the following pledge, asking our sisters and brothers of a common danger and a common hope to make common cause with us, in working its reasonable and helpful precepts into the practice of every-day life.

PLEDGE.

"I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquors, including wine, beer and cider, as a beverage, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same."

To confirm and enforce the rationale of this pledge, we declare our purpose to educate the young; to form a better public sentiment; to reform, so far as possible, by religious, ethical and scientific means the drinking classes; to seek the transforming power of divine grace for ourselves and all for whom we work, that they and we may willfully transcend no law of pure and wholesome living; and finally we pledge ourselves to labor and pray that all these principles, founded upon the Gospel of Christ, may be worked out into the customs of society and the laws of the land.

Another serious misapprehension our friend is laboring under, and that is regarding the attitude of the W. C. T. U. toward the liquor-seller. "The saloon-keeper," he says, "must not be driven to hatred and desperation. Jesus was a friend of sinners." Those who know anything at all about the practical work of our organization know that it is the liquor traffic and not the liquor seller against which all the forces of its forty-three different departments are combined. It is the sin not the sinner that is the point of attack. We do not hold the saloon-keeper alone as responsible for the "curse of liquor drinking." As we have declared again and again in these columns, the saloon-keeper constitutes only a very small part of the drunkard making power. It is the American voter to whom attaches the guilt. It is a humiliating thought for the churches that Christian voters—men who pray one way and vote another (or men who don't vote at all), men who support political parties which make it possible for any man to be a "saloon-keeper"—are the pillars upon which the liquor traffic is built up and sustained.

Yes, "the saloon-keeper imperatively needs the love of Jesus to save him." Then let every minister of the gospel, every Christian voter "fight" the liquor traffic with that nineteenth century "sword of the Lord and of Gideon," the ballot, and thus aid in saving both liquor-seller and liquor drinker.

WOMEN IN ECCLESIASTICAL SYNODS.

Our friends in Great Britain have taken a step forward in their long, but sure, progress concerning the woman question. That gallant knight of the new chivalry, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, was chairman of the committee to consider, in all its bearings, the question of the election of women representatives to the conference, and that committee resolved by a decisive majority to report that, "In view of the great services which women render to Methodism, the increasing activity of women in all spheres of life, and the fact that women are already eligible for every other lay office in our church, it is recommended that after due process of legislation the conference should permit the election of a woman representative to the conference when in the judgment of any district synod such an election would serve the best interests of the work of God."

It will be remembered that Miss Dawson, a devoted and capable Methodist lady, was elected as a delegate to the last conference, was allowed to take her seat and modestly discharged her duties; but the whole question was then referred to the committee whose report we have given.

The arguments of the minority who still oppose the rights of women in the church are similar in England to those advanced in this country. One minister said that "In the present day women wear men's clothes, ride bicycles and smoke cigarettes." Another informed the committee that if women were admitted to the conference "they would insist on being admitted to the highest circle and even occupying the president's chair." Another said that women are "physiologically incapable of taking part in the legislative assembly." It seems he made a distinction between an administrative and a legislative part—for some reason best known to himself. It was a droll difficulty to be brought forward by one who has throughout his lifetime been a meek and declared "subject" of her majesty, the Queen. It was well said by our champions on the committee that "the burden of proof rests upon those who would keep women out." They are already by universal consent admirable members of every other department of the Methodist church. Every other door is open to them, why keep this one shut?

It is late in the day for the church founded by Susannah Wesley's son, John, and set to music by her son, Charles, to slam the parlor door in the face of the women whose services in the kitchen department it has enjoyed so long. We are persuaded better things of our brothers, and fully expect that both in England and America they will soon be singing in hearty Methodistic chorus to the women who have been their chief helpers from the beginning:

"Come on, my partners in distress—
My comrades through this wilderness."

And that "Come on" will mean, Come wherever I go; let us clasp hands and move forward in a true companionship along the pleasant pathways of our heavenly Father's kingdom upon earth.

TO OUR READERS.

Two of our enterprises lie with especial weight on my heart. One is the effort to enlist our colored women in the work of the white ribbon; the other to establish a fund for the free distribution of our literature. Musing upon these objects a plan has come to me that I will outline here. Some time ago a phonograph was presented me by our journal's English guest, Mrs. Muff, ex-mayoress of Bradford, whom many will remember as one of the fraternal delegates to our National W. C. T. U. Convention in 1893. It is after the latest improved design, and we have been greatly interested in its manifestations. It reproduces a two-minute speech from Lady Henry Somerset with such accuracy of intonation as to be almost startling. Now I propose to place this phonograph "on view" at National Headquarters in Chicago, in charge of the office secretary. I shall secure on cylinders brief speeches from leading speakers, to be hereafter announced, and for ten cents any one can hear not only their voices, but their actual breath, and should they chance to smile it would become audible through the necromancy of the phonograph. In the course of a year we have an army of visitors, and the aggregate of the small fees paid by them to hear these speeches at a dime each will amount to no inconsiderable sum. I propose to name the fund thus started for the colored work the Mary Lathrap Fund, in memory of that great heart who has so recently gone out from us, and who was so loyal to the colored work that I have heard her many a time mention with pride the fact that Mrs. Thurman, its National superintendent, and as a matter of course, a colored woman, was president of the District W. C. T. U. in which the city of Jackson, Mrs. Lathrap's home, is situated. The fund for the distribution of free literature we will name for Mary Woodbridge, whose untiring pen helped to scatter our white ribbon ideas so fast and so far. Our National treasurer will be the custodian of both these funds, and friends who wish to build them up by little and little are invited to send a dime to either or to both. Our general officers heartily approve this plan, which would not be put before you unless it had been declared acceptable by them and by the respective families whom we thus propose to honor and to keep in perpetual prominence and remembrance by means of these two funds, which, beginning in a small way will grow little by little until they become strong arms of the National W. C. T. U.

Frances E. Willard.

The Neal Dow Home Protection Party is a growing body of citizens who are standing enemies of the saloon. It is a movement to which Gen. Neal Dow and Miss Willard give indorsement. A plain card, bearing in one corner the pictured face of Prohibition's hero, gives the pledge of the Home Protection Party: "Realizing that the greatest curse in our nation is the liquor traffic and the evils which flow from it, I hereby solemnly pledge myself to totally abstain from the use of all intoxicants as a beverage, and aid in the work of rescuing the perishing. I will never, knowingly, vote for any candidate or political party that upholds any system of tax or license laws which legalize and perpetuate the traffic. 'The saloon must go,' and I will work to make it go." On the reverse side are seven mottoes of the "army." This is but one more of the many means employed to strengthen the anti-saloon forces. May it speed on successfully! The cards may be obtained from Mr. John Danner, Canton, O.

The wife of the victorious general of the Japanese army is a graduate of Wellesley College. The Chinese who drown their female children in ponds, have not the character that fits them to cope with the more chivalric Japanese who are bringing their women forward with themselves into the new civilization.

One of the leading English religious papers has the following in a recent number: "Excessive tea-drinking is said to be on the increase in America. Of the patients applying in one week at a dispensary in Brooklyn, ten per cent were said to be tea drunkards." Now where did our English contemporary imbibe the erroneous idea that Americans were so basely perverting the national beverage of England?

This exquisite verse is dedicated to Hannah Torrens aged ninety-eight, mother of Mary T. Lathrap, by Eva M. Perrine, of Jackson, Mich.

"There's a great soul still abiding,
Every storm and wave outriding,
Soon to pass beyond our vision.
From the Strife Land
To the Life Land,
To her God, her home, her heaven."

On Duty passes along a bit of information which seems most timely just now: "Ice is a specific for sea-sickness taken with milk and bread, so a captain on a Hong Kong steamer told me in China twenty-six years ago. Soon after I had occasion to prove the worth of the simple remedy in my own experience and in that of many fellow passengers on the steamship Great Republic and others. I am surprised that I have never seen nor heard mention of so valuable a remedy since, and I take pleasure in writing it out for the benefit of the W. W. C. T. U. ladies who soon expect to cross the ocean."

Commend me to the wisdom of the supreme bench of New Jersey! It has "handed down" (?) a decision concerning woman's right to vote under the new school law of the state, and the owl-like brethren declare that "females have a right to vote at school elections on all questions except the election of officers." If wisdom is justified of her children these New Jersey judges must have made Minerva mourn and Hercules rejoice.

When Lady Henry Somerset first came to America she gave her white ribbon to the head waiter in a fashionable hotel. He was a fine looking colored man of high character, but not a teetotaller. Three years later he told a prominent literary lady that at first he carefully put away "Her Ladyship's" piece of ribbon, thinking he could never wear it. He said there were so many temptations in a place such as he occupied, that he often got very tired and a little stimulant would "set him up"; "but," he added, "for nearly three years now I have worn the ribbon and tried to act up to its principles." How much good may come of a little action soon forgotten if it has in it the seeds of a higher life!

An impressive tableau which might be utilized by some of our white ribbon entertainers is that suggested by the piquant picture published in the Washington Post in connection with its excellent account of the great World's Petition meetings. The illustration semi-humorously represented the Great Polyglot on its journey around the world and its arrival at the capital of the United States. The immense roll, labeled "The Great Polyglot Petition. It's a good thing. Push it along," has been propelled up the curved surface of the globe by a great company of women behind it, headed by Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, carrying banners. A significant placard fastened in the earth by a gigantic hairpin says, "This is all we want." The women are met by a long official delegation of which Uncle Sam, Columbia and President Cleveland are the head. From the apex of the Capitol, in the background, a woman's figure holds out a copy of the temperance pledge. The Senate restaurant is labeled "closed," and Bacchus, with his wine cup, is fleeing in the distance.

On Duty.

SOUTH AUSTRALIAN NOTES.

White-ribboners in this colony were much grieved upon receiving the news that another prominent worker in America had been selected for "preferment to the skies." We are sure that in the death of Mrs. Woodbridge this organization has had a sharp and painful reminder that God removes His servants without reference to human judgment as to time or place. Yet while we mourn our loss, knowing how well qualified our devoted comrade was for the special work it was hers to do, shall we not comfort ourselves with the sweet thought that God never takes away His children a moment too soon. And it was not until Elijah was in the act of departure that his mantle fell upon Elisha. While our sister lived none could do her work; now she is "lifted away," He has some other ready to take her place. Our most loving sympathy goes out to our bereft sisters across the deep.

The W. C. T. U. of South Australia, unitedly with the South Australian Alliance, held a white-ribbon fair in November last. Friends in both town and country were generous in sending along seasonable and suitable goods and produce, and the fair has been pronounced very successful; the funds were much needed in both societies.

By far the most lively topic among us at present is the passing of the adult suffrage bill. White-ribboners, together with the Suffrage League—of which Mrs. Mary Lee is the hard-working secretary—have done their part in bringing about this desirable reform, and what in my last report was only a vague hope in most minds, has now become a matter of fact. South Australian women are enfranchised. The bill gives the franchise to all women on the same terms as to men, no barrier being made to prevent women from becoming parliamentary representatives.

A government bill was first introduced, giving all women the right to vote on the same terms as men for both Houses of Legislature, but containing a clause to prevent women acting as representatives in either House. It was first introduced into the Upper House (the Legislative Council) and was there carried by the necessary majority of two-thirds of the whole House, which is the majority required for any bill amending the constitution, but was carried with the amendment that "women shall be free to sit as representatives." Government accepted the amendment, and the bill was introduced, as thus amended, into the Lower House (or House of Assembly), where the second reading was carried, December 11, after an exciting debate, by a majority of twenty-eight votes—the exact number required.

During this anxious time many prayers went up to God from the hearts of our women. "Pray, pray about it," was our president's urgent counsel. We knew that if our legislators were true to their pledges the measure would pass. The bill was then taken into committee, and attempts made to load it with a number of amendments, only one of these, however, being carried, "that women living more than three miles from the polling place, or who certify that they will be physically unable to attend on polling day may avail themselves of the Absent Voter's Act, and vote through the postoffice." The debate on the bill itself was prolonged an hour that night and another hour next morning; when the third reading was carried amidst cheers on December 18 by a majority of thirty-one votes against fourteen, being a majority of seventeen, three votes more than the necessary constitutional majority. Owing to the amendment the bill had to be returned to the upper house, which was done the same afternoon, where after a discussion of an hour and a half, eagerly listened to by leaders of the suffrage movement, the amendment was approved by a sufficient majority, and late that night the announcement of its approval was made to the House of Assembly, where it was enthusiastically received "with loud cheers"; and the bill now only awaits the royal assent.

Miss Spencer returned to the Colony very opportunely, and a meeting was held in her honor on the evening of the 17th, when the suffrage question was discussed, and after which the enthusiastic supporters of the bill crowded the galleries as they had never been crowded before, till even standing room was at a premium.

Congratulations many and warm have been received by our union from temperance and suffrage leaders in all the Colonies. And now our work is before us, there being a vast amount of indifference and ignorance to overcome before women, as a whole, will know what to do with their newly acquired power. The passing of the bill has come like a flash to some of our own women in remote districts; but they are eager for counsel and asking for direction. May we all have grace to use our vote as a part of our "consecrated powers" in His name.

The South Australian Colonial Executive quarterly meeting, held December 20, passed a resolution of thanks which has been sent to all members of both Houses who voted for the bill. To this the Premier, the Hon. C. C. Kingston, has sent a very courteous reply on behalf of the ministry, saying that "they regard the passing of the Adult Suffrage bill as the greatest constitutional reform ever effected in South Australia, and are pleased to note that those who are most directly affected by it appear to regard it in the same light;" also that "no time will be lost in procuring the royal assent."

Crusade anniversary meetings were carried out with much energy. Meetings after ordinary services were held in several city and suburban churches on the Sunday evening, addressed by members, ministers and friends. "The Crusade fire burns here," says our Colonial president. I think the beautiful story of its origin is sure to do good wherever told, and the singing of that hymn and the reading of that Psalm should thrill the hearts of all godly women.

Our Colonial executive are arranging a new departure in the shape of a camp-meeting on a large scale, and with many attractive features. The scheme was approved of by last convention, and preparations are being made to insure comfort and success. It is to be held at Wool Bay, Yorke's Peninsula, about five hours steaming from Port Adelaide. The promoters have chosen Feb 8 to 18, in order to secure moonlight. There are to be marquees for meetings morning, afternoon and night; boating, bathing, fishing, rambling through forest and along beach, which I am told is a very fine one for walking upon. Meals in a vast canvas dining-room, and tent sleeping accommodations. It is hoped that a large number will avail themselves of this opportunity for a real, live outing. We are looking for a good advertisement of our union's work, as we expect many who are not yet one with us will be present at the camp. Who knows but this may develop into a South Australian Chautauqua?

The Gothenburg licensing system is beginning to occupy the minds of our reformers and legislators here, and in it we feel we have a formidable foe to prohibition, and one which will have to be fought in the near future. It is most incongruous, but nevertheless a fact, that many people, not in sympathy with the liquor interests, and professedly friends of temperance reform, are fascinated by this system, which, after all, must be illogical, or else it would surely have done what is claimed for it; but it evidently does not cover the position, and nothing but prohibition can. Why, I knew a man who was dreadfully gored, though not fatally so, by a bull—a splendid, valuable creature with a "curly pow," beautiful eyes, and a pedigree that would almost fill a page. But—the mandate went forth and that bucolic monster was shot, lest he should use his murderous horns on anybody else. Of course, that was prohibition pure and simple!

Next general elections for this colony will see our candidates having a lively time. Hitherto women have not been without influence on such occasions, but hence we are to have the power of the ballot at our command, and there will be a new factor and a quite different element to deal with. Social and moral reform on many lines is urgently needed, and we are praying to be qualified for our new power, and guided by heavenly wisdom in the use of it. The kingdom of the Blessed One is coming nearer. "Blessed are all they that do His commandments."

LETTER FROM JAPAN.

There are frequently items in papers here which I wish people at home—especially W. C. T. U. people, could see.

I send you by this mail a Japan Advertiser, containing an item about the C. D. acts in India, making the lamentable statement that "Out of 71,000 troops in India, 23,000 are regularly rendered useless from one cause alone," namely since the repeal of the C. D. act. It is quoted to prove the very opposite of what it reveals and proves to us, of course. Think of the shame of it! Twenty-three thousand loyal men doubtless, who would face the cannon's mouth, brave leaders of the brave who are controlled by a word from their commanders who cannot control their own bodies and passions, so that they are overcome and slain by them as the most bloody battle could scarcely slay and abuse them! Yet instead of learning self-control and cleansing the source of the evil, see how they try to remedy it!

The editors of the Japan Mail of Yokohama, the most reliable foreign paper in Japan and of great ability and influence, in a foot-note on a correspondent's letter recently, relative to the status of woman in Japan, makes this remark:

"Women working like beasts of burden, girls forced to marry men of the most depraved character, husbands that subject their wives to indignities, girls sold for immoral purposes—all these are abuses that can be found even in good old England, where certainly woman stands on a sufficiently high grade."

It is this last clause over which I exclaim. The editor's astonishing satisfaction with the grade of woman in any country where such things as he records are possible! And his making that, virtually, an excuse for not holding up the standard high in Japan.

One other item afloat in the papers: "The emperor and empress as well as private citizens send presents to comfort the soldiers in Korea: What do you think they send? Cigarettes, wine, beer and confectionery."

I do wish a W. C. T. U. worker could come to Japan to live and give her time to the work. We talked it over with Miss West, Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell, but they were all prevented from talking with the workers at home about it fully.

I had a visit from Mrs. Yajima, president of the Japan W C. T. U., a little while ago. She is hoping to organize a W. C. T. U. here, and I must tell you a little about her. She is a most rare woman, of great force and lovableness. She was probably the first one who overstepped some of the old customs of Japan, like shaving off the eyebrows, blacking the teeth, and doing up the hair in the old way stiffened with oil, and endured any amount of criticism and ridicule on that account. All married women and certainly all widows observed those habits; so when she let her eyebrows grow long again, and did up her hair again after having cut it short as all widows must, according to the old custom, her friends laughed saying she wanted to appear young again, and to get another husband. It was a most rigid custom and it meant no little strength of purpose on her part to be the first to break away from it, for customs—of that sort especially—mean more here in the East than they do at home.

When the constitution was promulgated and the Diet formed, it was announced that people of unsound mind, children and women could not attend and listen to the proceedings of parliament. What did she do but get one or two friends to accompany her, to the home of a high and mighty official, and ask him why he classed women with idiots and the like, why women were excluded from listening to the doings of the Diet. He thought a little and said, "Well, sure enough, why?" and the law was repealed.

It means a great deal more for a woman in Japan to have such purpose and strength than it does at home. She is struggling to found an industrial home for fallen women in Tokyo, with the W. C. T. U. headquarters.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

FRANCHISE AND THE W. C. T. U.

The women of South Australia having secured the franchise, their sisters of New South Wales as represented by the franchise department of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, met to pass congratulatory resolutions. The meeting was held in one of the upper rooms of the Temperance hall, and the audience, although small, was enthusiastic. Mrs. Nolan, Colonial president, occupied the chair.

The chairman expressed her belief that extending the franchise to women in this colony would not effect an alteration in existing moral conditions for some time, nor did she believe that the majority of women would utilize the vote. But there were a large number of women who would vote intelligently and on the side of right. There were also a number of women who would vote on the side of wrong; just as at present there were a number of men who did so. But taking it as one great, grand whole, woman's vote would be cast for righteousness, truth and purity.

Mrs. E. J. Ward moved, "that the women of New South Wales send their heartfelt congratulations to the women of South Australia upon obtaining the franchise." In the extension of the franchise to women in South Australia, she saw renewed hope for the movement in this colony. She showed how the extension of the franchise to women would prove a great power in their endeavors to right wrongs and to bring about much needed reforms. The temperance cause and the extension of the franchise to women were closely allied.

Mrs. Bowen seconded the resolution. Women, she said, were not selfish in this matter. They were thinking of their country. It was for the good of the country they wanted the franchise. They were thinking of the distress, of the sufferings of those held down by the curse of strong drink. She did not think there would be any great social reform until women had a vote.

The resolution was carried unanimously, and amid applause.

Miss Pemell moved "that the foregoing resolution be forwarded to Mrs. Nicholl without delay." Dealing with the question of federation, she showed how the W. C. T. Unions in the various colonies were closely allied, and how the interests of one were bound up in the interests of the other. With that knowledge and the knowledge that Mrs. Nicholl had worked so well in the movement, it afforded them greater pleasure to forward their congratulations. So long as we had ills, so long as women were unprotected, so long as women were employed by sweaters—so long as these and other evils existed—it was the duty of all Christian women to work for the franchise.

Mrs. Wesley Watkin seconded the resolution, which was carried with much applause.

To-day we hold a special committee meeting of the W. C. T. U. proposed Home for Inebriate Women, to decide upon ways and means to raise the £150 needed before we can commence our building. A choice allotment of ground in one of our pretty suburbs has been presented to the union by Miss Hogg; £105 have been collected, and we hope to be in a position to ask our beloved chieftain, Miss Willard, to lay the foundation-stone during her earnestly-longed-for visit to Sydney.

We are also summoned to a meeting of the New South Wales executive, when arrangements are to be made for a united prayer-meeting for the restoration to health of our beloved honorary Australasian president, Jessie Ackermann.

MASSACHUSETTS.

DR. A. J. GORDON.

Boston is lonely without Rev. A. J. Gordon. He was one of God's heroes—a stalwart in religion. Every good cause was better because of his sympathy and coöperation. He was large in a heavenly sense. You could count on him not only on the regular lines of religious work, but in phases of effort that some of God's people call "eccentric." Dr. Cullis in his great faith work, had the hearty sympathy of Dr. Gordon. He was also to be depended upon in the temperance work. All the years he has stood with Joseph Cook as he has entered unbeaten paths. Every one, and most truly the W. C. T. U., feels bereft. We cannot quite express our sympathy to the long time beloved Boston leader in our work, Mrs. A. J. Gordon.

LEGISLATIVE WORK.

The state house, Beacon Hill, Boston, with its golden dome conspicuous from sea and land, is always a center of interest, and only a little more so this winter of 1895. Reform is in the air. The spectacle is presented every week of earnest men and women, pastors and specialists in reform, wending their way thither to attend a "hearing" in behalf of some good cause. The strange thing about it is, that it is necessary. What are legislators for? Who does it belong to if not to representatives of the people to act for the highest interests of the state, the municipality, the township? And yet, year by year the procession up Beacon Hill continues and increases, pleading for the protection of the home, of girls, of children; for the outlaw of the liquor traffic; for the closing of the Sunday theatre; for municipal suffrage for women, and other interests imperative, and demanding the attention of the government of the commonwealth.

If numbers and enthusiasm and the best leadership may win, the women of Massachusetts will be empowered with the municipal ballot this year. On the day of the hearing, January 30, the elevator man was heard to say that he "had taken up from ten to twelve thousand women," a bit of almost excusable hyperbole in view of the thronging crowd. At eight o'clock they began to come, and long before ten every seat was taken—also standing room—and there was still a multitude in the corridors, hoping for a glimpse of the coveted interior, Representative Hall.

Five organizations, the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association, the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., the Independent Women Voters, the National Woman Suffrage Association and the Labor Union, besides individuals who represented themselves, were among the pleaders. These included a constituency of petitioners at least one hundred thousand, and yet, and yet, "women do not want to vote!" One remonstrant, representing two hundred and ten women, anonymous women for the most part, constituted the strength of the opposition.

The years gone by have witnessed on like occasions such pleaders as Phillips, Garrison, Curtis, Beecher and Lucy Stone, now with the immortal dead. Of that distinguished group we have still Mary Livermore, Henry Blackwell, Julia Ward Howe and a few others, and a great company of successors. The leaders in the temperance host are almost a unit on this question; doctors of divinity, of law, and college women are voicing the principle, and labor reformers lend a hand.

This year the cause was most ably and eloquently presented by Lady Henry Somerset. She never spoke better, and handled the question from the standpoint of the logician, the humanitarian, the disciple. England has made notable progress in municipal reform. The London county council has summoned women to its aid and this is given as a special reason for the improvement. The legend still adorns the walls of Oxford, "women and dogs not admitted," but there are indications that women will be taken out of this category. In America, the catalogue of her political peers has been considerably reduced.

The Massachusetts suffrage committee consists of Senators Miller, Bradford, Quinn, and Representatives Eldredge, Roe, Tolman, Foss, White, Bullock, Sheehan and Donahue. A majority of the committee are reported as in favor of the bill. It will be interesting to note how this petition is received and acted upon in our halls of state.

THE SALVATION ARMY AND THE W. C. T. U.

In the meantime Boston has been stirred by the presence of General Booth and a large contingent of the Salvation Army. Three times on Sunday the people filled Mechanics' Building, and it was truly a "Salvation Sunday." The Salvation Army and the W. C. T. U. have in common the pledge against intoxicating liquors and tobacco. In this respect "higher than the church" is the demand they make upon their members. At Mechanics' Building, at Music Hall, at Harvard College, at Joseph Cook's lecture, at Trinity church, in the Market place, or on the street, General Booth, his officers and army, won golden opinions and a great appreciation of his work. Boston's lively, wide-awake, hard-working commander, Major Brewer, has led the welcoming hosts of Boston and surrounding cities. This is the major who said at the Prohibition banquet, "The W. C. T. U. is the crusade with Divinity behind it."

Along with the municipal suffrage campaign has gone that for no-license, including resistance to the Norwegian system. The large cities have voted but the campaign is still in progress in many places. Specific temperance work has been unceasing. Watertown, for instance, has had a series of rallies. Mrs. Fessenden, Mrs. Livermore, Mrs. McLaughlin, Rev. Chas. Jefferson, John G. Woolley and others are in the field. Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Woolley especially, are valiant in opposition to the Gothenburg system of license, or indeed any system for conducting what should be abolished.

Apropos of this subject, the Scandinavians of Boston have entered a vigorous protest against the introduction of this system in Massachusetts, "because," they say, "of our knowledge of its working in our fatherland." Recently in a debate Mr. J. F. Morton brought out the strongest argument against the scheme. That "in Sweden there are 3,000,000 people under prohibition and only 900,000 under the new system so that the favorable facts from Scandinavia are really arguments in favor of prohibition."

Since my last report a large proportion of the local annual meetings throughout the state have been held. These in many instances are notable occasions and show the value and power of the local auxiliary. This year some of them, East Cambridge, Boston, Dorchester, Brockton and Jamaica Plain were privileged to have Lady Henry Somerset. Everywhere the people heard her gladly and new interest was awakened.

The state superintendents are pushing department work. Mrs. A. S. Delano, of Somerville, is one of the new superintendents and her field is that of "Systematic Giving." She believes in it, and is likely to win givers and workers. Superintendents have been secured in Barnstable and Worcester county south, and county presidents are interested. Mrs. Delano is able, through the kindness of Mrs. Pritchard, National superintendent, to furnish "Helps," greatly effective in organizing the department.

The lectures by Prof. J. H. W. Stuckenberg, on "The Social Problem," so interesting and valuable, were secured by the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. and not by the Boston union.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

MATTERS OF CURRENT INTEREST IN THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

Washington has been favored by notable gatherings of late. I would like to mention three which have taken place within two weeks all conducted wholly by women.

THE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION

lasted three days and was a grand success. The several meetings were usually held in the Metropolitan M. E. church where the pew occupied by General Grant while he was president of the United States is still pointed out. Rev. Hugh Johnson, pastor of the church, was present at all of the meetings, and at the close he dismissed the convocation with words of cheer and commendation. Several pulpits of the city were filled by our white ribbon visitors which was an uplift to our cause in the District of Columbia.

But the most important meeting was held in Convention Music Hall on the evening of February 15 when the were made. Several miles of the four columned document was unrolled to the gaze of thousands assembled to greet the unique demonstration of the World's W. C. T. U. The wide strips of muslin on which the signatures were pasted were festooned from the iron roof trusses back and forth through the immense hall then crosswise and around the sides, yet the larger part remained in rolls on the platform or coiled up in convenient places here and there among the rafters.

In spite of the disappointment caused by the absence of our leaders, Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, the meeting was

A SPLENDID SUCCESS.

The eloquent addresses of Mrs. Hoffman, Mrs. Barker, Miss Kearney and others were received with enthusiasm, while over all the white folds of the Petition seemed to speak with its million tongues, and all hearts were responsive as Mrs. Stevenson presented it in prayer before the throne of God. A few days afterward granted an audience to six of our leaders, who met him at the White House. This meeting took place after Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset had arrived. Miss Willard acted as speaker for the delegation. She gave to the President a parchment copy of the text of the Petition, and in a graceful speech of only five minutes' duration told interesting things about it, and mentioned the fact that he was the only chief magistrate that had ever said anything in favor of prohibiting the rum traffic, even in Africa. The President responded graciously. He expressed a belief that all, no matter how their ideas and methods might differ, ought in their respective spheres do what they could to advance the cause of temperance. He said that he had done what he could in the past and should continue to do so in the future under his official limitations. He referred to the mammoth Petition as the evidence of the effect of persistent work by good women for a good cause. The ladies were then invited into the red parlor to meet Mrs. Cleveland.

When the Great Petition was finally taken down and packed away in its five strong boxes and the accounts all balanced, it was found to have been a profitable affair financially also. Mrs. Wescott, our District treasurer, acted as treasurer for the convocation and Mrs. Barker as auditor. There was found to be a clear profit of $281.67. This was divided between the World's National and District unions and gave $93.87 to each. There was still another gain which is all our own—the inspiration of our sisters' presence, the uplift to the cause locally, the generous sympathy that sprang from heart to heart, and the large number of new members secured.

May choicest blessings ever follow thee, dear "Poly Pet."

ALABAMA.

IN LEGISLATIVE HALLS.

Will some one kindly inform us what is the Indian word for "Here we are restless"? Alabama has been resting long enough. We want to "stir about" a little bit. It has been suggested that we have imbibed a feeling of lazy content from the name. If that be true something should be done about it.

However that may be, the W. C. T. U. motto should be "Hear us Agitate." The sentiment and interest we have been feeling must materialize into something practical, into activity! It is true that reforms are of necessity of slow process, but we may hasten them by helping to educate.

Alabama has for ten or twelve years had a few women enlisted in this battle against sin but we are confident that they never felt the need of work so keenly as they now feel it. But they are not merely realizing this need, they are proving, by a corresponding action, that they are thinking.

When thought produces action we believe in it, not before.

Some claim to think that an effort should be made to raise the poor, fallen women. The establishment of the Mercy Home in Birmingham, Ala., was a proof that when a thought is ready to be born action is the consequence, words merely clothing the thought. The same is proven in the cold water fountain and other results of the thought of the W. C. T. U. in this city.

Among other things done by the recent state convention was the appointment of the writer to go to Montgomery to influence legislation in the passage of some laws, the most important being a better local option law. There were besides this three other bills, to which she was to pay especial attention, and of course she was expected to be wide awake to assist in affecting any temperance measure that came before the general assembly. A bill providing female guards for female prisons was passed through her work. A reformatory for boys was secured, and the "age of consent" was raised from ten to fourteen years.

Unfortunately, the house was too rushed or crowded to consider all the bills, and as we took no step to introduce our temperance bill till after the reassembling it was late upon the calendar, and hence was left out. Many, both in senate and legislature, had promised to support the bill, and in all probability it would have passed had it come up for consideration. Next session we shall be wiser, and hope to report a strong local option law as a result of the work. Meanwhile the work of agitation was not thrown away, and the fact of a woman in Alabama daring to become a lobbyist will also have its effect.

Several bills we helped to defeat, and the whisky men really secured only one victory worth mentioning, which was the establishment of a sour mash distillery, near Montgomery, for the purpose, they stated, of "raising hogs." I told them I was quite sure they would make hogs by this means, whether they would ever raise any, I doubted. I believe this to be one of the wisest steps of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Alabama, and it should keep up this new feature, regularly appointing some one to this legislative work.

While in Montgomery I delivered an address in the Baptist church to a good audience and made a strenuous attempt to revive its almost extinct union. Alas for Montgomery! The devil has a strong hold on her, I fear. The few women who are faithful temperance women meet with much opposition from those of their families who fear public opinion. One gifted member through ill health can do nothing, and so on. I shall return there soon to help in a Demorest medal contest and shall speak again and shall still try to get them interested enough to hold regular W. C. T. U. meetings. May God help the dear, good women there who still love the cause, to do their duty in spite of everything.

Among other incidents of my stay was an attack from the pulpit of the church to which I belong, on my work. I pray that the Lord may broaden the poor man's ideas. He is as one looking up through a transom at a patch of sky and imagining it to be the world. An attempt was made to repeal the prohibition law of one county, for which it was claimed by the member presenting the bill that the petition had the signature of a preacher and a deacon. This proves that the devil sometimes comes about the pulpit as well as the saloon. In fact, I expect he turns over the business of the saloon to his agents and personally attends those others. More, or rather less, next time.

FLOWER MISSION DEPARTMENT.

Dear Comrades:—It is with grateful and tender emotions that I greet you one and all; grateful—that God has so wonderfully blessed and richly crowned my life in this land of sunshine and flowers; tender, because of the loss of our promoted comrade and first National superintendent of the flower mission department, Miss Jennie Casseday. Miss Casseday was my personal friend during the five years of my state superintendency of the flower mission in Southern California, and her letters and zeal were my constant inspiration. I know I can never fill her place, but I ask your prayers and sympathy and help that God may guide and bless every agent used to bring souls to know Christ and His redeeming love through the mission of flowers.

The object of our mission is not only to cheer the sick, comfort the aged, the poor, the bereaved and the stranger within our gates, but the flowers employed are God's messengers of love to open the heart and mind to a word fitly spoken; when the heart is once touched we can tell of Christ and His power to save.

Hoping to receive your coöperation and good-will, I will suggest a plan of work for the coming year, adding only that my message is late in appearing because the notice of my appointment to this department was inadvertently late in reaching me.

PLAN OF WORK.

It shall be the duty and privilege of each state superintendent to write to her district or county superintendents requesting them to contribute an experience which has impressed them most forcibly in their visits to the sick, the hospitals, jails, poor-farms, etc. These experiences will be compiled into a symposium by your National superintendent, and circulated among flower mission workers as department literature. In my ten years' experience with the flower mission I have found the greatest need of the department to be helpful literature. I am sure you will coincide with me in this opinion, and to this plan you will lend your able assistance. In doing so you will receive fresh impetus for your own work, and encourage other unions to take up and carry forward our beautiful mission.

My most important message is (the old exhortation), Report all work done. The best and most practical method of accomplishing this is to purchase a five-cent blank book, label it "flower mission," date it, and into its pages insert,

1. The number of bouquets with Scripture texts distributed.
2. Number of those who have been converted through the mission.
3. Number of hours spent in reading to the sick.
4. Number of baskets of food or clothing provided for the needy.
5. Number of delicacies furnished, such as jellies, fruits, lemonade, buttermilk, etc.
6. Number of sick taken out riding or on an outing.
7. Number of scrapbooks provided for the children's ward in hospitals.
8. Number of fans covered with Scripture texts and distributed.
9. Number of pictures tacked on the wall of sick people.
10. Number of rocking chairs loaned or given.

If you will faithfully answer these questions in your little book you will have not only a record of work for your own satisfaction, but the material with which to furnish your reports to the National superintendent. The above suggestions are all practical and many of them within the reach of all superintendents.

Let us keep in remembrance the admonition in Gal. 6: 2, "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." I have taken for our National flower the rose, and you will find the cut on our stationery.

Dear sisters, remember the workers in your prayers that God may guide and bless this His own beautiful ministry.

Alice L. Sudduth,
Nat'l Supt, Colton, Cal.

WORLD'S AND NATIONAL EVANGELISTIC DEPARTMENT.

Dear Workers:—May I answer through our Official Column of The Union Signal, the many questions which come to me as to the best way to circulate my "Hints and Helps for Evangelistic Workers?" Almost daily letters of thanks and commendation are received and this is gratifying, because proving a blessing upon this effort to render more practical and spiritual our work and workers.

The little volume is designed for all Christian workers though prepared especially for evangelistic superintendents. Many state superintendents are now presenting and taking orders for it in their states, forwarding to me the names and a postoffice order. A copy is sent to each address immediately upon receipt of the same. But I am asked, "How we may reach the rank and file?" This is the work of the county and local evangelistic superintendent. A copy should be presented at the regular meeting of the W. C. T. U. and if any desire the book the names and money should be forwarded to me. Also at each state and county convention. If our local evangelistic superintendents would earnestly push this matter how much more systematic, practical and spiritual our great work in this field would become.

The question circular for reports at the end of the year is in this little book, and as no other will be issued each local union will require a copy to report intelligently to the state superintendent.

May I add a most earnest exhortation, as World's evangelistic superintendent, to our workers over the sea, to send to me at once, a full report of the evangelistic work done during the last two years? So few replies have yet come to my letters sent out weeks ago, that I fear the great work done will not be reported at the World's Convention in London in June. I expect to meet engagements in Richmond and Washington counties, N. Y., soon after the middle of March, and to go as far west as Iowa during the spring. Unions desiring lectures, Bible expositions, sermons or addresses en route will please communicate with me as soon as convenient.

Orders for "Hints and Helps," together with ten cents and a two cent stamp may also be sent directly to me at 151 Remsen street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

PURITY DEPARTMENT.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE STATE SUPERINTENDENTS.

My Dear Co-workers:—An appeal is being made to all lovers of purity to unite in a demand for raising the age of consent in every state to the age of majority in that state, thus giving virtue at least the same protection as property.

The Arena has reprinted from its pages a series of articles on age of consent legislation by well-known writers, Miss Willard among the number. This thirty-two page pamphlet, by special arrangement with the publishers, is offered to W. C. T. U. workers at the surprisingly low price of five cents. Its perusal and wide circulation will create that public sentiment which will insure the obtaining of the desired legislation. The National superintendent of purity in the W. C. T. U. earnestly urges the state superintendents to procure the pamphlet and to work for its widespread circulation. Address the Arena, Copley Square, Boston, Mass.

The practical question comes to us, "What can we do in furthering this good work?" I am told that any woman has a right to ask the representative of her district to present the desired bill. More than that any woman has a right to draw up such a bill and go personally to any member of the house or the senate and ask that he present it and speak in favor of it. Then every woman has a right to go and listen to the speeches made on the bill, and no one can measure the influence this will have. Men will say in secret session things they would not say if they knew women were to be present. In some cases women are asked to speak, and if so asked they should be ready to respond and plead with all a mother's love for the daughters of our land. If the women can get their husbands and fathers and brothers to work openly with them it will increase the chances of success, for men have votes back of them.

Those who undertake this matter must not be easily discouraged. Persist until you find some member of the house or senate who will present the bill and then keep it before the public. Talk about it, write about it, go and listen to the speeches concerning it, and let legislators know that the eyes of the mothers of the land are upon them.

Let me quote a few words from a personal letter from Helen Gardener. She says: "There is one point I wish you would always make clear to your women, and that is that the age would better be seven than twelve or fourteen. At seven the child has no internal forces to fight. At twelve and fourteen nature is her antagonist. She does not understand herself, is morbid, nervous, and sensitive, and these are the ages that almost all the states have placed as the age of consent. If they had baited a trap and set it they could not have done worse for little girls of the lower and middle class, those who have had no home training and whose mothers do not understand what this means. I have yet to find the man who does not recognize this when it is pointed out to him, and who is not willing and anxious to remedy it."

You see, sisters, that the way is being opened. Let us prepare for the work and having done all let us work.

Yours for service,
Mary Wood Allen,
Nat'l Supt. Purity Department.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

En route from Baltimore to Philadelphia, Feb. 25, 1895.

Two lines from a Salvation Army song, heard years ago, have been singing themselves in and out of my brain for the last fortnight. They are somewhat unique in grammatical construction, and by no means faultless as to rhythm, but the sentiment is one to which my soul gives a prompt and an orthodoxy Methodistic Amen.

"Is not mine a happy lot?
What brave comrades I have got!"

I think I never rejoice in the W. C. T. U. with quite so intense a joy as when I meet with the local unions, and the individual members of those unions. Of course I am glad in our great conventions; I rejoice in the women who have been called to the front as leaders, and to whom have been given tongues of fire. But when I go into some city or some country union and see the brave women who, year in and year out, through summer's heat and winter's cold, through trials and discouragements manifold, are still keeping our colors flying and giving money, time, strength—almost life itself for the maintenance of our principles, I feel like kissing the hem of their garments, and it fills me with a humility, which is pride, and a pride which is gratefully, gladly humbled, that it is given to me to serve such a constituency.

The Polyglot meetings brought this all before me so vividly. The Great Petition meant just that to me. I saw not only the genius which conceived the thought and the sentiment the Petition itself voiced, but I saw the vast army of women who had made such an expression of sentiment possible. I saw the miles they had traveled; the rebuffs they had borne; the sacrifice both of individual ease and more congenial occupation; I knew that every name on the great roll meant individual effort, and I thanked God and took new courage. Where so much is possible to-day who can tell what the next decade holds for us! Let us sing it all together:

"Is not mine a happy lot?
What brave comrades I have got!"

From Washington I went to Baltimore with Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset for their great meeting held on the afternoon of February 20. The trip was an unusual one for a humble white-ribboner, and was made so by the fact that Miss M. E. Garrett, of Baltimore, had placed at the disposal of the two leaders her own private car from Washington to Baltimore, where lunch was served in her beautiful home and thence, after the great meeting, on to Philadelphia. They remained for meetings in

PRIZES ON PATENTS.

How to get $100 and Perhaps Make a Fortune.

We secure patents and to induce people to keep track of their bright ideas we offer a prize of one hundred dollars to be paid on the first of every month to the person who submits to us the most meritorious invention during the preceding month. We will also advertise the invention free of charge in the National Register, a weekly newspaper, published in Washington, D. C., which has an extensive circulation throughout the United States and is devoted to the interests of inventors.

NOT SO HARD AS IT SEEMS.

The idea of being able to invent something strikes most people as being very difficult; this delusion the Company wishes to dispel. It is the simple things and small inventions that make the greatest amount of money, and the complex ones are seldom profitable. Almost everybody, at some time or another, conceives an idea, which, if patented, would probably be worth to him a fortune. Unfortunately such ideas are usually dismissed without thought. The simple inventions like the car window, which could be easily slid up and down without breaking the passenger's back, the sauce pan, the collar button, the nut lock, the bottle stopper, the snow shovel are things that almost every one sees some way of improving upon, and it is these kind of inventions that bring the greatest returns to the author.

The prize we offer will be paid at the end of each month, whether the app lication has been acted upon by the Patent office or not. Every competitor must apply for a patent on his invention through us, and whether he secures the prize or not, the inventor will have a valuable patent.

the latter city, but I went to friends in the suburbs, where I was busily occupied until Saturday afternoon in trying to "catch up" with such portions of my correspondence as had been of necessity neglected during the Washington meetings.

On Saturday I returned to Baltimore where I spoke twice on Sunday and gained several new members. I have just met the city union at their beautiful headquarters for the usual noonday gospel meeting—after which we held a conference in the interests of the coming National Convention. I find they are planning broadly and intelligently. They have secured one of the finest halls in the city, are anxious to have new features introduced into the program and are going to work with an enthusiasm which augurs well for "Baltimore—'95." The Convention will probably begin the last Friday in October, continuing the usual number of days.

Since leaving Chicago I have spoken sixteen times (including the Washington meetings) and have several other engagements before turning my face westward. Everywhere I find splendid enthusiasm and increasing purpose. What has chiefly rejoiced my heart has been to see how well the states are keeping to the keynote set at Cleveland, "Organization." Special effort is being made everywhere to secure new members and is everywhere successful. Five hundred new members! That will be the minimum rather than the maximum. Be sure your state is not left behind.

Treasurer's Corner.

BEAUFORT, S. C., Feb. 26, 1895.

From Washington the treasurer was sent by the general officers to South Carolina to try and encourage the women of the W. C. T. U. that did such good work for a few years, to renewed efforts for God and Home and Native Land. My first point was Greenville, where I was pleasantly entertained in the beautiful home of Mrs. Neblett. A large number of ladies met me in her parlors for an afternoon meeting where a free conference was held, but an evening meeting was deemed impractical on account of the condition of the roads. The soil is a red clay that when dry and packed makes a smooth sidewalk, but when wet with melted snow is about like stewed pumpkin, and adheres like gumbo. Northern women can hardly understand the obstacles that stand in the way of our South Carolina sisters.

Ministers of the gospel welcome our work in the North, and believe churches are made for the promulgation of temperance as a part of religion. They also welcome the work of women, but in some parts of South Carolina a dedicated church means a place for men to preach, and it would be regarded almost as desecration for a woman to speak in one. This is the result of education and long practice and I believe is partly due to the fact that they are not familiar with our principles.

At Fairfax Mrs. Young had arranged thoroughly for a large meeting. Beautiful singing, a pleasant hall filled with intelligent, earnest listeners, some of whom drove twelve miles to be present, were very inspiring. Several new members were added and we trust a new impetus was given to the work. Mrs. Arnold, the able president of Allendale union, was present and added much to the pleasure of my visit. Dr. Young is an ardent believer in our work and is in every way helpful to his wife.

I reached Beaufort in time for dinner, and found a pleasant home with Mrs. Waterhouse. A large number of ladies met for a parlor meeting and here I met their president, Miss Mary Hamilton, for many years a teacher in the public school, a woman of culture and a devoted Christian, thoroughly interested, but for some reason the work has had a lull. A few new women became interested and the old workers expressed themselves anxious to take up the work actively again. A meeting was called for next Saturday and dues were sent by the treasurer for 1893–94 to the state treasurer on Monday. Sunday the ladies secured the Episcopal chapel for an address and I had the pleasure of speaking to a large audience, thirty or forty young men standing all through. I was gratified that the Baptist, Methodist and Episcopal ministers gave cordial notice of the meeting. Mrs. J. A. Emmons also gave me a cozy room in her pleasant home.

The young people in these homes greatly interested me. Miss Mary Waterhouse is a graduate of Elmira College, N. Y., while the son was called from Colgate University at the death of his father to carry on the business for his mother. Miss Myra Gage, granddaughter of Frances D. Gage, is a promising young girl from whom we shall hear later. All these young people are interested in the W. C. T. U. and Band of Hope work. There are many earnest, intelligent women in Beaufort, and men also, and I have seldom been in a place where I was more courteously received or listened to more attentively. But I must reserve an account of my visit to the Island of St. Helena, where Miss Laura Town and Miss Ellen Murray have a pledged temperance army of one thousand, until my next letter.

Organizers' Corner.

As a National organizer, I am invited to contribute to the Organizers' Column. I heartily approve of this proffered medium of communication for the workers; and not only this, but that all who read may know what is being done by National workers. I have no recent work to report, and it becomes a question of what shall the invited communication consist?

The organizing department has lacked organization. This may seem a contradiction of terms, but is not necessarily so. I speak of the department as organized, not the system of individuals in organizing work; that depends upon the worker, and results show that there has been a great diversity as to efficiency and method in laying foundations. It is one thing to say, "You ought to have a union. How many will join?" (Can't members appoint officers, present or absent, and report a union organized which may never gasp again?) and quite another to gather the standing forces, give instruction and set the wheels in motion with reasonable expectation of continued life and growth. National organizers were appointed, as we understand, that the official position might serve as a credential or commendation to states or territories wishing to secure workers. In other words, as a protection to the people against uncredentialed roamers who were occasionally going about seeking to be taken in and brought before the public and by whom the unions or the people were often sadly taken in in turn.

The National organizer is supposed to be a safe, efficient and experienced worker, and an able lecturer as well. While credentialed, the organizers have not been thereby provisioned by the National, but have mainly arranged for their own work. A financial basis was adopted, which, after a year's trial, not having proved satisfactory, was given up.

To-day we are organizers upon the same plan as at first, credentialed roamers, with the field before us and no financial backing in the rear. This should be understood, as letters sometimes come to us like this: "We understand that the National sends you out, and we would like to have you come."

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

DEAR MRS. KLINE:—It is with pleasure I comply with your request to report my recent pneumonia case at the National Temperance Hospital.

Mrs. C. Æt. 37. Retired on the evening of February 1, in her usual health. Awakened in the night with severe chill, intense pain in the chest and dyspnœa. The physician called, diagnosed the case as double lobar pneumonia and insisted that she be removed from her surroundings at once, or there would be absolutely no chance for recovery—under hospital care she might pull through in three to five weeks. Such was the anything but encouraging prognosis of Doctor S.

When I saw the case on the morning of February 2, her temperature was 104 1-5 degrees, pulse 120, respiration 20. There was the characteristic crimson area on either cheek and the expression of the face a curious mixture of anxiety and apathy; while the breathing was rapid, labored and insufficient; sharp, stitching pain in chest with every inhalation; the skin was hot and dry, with dry, cracked lips and tongue heavily coated with white fur indicating a severe form of the disease, and intense pain in the head; of course the patient had been at once put to bed. A jacket of cotton-batting protected the tender chest and an ice-cap was applied to the aching head.

Poultices and sloppy applications I abominate. They, with alcohol, have no place in modern therapeutics. Compresses wrung from very hot water were applied over the whole lung surface for an hour, and followed by hot, dry flannel. These measures frequently repeated with the appropriate homeopathic remedy brought the temperature down to 102 degrees by evening. An afternoon temperature of 104 degrees and a morning temperature of 102 or 103 degrees F. is about the normal course of lobar pneumonia.

As a nutritive and easily digestible diet was desirable, hot milk with hot gruel or broth, by way of variety, was given in small quantities at frequent intervals until the fifth day, when temperature had fallen to normal, and the exudate so nearly disappeared that a gradual return was made to her usual diet. The tendency to congestion in the kidney was broken up by the hot, moist compresses over that region while judicious enemas relaxed the constipated bowel.

Hot fomentations and hot, dry flannel relieved the intense pain which was a prominent, and, to the patient, a most disagreeable symptom, while to the physician the heart's action and that of the pulse was of great importance. The pulse should be about 100 a minute in this disease. A pulse of 120 is always a cause of anxiety. The liability of failure of the heart's action, either gradual or sudden, constitutes one of the greatest dangers of pneumonia.

At this stage under ordinary treatment stimulation is considered indispensable and alcohol heads the list, acting, perhaps, as a whip to spur the jaded horse to the top of the hill but followed on the downward road by profound depression.

A serviceable substitute for alcoholic stimulation is ammonium carbonate which is not followed by nervous depression, but it is difficult to use in states of unconsciousness.

In such cases Dr. J. H. Kellogg says: "The application of heat over the heart and applications of hot and cold water to the spine in rapid alternation, are a much more effective means of arousing the heart to activity, and I have repeatedly proved this theory." In our case the hot drinks, hot applications and internal medication carried the patient through the fifth day when defervescence set in. The cough was not at any time severe.

The points in this case are the speedy relief of pain, control of temperature the sustaining of the heart's action, dispersion of the tendency to congestion in other organs, the early resolution and the controlling of all complications almost before they had time to make their appearance.

According to all records every symptom justified the prognosis of Dr. S. upon his first visit to our patient, but under the skillful and unceasing ministrations of our nurses and hospital attaches the serious indications melted away like snow before the morning sun, and our patient was discharged on the eleventh day, another monument to rational and temperate treatment.

The statement is so often made that alcohol is absolutely necessary in cases of pneumonia, would it not be advisable for our readers to cut out the above article and paste it in their scrap-books for future reference?

After the inevitable laugh had subsided, the clergyman said: "Well, that is a fair question, who can answer it?" There was a pause, and then up went a pudgy fist. "Well, my little man," asked the clergyman, "why was it?" "I guess mebbe they was a-moultin'," was the astonishing reply, and the address was concluded right there.

Tears and Triumphs is the name of a hymn-book published by the Revivalist Publishing Co., Cincinnati, O. There are so many books of this nature before the public that a choice is difficult to make. The volume in hand contains about two hundred and fifty hymns, with music, some of them well known, others being new claimants for favor. One of the editors of this book of song is Rev. M. W. Knapp, editor of The Revivalist.

In Wild Rose Time. A touching story of two little children born and bred in the slums under a drink-cursed roof. By a blessed "Providence" they come into touch with Christian influences, though all too late to do more for them than to brighten their last days. The author, Amanda M. Douglas, has a wonderful power of depiction and her pen executes at once its most powerful and most delicate outlines when employed upon the delineation of child-character. Although this story covers nearly three hundred pages, the simple plot loses none of its interest while the simple and pitiful life-details of the two little slum sufferers hold the reader's attention without effort to the last.

Lee & Shepard, publishers, 10 Milk St., Boston, Mass. Price $1.50.

Shylock's Daughter. By Margaret Holmes Bates. It is hard to combine the analysis of labor problems with romantic narrative and make a literary success. This story is not without force and interest in its opening chapters, as they describe the evolution of a politician from a farmer's son. In his singleness and purity of purpose to engage in politics solely for the betterment of his companions in farm interests, the hero is a strong character, and one watches his progress from field to city with admiration. But the author weakens and turns the battle between labor and capital into an indifferent love-story, spoiling it and disappointing her readers.

Charles H. Kerr & Company, 175 Monroe St., Chicago.

Doctor Judas: A Portrayal of the Opium Habit. By William Rosser Cobbe. Published by S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago. Price $1.50.

"Cured as by a miracle of the dreary and heart-breaking habit, the woes and sorrows of those yet under bondage have borne upon my spirit by night and by day," says the author in his preface to this book which is a "portrayal" that merits a more judicial reading than most of the opium narratives, which in their very sensational style lose their power for good.

Mr. Cobbe tells his story analytically, showing step by step, not only his own culpability but the blame that rested upon others, describing in unvarnished terms the effect of the drug upon brain and brawn, upon moral responsibility, upon reason, memory, imagination, temper, appetite, eyesight, hearing. He supports the testimony of his own experiences by those from more widely-known authorities. He discusses not only his own sufferings, but depicts the sufferings of those whose habit is not of opium but of some other drug. He gives plain warning and witness against the culpability of doctors and druggists, and reveals the pitiable state of the poor victims, who, once enthralled, can neither by prayer nor resolve, unaided, break away from their chains. At the close of his volume he writes these encouraging words: "The disease of opium yields as easily to intelligent scientific treatment as does ague and fever or any other disease, with this added encouragement, that whereas in nearly all other diseases there is an appreciable percentage of fatalities, in the treatment for the opium habit every one is restored, with not a vestige of the curse remaining."

What's your husband's work?

Does he have to do anything as hard as your washing and scrubbing? It can't be. What can a man do that's as hard, for most men, as this constant housedrudgery is, for most women? If he has any sympathy for you, tell him to get you some Pearline. Sympathy is all very well, but it's Pearline, not sympathy, that you want for washing and cleaning. ## Signal Notes.

A Boston paper has the following: "We saw a lady not long ago, riding in comfort behind a team of horses whose heads were held up by the check rein in such a position that they must have been suffering exquisite torture. The check rein is the most barbarous instrument of torture now in use, and is used most by those who pretend to the finest sensibilities."

Mrs. Henry Wood began to write "East Lynne" after she was forty-five, and after that wrote nearly forty other novels. No home duty was over neglected or put aside for literary labors, and the amount of work she accomplished is amazing, considering the fact that she suffered all her life from severe curvature of the spine. "Danesbury House," her temperance prize story, was written in twenty-eight days.

Some one has been investigating the daily income of the principal rulers of the world. The Emperor of Russia heads the list with $25,000, while the President of the United States brings up at the foot with $137. The others in their order are, Sultan of Turkey, $18,000; Emperor of Austria, $10,000; Emperor of Germany, $8,000; King of Italy, $6,400; Queen Victoria, $6,300; King of Belgium, $1,640; President of France, $5,000.

An excellent plan is that of the Illinois Christian Endeavor Union which has organized a correspondence committee. Through this committee young people removing to any town in Illinois will be given a cordial welcome to their new home. The committee does not confine its labors to members alone but will notify the local Christian Endeavor of the arrival of any young person for whom their interest is enlisted.

Mr. C. S. Adama Von Scheltema, the Christian temperance worker and writer of Holland, celebrated his eightieth birthday in health and vigor, January 28. For thirty-five years he has been secretary of the Netherlands Religious Tract Society. He has written and translated a number of books and issues a useful Bible Almanac each year. This year in honor of his assistants, he has published a valuable volume of daily meditations.

Rhode Island has a Health Union for all those interested in hygiene, who desire to live according to the rules of health, to loan health books, tracts, etc., and to hold meetings for the furtherance of the hygienic propaganda. No membership dues are required. A loan library has been established at 177 Ivy street, Providence, where books can be borrowed and donations are thankfully received. Mrs. Eliza Mowry Bliven, of North Scituate, R. I., is the secretary, who will answer all questions.

The supreme court of Indiana has given a decision which affirms the decision of the lower court that women are prohibited by statute from obtaining a license to vend intoxicating liquors at retail, and when they embark in such business they engage in the commission of an unlawful act. This is the single instance in which we are heartily in favor of having the women left out. We wish this law prevailed throughout the world, and that there might then be one more decision of the court, that as used in this place the word woman includes man!

In her recent interesting volume, Miss Emma Stirling, the founder of the Scottish National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, tells how she became interested in this humane work, which has grown to so great proportions. From small beginnings her work in Edinburgh grew until she had three hundred children under her care. In 1886 she settled upon Hillfoot farm, about a hundred miles from Halifax, N. S., bringing from Scotland the first installment of twenty-five children. Her work has increased until hundreds of children have been placed in Canadian homes.

The petitions now being circulated and sent to the Michigan legislature asking for the submission of a prohibition amendment are not, as some papers have stated, the work of the W. C. T. U. This movement, backed by men and women whose temperance and Christian principles are aroused, and though white-ribboners cannot claim exclusive credit, would it not be safe to venture that there are no heartier indorsers of the petition and no more zealous movers in its cause than these women whose faces are set as a flint toward the prohibition of the liquor traffic? May fair Michigan score such a mark for temperance as shall set a standard for every other state in the Union!

We desire to call attention to the beautiful white ribbon badge, which is a delight to the eye and a comfort to the wearer, both on account of its artistic and intrinsic value. It is what it claims to be, solid silver with pure white enamel face upon which the letters W. C. T. U. are clearly outlined. It is "a thing of beauty" and will prove "a joy forever"—always clean, ready for use, and an object of admiration regardless of its symbolic meaning. It is eminently appropriate for the young women, and every Y should possess one. The price has been increased ten cents, owing to the inability of the manufacturer to furnish them upon his first estimate of cost. We have arranged for one thousand of these pins, and hope to multiply the order until one shall be found upon every member of the National W. C. T. U. The pin has not been indorsed by the National, but at the convention in Cleveland received "honorable mention."

Thirteen new subscribers received and thirteen new hymnals ordered as premiums in one mail!!! Somebody is beginning to realize the power of good music—and you'll find in the "White Ribbon Hymnal" a choice selection of stirring temperance songs. We have ordered a new edition, and, believing that the amount of temperance work accomplished may be gauged by the number of UNION SIGNALS taken and the number of Hymnals owned by the unions, we are preparing to send out thousands of copies to new subscribers.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The Nicholson bill has passed the Indiana senate.

Knouts have been banished from Russia by the Czar's edict.

The government forces have overcome the rebellion in Cuba.

Utah's constitutional convention has adopted the constitution of the United States.

The scientific temperance instruction bill has passed both houses of the Indiana legislature.

The new Irish land bill, introduced by Hon. John Morley, has passed its first reading in the House of Commons.

Pool selling has been prohibited by law in Missouri—except upon race-courses during the "racing season"!

Woman suffrage passed the Maine house of representatives by a vote of 80 to 55. It has yet to pass the senate.

China has acceded to Japan's terms of peace, made through correspondence of the United States ministers in each country and is ready to sign the treaty.

As our National corresponding secretary, Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, was on her way to Chicago last week, she received a telegram summoning her to the bedside of her aged father at Cold Spring, N. Y. She quickly responded, and found her immediate presence very necessary, as all hope of her father's recovery had been abandoned, but since the writing of her column on page 13, some improvement has been noted, and it is possible that he may live. All hearts will beat the warmer for the suspense of this devoted daughter, whose affectionate nature will be deeply affected by this great anxiety.

THE meetings in Willard Hall, Chicago, for the past week have been of special and peculiar interest. They are strictly evangelistic in character, and are conducted by Charles N. Crittenton, the founder of Florence Crittenton missions, and Lawrence B. Greenwood, the gospel singer, who is well known from his association with the Rev. B. Fay Mills. It was at first intended to hold three daily meetings in Willard Hall, but the attendance has been so large that the afternoon and evening meetings have been transferred to Centenary M. E. church on Monroe street. Fuller mention will be made next week.

IT will be a matter of interest to all white-ribboners to know that the reception to the delegation of our officers who presented the Polyglot Petition to President Cleveland was held in the parlor at the White House of which the most conspicuous feature is the full-length portrait of Mrs. President Hayes, "presented by the temperance people of the United States, and to be kept at the White House as a perpetual memorial of the distinguished services of Mrs. Hayes as a teetotaller and white ribbon woman, whose action was based on the Christian principle of love to God and love to man." This will set at rest all rumors to the effect that the picture has been taken down or turned to the wall.

THE unions in the West have not utilized the rare opportunity of securing the costume lecture of Mrs. Jeannette G. Hauser, formerly president of India W. C. T. U. Mrs. Hauser's terms are so moderate that any enterprising union can make money for itself by presenting this lecture to the public. If Mrs. Hauser does not receive more encouragement in the next few weeks, it is probable that she will return to Boston, as the New England audiences have caused her lecture to be in great demand in the East. All unions in the middle and western states that are contemplating engaging this delightful oriental entertainment should at once correspond with Mrs. Hauser, whose present address is Room 1116, The Temple, Chicago.

MRS. LUCY THURMAN, superintendent of colored work in the National W. C. T. U., is planning great activity for her department this year. She is now in Chicago, and with the assistance of the Chicago Central union, will organize thoroughly among the colored people of the city, first holding meetings in the African churches to arouse an interest in the temperance cause. We doubt not that large additions will accrue to the efforts of Mrs. Thurman, as she is a woman of great zeal and marked ability. Her address at the recent memorial meeting at Jackson, Mich., for Frederick Douglass was one of unusual power. To Mr. Douglass, whom she knew twenty years ago, she attributed the source of her inspiration for humanity's uplift.

AFTER all the rumor to the effect that Maine was about to repeal her prohibitory law, the vote taken on that question in the state legislature, February 28, was reassuring. At the conclusion of much talking, in which woman's suffrage was more than once referred to as the missing weapon for the enforcement of Prohibition, the question was put to vote and only thirteen were counted in favor of resubmission while one hundred and fourteen were opposed to it. Surely we have nothing to fear from the present legislature. And now that municipal suffrage has been passed by the lower house of Maine, the old Pine Tree state is taking rank with the Rocky Mountain dominion of Colorado and the prairie soil of Kansas for breadth of vision and integrity of purpose toward one-half of the human race.

A UNIQUE recognition of woman's position in religious functions was made last week by a civil court in Cincinnati. The press report tells the story: "To-day two officers of the Salvation Army appeared before Judge Ferris, of the probate court and made application for a minister's license for Mrs. Ballington Booth, to enable her to officiate at a wedding to be celebrated soon at their temple in this city. It was a new question. The court could find no strict statutory authority on the subject, but under the policy of the law which encourages wedlock, the judge said he would grant the license. By so doing the Salvation Army is recognized as a religious congregation, and Mrs. Ballington Booth, one of the most widely known women in the world, as a minister of that order." We women have frequent cause these days to realize that "the world does move."

AT the last session of the National Council of Women, March 2, Mrs. May Wright Sewall, the retiring president, declared that she had two "novelties" to present. One was the retirement of the five National officers of the Council and the other was the introduction of the five new officers. "Here are five women," said Mrs. Sewall, "who having tasted the sweets of power for a term of four consecutive years, voluntarily relinquished it and against the most flattering inducement that the apparent spontaneous unanimity of their constituency could give, persistently decline reëlection. We are too modest to think that women frequently do anything that men might well emulate, but we commend this spectacle to the country at large as something that might befit the nominating conventions of all its great parties." Aside from the division of the Council into an upper and lower house, the president is given the power to appoint a Cabinet. The first official appointed by the new president, Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, was the retiring president, Mrs. Sewall, to the secretaryship of foreign affairs. We have not yet heard the full roster of Cabinet officers, but have learned that to Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, our own vice-president, is given the portfolio of moral reform. As the largest single body of women in the National Council, the W. C. T. U. feels a pardonable pride in the sagacity of its management, which the Washington press has characterized as "the most remarkable ever witnessed in this or any other country."

A VISION.

BY HORACE F. BROWN.

I had a vision in my sleep;
  An angel clothed in robes of light
The deeds of men upon a scroll
  In words of flaming fire did write.

Before him seemed a mighty throng,
  The nations of the earth were there,
The dens of vice gave up their hosts,
  And dungeons laid their secrets bare.

From out the throng a woman came,
  Her face was pure and wondrous fair,
Her eyes were filled with pearly tears,
  Her voice was like a low, sweet prayer.

"O stay thy hand," she pleading cried,
  "Write not their wayward deeds to-day,
The way was hard, the flesh is weak,
  Their erring feet have gone astray."

In low and winning voice spake he:
  "Fear not, my sister, God is love,
And be thy heart full satisfied
  While time shall last. No erring soul

"Shall tremble at the judgment day
  Because of records I have kept;
For God is love, and o'er the sins
  Of erring ones our Saviour wept.

"Here, see these hosts whose wayward feet
  Have wandered far from virtue's way,
Hear thou that voice, so low and sweet
  That for each erring one doth pray?

"See thou that firm yet gentle hand
  That strives to stay their certain fall,
That seeks to guide their steps aright
  And points to God as all in all?

  With records of the tender love
That makes that voice and hand and heart
  So dear to all the hosts above."

With reverend joy she kissed his hand,
  His blessing fell upon her head;
"Whose voice, whose hand, whose loving heart
  Hath wrought such deeds?" she trembling said.

The lengthened scroll was opened wide
  And plainly to my dazzled view
In living fire I read these words,
  "Thrice blest, the W. C. T. U."

Chicago, Ill.

'STILLERY LU.

In Two Chapters.

BY MARTHA YOUNG.

Chapter I.

The red cow with one horn, and that much the worse for wear, the brindle and the dun stood lowing dismally against the stone-heap that served for lot-wall of old Kato cabin on Sand Mountain. Milking hour was long past, daylight had departed, but the mountain was still streaked with strips of afterglow down its shaggy sides.

Ma Kato, as if oblivious to passing hours, sat bent over a most unusual task, her usual ones neglected. She sat in a low, splint-bottomed chair, a half sheet of common letter paper before her and in her hand a lead pencil. Thought came to her painfully; words were hard to find, and still harder to form.

Her daughter, a great beautiful creature, touched her mother's shoulder and pointed to the empty milk pails against the cabin. Fairness and color ran riot in the girl's face, which was, when as now uplifted to the higher peaks of old Sand, like a full blown but scentless flower. There was a strange pathetic lack of expression in her wide-blue eyes and on her ripe lips; she was a deaf mute. Ma Kato, with a gesture of impatience, signed to the girl to go alone to the task of milking. Patiently the girl took up pail and gourd and went to let down the clumsy bars where the hungry calves came pushing and crowding about her.

The mother wrote on undisturbed except by the crowd of memories that came surging over her. She was wrapped in the memory of the days when her two children's father, Old Pap Kato, had been the "wildest fellow on the hill"; when he ran the still in the cave half a mile beneath their cabin, and when drunken fights and shot men and skirmishes with raiders made up their life.

Old Kato had been paralyzed by an accidental shot from one of his friends in a scuffle with the valley men, and when brought home never lifted himself from his bed. Twelve years he had lived on that bed, repentance rife within him, and his days were spent in exhortations to his wife and his children never to let another still be opened up on the mountain. Yet the name, "still people," clung to them, and Luella was always 'Stillery Lu to the mountain.

Five years Old Kato had been dead, and the influence that he had wielded on Sand, even bedridden as he was, was well-nigh forgotten. Poverty had compelled Ma Kato and young Zeb to sell most of their land. The old cave where the still had been had gone with the rest of it to Nick Scarlet.

Nick was the evil genius of the mountain. He "ran with the boys," and was called "a good fellow." He had a flattering, winning way with young men, and had no more mercy nor principle in him than a cave rattlesnake. The only respite from wickedness Old Sand had was when he was off on a trip to the valley. Even these respites were hardly welcomed by the women who saw him leading their young men to all sorts of dissipation, for he never returned from the low lands without bringing some evil of "higher" civilization with him, some new gambling game or some more vile piece of profanity. Even Nick had been kept down by the influence of Pap Kato, had been obliged to draw his following to secret places for their drinking or "craps"; above all, to Ma Kato, he had let young Zeb entirely alone.

All this was changed now. Zeb was frequently away from home until after midnight. His work on the few mountain patches left them was neglected. He was flighty in his talk, impatient of any questioning, ready to swear at any admonition from his mother. To increase the mother's anxiety there came to her in her cabin strange echoes as if from the bowels of the earth, a creeping, harrowing, wailing sound that made her half-believe in the story that had long been rife on the ridge; that the old distillery was haunted by the spirits of all those who had come to death or sorrow by its outpouring of inflaming liquor. But Ma Kato was not so ignorant as the most of her neighbors; this superstition did not long remain with her. She knew that the old still was started up.

She felt that her boy was meeting his ruin there, by stealthy, far-apart visits, she fancied; that he spent any great part of the time he was away from her in the place and company his father had so often and so vehemently warned him against, she never for a moment thought.

On this evening with all this fear in her heart she was trying to write such a letter as any collector of revenues could show by scores. Her letter read when at last completed: "Friend Sur ef you want ter brake up a still what don't put no cash in yer pocket you come up on ole Sand up by ole man Sanders' store crost the mounting by Fed Dade's, and creep up 'long the falls cut ter the left by Sim's mill, and when yer git out of hearin' of the water yer listen an' yer'll hear the grindin' like hants in the yearth, fer hit's in a cave what ole time raiders kin tell you wuz run by ole Zeb Kato what's dead and not run fer twenty-five year. Come quick as yer git this few lines. I tuck my pen in hand to write bein' a mother which fears for the young and the devilment they is lead to by one as knows how. The name of the woman as writ this won't do you no good and will do me harm so I will close."

No sooner was the letter written and put into the envelope that she had bought two weeks ago for this purpose and hidden in the bosom of her dress, than she saw Zeb climbing up the slope. Her heart thrilled with joy, for Zeb so rarely made his appearance now in the cabin until late night time. His face was heavy and sullen, it had once been full of candor and pleasantness. He threw himself in a chair as far from his mother as the smallness of the porch would allow.

Luella with the gourd dripping milk, and the pails full and foamy, came back to the cabin. She glanced with surprise and pleasure at Zeb and nodded cheerfully at him to show her joy at seeing him at home. She hurried in to prepare the best supper she could since Zeb so rarely took that meal with them. Her preparations were just completed when she stepped on the porch to bid her mother and brother to the repast,—the best she could furnish, yet most frugal.

The mother, no longer able to stand the anxiety in her heart had just asked Zeb where he spent so much of his time. Zeb, more sullen than ever had just answered: "I work! Hain't I got ter work, two women on my shoulders?"

"That's truth," said his mother gently, though it was little enough help that came from Zeb to the cabin; "but I do nigh 'bout quiltin' and weavin' fer half the mounting and Luella—"

"A dumb, deaf gal's no 'count," growled Zeb roughly. The mother looked up quickly, as if to note if Luella had heard. Her closed ears had spared her hearing of the bitter words, but her mother saw in an instant that she had felt them. So keen were the poor girl's perceptions that it seemed at times that her lack of hearing was more than compensated by her power of feeling.

To hide the shock of grief at the first hard words she had ever heard of herself in her home she turned back into the cabin.

Zeb not answering his mother's: "Zeb, Luella's got you a good supper," jerked himself up, and with quick strides was off down the slope. At the same time the dull groaning as of spirits in torment crept throbbing up as from the mountain's center.

Luella and her mother sat down to the supper neither could enjoy. The mother had tried with soothing touches to show Luella how her love enfolded her afflicted child.

Now with excited gesture Ma Kato began to explain to Luella how it was the influence of the still below that was ruining Zeb, how she would write a letter that would bring the raiders, and the distilling stopped, Zeb would be himself again. But Lu uttered broken sounds of dissent and threw up her hands in agitated warning, and tried with all her might to show that the raiders must not come.

All the while the creeping, crawling sounds of wailing and groaning filled the purpling air of evening, a horror of hearing to the mother, a yet greater horror of feeling to the daughter. For the first time mother and child were out of sympathy. Ma Kato wondered if failure of speech and hearing had not at length dulled Lu's unusually fine mind, else surely she would be glad to have the raiders break up the still. Of course there was a chance of the men finding Zeb in the still, but that was only a chance in a thousand. She felt sure he could only go there at long intervals, and she felt strong to prevent his being there when the raiders came. So, determining to say nothing more to Luella about the letter, she signed to her that she was going down the mountain a long way to sit with old Sue Bates the night; old Sue was long bedridden and fast fading out.

Luella had never been left alone in the cabin before, yet she bore it patiently, for her brother's rough tones had unveiled to her her worthlessness and her affliction; henceforth she would expect but little; her poor heart swelled with gratitude that she had to this time received so much of care and affection.

Ma Kato was afraid to post her letter at Sander's store, or at Bill Sim's mill, for all the mountain people fought as a man against the raiders, and she knew the letter, if mailed on the mountain, would never reach its destination. A long, weary way to the valley she plodded; a lonely way, and one by no means free from danger.

It was early day ere she again saw her cabin. Her anxiety for Luella had been great. The pink blooms of the rhododendrons were empearled with dewdrops; the mountain laurel was weighted with the cool tears of the night; all the beauty of the mountain was abroad. Yet more fair than all the beauty of nature seemed to the mother the young girl standing at the cabin door, looking anxiously down the path for her approach.

THE PRESS FOR CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

"The mightiest of the mighty means
On which the arm of progress leans."

"Why should the devil have all the good tunes?" was the clear-cut question of good John Wesley.

"Why should the devil have so much printer's ink?" was from the first a leading question among white ribbon women. In every village, town and city of the world in these days, there is, as a rule, some sort of a newspaper to establish which cost the proprietor a snug sum of money. To keep it going makes a constant demand upon his purse. We women could no more have started these papers than we could have made a world, but if we have the tact and talent, or to state it more correctly, the good common sense to put a mortgage on a few square inches every week in the columns of these papers, it is just as well as if we owned that amount of space, which, if paid for at advertising rates would cost an incalculable amount of money.

There is not another line of work except that of gopsel meetings which our women have taken up with so much alacrity, for they are quick-witted enough to see that there is not in the world another power where we can bring to a focus so much influence for the spread of temperance principles and temperance practice as the newspapers, because they go everywhere and are read by all people. The voice that speaks dies on the air almost before its echoes reach us, but the firm types and black ink hold through months and years. The newspapers that issue from the press in New York city may be read in Yokohama, Melbourne, St. Petersburg, and in the Islands of the Sea. When you have got a thought into "cold type" it is there "for keeps." There is no magician in this age like the clear-headed, far-sighted man or woman who impresses the thoughts that he believes are winged with God's truth, upon the printed page.

But unhappily the powers of darkness are more alert as yet to use this printed page for selfish purposes than the powers of life are intent to gain it for purposes of blessing; still, I have always felt that women when once their attention had been strongly impressed were so gifted in carrying out details, that if we could only make our press department seem as important to our great home cause as it actually is, they would make it hum like a top in every locality where the mother heart has come to the front to guard its little ones, and twenty years of experience since this department was organized in Cleveland, O., at the first National Convention have confirmed me in this belief.

The universal complaint concerning our local press superintendents is that while they "run well for a season" they are apt to "grow weary in well doing," and seem to forget that it is "in due season" that "we shall reap if we faint not." Innumerable editors have said to me, "I gave a quarter of a column" (or a half as the case may be) "to your superintendent and she sent me material to fill it for a month, three months, six months, or possibly a year, and then the whole thing dropped." Other editors have said, "If we could count upon the copy as a certainty and that it would not come in too late, we would set aside space, but the women do not seem to understand that an hour or even a moment makes all the difference in a newspaper office between having what is sent put in the paper or in the waste paper basket."

Verily, we must be up to time as well as up to date if we expect to inspire the confidence of that much tormented dignitary, the editor.

Another mistake that we sometimes make is to devote our attention wholly to the local editor. A paper of importance is divided into departments each of which is under the care of some one member of the staff, and an ingenious press superintendent will try not only to secure the insertion of local news on the city page, but will furnish every now and then a story, a bit of verse, an anecdote, a pithy paragraph for the home column or the scientific selections; indeed, there is hardly a subdivision of the paper for which an ingenious woman would not be able to find, from time to time, appropriate and attractive selections.

One of the most neglected fields is reporting the sermons and addresses of temperance men and women. How often have we found in the local press some account of where we had come from and were going to, some account of our general appearance or manners, some friendly hope expressed or adverse prophecy, but almost never any setting forth of what we had said.

If our press superintendents in the cities and large towns could secure stenographic reports at least of the leading addresses made, in the course of the year they would be furnishing to the public the latest and best facts and illustrations of those who are constantly studying the movement, and whose method of presenting it to the public has proved so satisfactory that a large audience is assured to them wherever they go.

A ready lead pencil is the magic wand of power to a press superintendent, whether she be national, state or local. To catch an expression "on the fly" is an art for which women are peculiarly adapted by reason of their quick thought and quicker sympathy. If we learn to be on the alert for the department under our care we shall constantly be hearing or seeing something that helps to illustrate and extend its influence. It is practically impossible for two or three white ribbon comrades to come together without developing experiences, incidents or arguments that would be most helpful to that larger number whom the reformer must constantly have in mind, for as the material of the sculptor is marble on which he works untiringly with hammer and chisel, so "people" form the material of the temperance apostle, upon which he is steadily trying to make the impress of his own thoughts and convictions.

The bright sayings of children as well as "grown-ups"; the reminiscences, statistics, illustrations and arguments that we all have stored up in our minds and with which we are wont to regale one another, would, if brought out upon the printed page, be transferred to tens of thousands of brains as readily as a single electrotype makes its impress upon a thousand pieces of paper. Doubtless the process is just as scientific as it would be to take a photograph or stamp with a stencil plate, and not until we have received as clear an impression of what we are capable of doing and called to do in the press department, as a photographer has of the impress to be made by the plate in his hand, or the printer by the type between his fingers, have we measured up at all to the boundless possibilities and measureless importance of the work that has come to our hands in connection with the press.

It is true now as it was when the words were uttered first, "My people perish for lack of knowledge." The reason why our young folks go their way into wrong-doing is largely because they have not been trained in a better way. A mother's hand smoothing the wrappings around her little child to protect and shelter him, is not more worthily engaged than a woman's hand that pens high and holy thoughts, which passing under the eye of untaught childhood and youth produce that arrest of attention in the mind from which every good cause has everything to hope. For this reason there is to my mind nothing secular but everything sacred in the contemplation of the press department through which we have, as white ribbon women, spread the pure light of a pure life over the nations fast and far.

We should be grateful to those friendly men who have opened to us the use of their columns, and we should do our utmost to win and hold their respect, not only for our intentions, but our clear, practical sagacity in furnishing them suitable material with which to occupy the space they have kindly given. We are nearer now to victory than when we first believed; the day begins to dawn and the shadows flee away.

DID THE SAVIOUR DRINK FERMENTED WINE?

BY L. A. B. STEELE.

It seems strange that with all the light which has been thrown upon this question by the researches of wise and learned men there should still be any room for doubt upon it. Yet there are some who still maintain that the Saviour did drink intoxicating wine, and proclaim the pernicious doctrine from the pulpit.

We are told by eminent commentators that not only two, but thirteen distinct Hebrew and Greek terms are translated by the word "wine," whether with or without the adjective "new," sweet, mixed and strong. We are further told that of those terms,—referring to "wine" in common use—some denote the freshly expressed juice of the grape, and others, the juice boiled down into a syrup or even a thick conserve which could be made into cakes and carried on journeys to be used diluted with water as needed. This was in exact accordance with our manner of putting up fruits at the present day; which, it is well known is but the revival of a very ancient custom brought to light in the explorations of the ruins of Herculaneum and Pompeii.

And just here we may consider the beautiful story of the making of water into wine at Cana. We have no positive information as to the time of the year in which this took place; but if the Saviour went to the Jordan and received baptism, "as soon as He began to be about thirty years old," as the Scripture has it, He must have received the rite in the spring of the year. He went at once to the mount of temptation, and after forty days there returned to the Jordan, called His disciples, and went immediately to attend the wedding.

According to this supposition it would be previous to the wheat harvest and before the time of the ripening of grapes—even the earliest varieties—so that the freshly expressed juice of the grape, the preferred beverage on such occasions, could not be had. Consequently they must resort to wine sealed up or otherwise kept from fermenting, from the vintage of the preceding year. Some of this, being imperfectly sealed, might have fermented and thus become "vinegar," sour wine, unpalatable to their unperverted tastes, unfit to be used at a social gathering, and thus the supply fell short.

Then came the miracle of turning water into wine, fresh as that newly pressed with all the delicious aroma of the wine of Lebanon. No wonder the governor of the feast exclaimed, "Thou hast kept the good wine until now." It is a far pleasanter, as well as a more certainly true statement of the matter, than to suppose that He made this first exhibition of His divine power in the presence of the friends of His childhood and His near relatives to furnish a climax to a Bacchanalian revel. And if, as Canon Farrar supposes, the supply was so much greater than the demand as to make a welcome addition to the housekeeping stores of the young couple, we may imagine Mary and her sisters superintending sealing it up, so as to keep it fresh and fragrant as long as possible.

The fact that fermented wine was intoxicating, and therefore subversive of all the cleanly, sober, orderly habits inculcated upon the Israelites in the law as given to Moses, and indelibly impressed upon their minds during their sojourn of forty years in the wilderness is proof enough that sober, upright, pious men among them would neither drink it themselves nor allow it in their families or at their feasts. That fermented wine was never used at the Passover, is evident not only from the knowledge we have of the kind of wine in daily use among them, but also from the fact that leaven or fermentation of any kind was strictly forbidden at that feast. It would have been sadly inconsistent with what it symbolized in part—loins girded for an arduous journey—to have dulled their senses with alcoholic wine. Concerning this the commentators say, "fermented wine was in fact excluded by a general law which appears to have been well understood." "In the judgment of the ancient Jews, both the letter and the spirit of the law extended to the prohibition of everything known to be fermented." Why? Because fermentation is the sign of death, the beginning of corruption and decay.

Even when the Jews accused Him of being a glutton and a wine-bibber, they only meant—as the original Greek shows—to express their surprise that He should allow Himself to enjoy the ordinary food and wine in a social gathering where there was probably nothing of an intoxicating nature to be had. They thought, like all Pharisees, that a teacher of righteousness should be above common, social enjoyments. In fact, the Greek word used to denote the wine He drank was used without any qualifying adjective, and indicates either the grape in the cluster, or the fresh unfermented juice of the grape.

Had not Solomon had direful experience of the evil effects of intoxicants he would not have made that strong prohibitory law: "Look not upon the wine when it is red, when it moveth itself aright in the cup," etc., that is, when its bright color and bubbling movement indicates the presence of alcohol. Had Noah been accustomed to the use of intoxicants he would have had them with them in the ark—if he had been allowed to build the ark—and not waited for the vineyard to grow after the deluge before he had any wine. From the record of his accidental drunkenness from partaking of grape juice that had been allowed to stand just a little too long, bringing confusion to him and sorrow to some of his children, to Peter's recalling to certain of his former acquaintances some of their former sins as something to be put forever aside, fermented wine is distinguished from that used by pious Israelites as the beverage of sinners and the profane—as both provoking and symbolizing the wrath of God.

We understand therefore that it is impossible that the Saviour ever drank fermented wine any more than He joined in any other sinful practice in which the gay young man of His time might have indulged; and in view of all these considerations it is nothing less than sacrilegious to offer fermented wine—the symbol of death which is the outcome of sin—to those remembering Him who died to save us from sin, and to intimate that the last cup that He blessed contained alcohol is profane.

A BOOZY MAMMA'S HERO BOY.

BY JOHN P. ST. JOHN.

Under the above heading the New York World, in a recent editorial, said:

A woman was picked up in the streets of the seat of Jersey learning Thursday night, drunk, and taken to jail. Yesterday morning her six-year-old son walked into the jail out of the cold and storm with a shawl which he had brought to keep his mother warm. He loomed up on that threshold of crime and human weakness as a veritable little hero. No blizzard could be big enough to block the path of those tiny feet or chill his warm mother-love. He knew it was cold, and he wanted his mother to be warm. If the woman could only think as much of herself as this little hero seems to think of her she would never rush the growler or fool with Jersey lightning again.

"Yesterday morning" the thermometer registered a temperature three degrees below zero. The mother of this little "hero" was arrested in the street near midnight. He could not go to her then, for a terrible storm was raging and the night was very dark. With none but God to watch his weary little footsteps and feel his heart throbs, in a cold room, on a bare floor, shivering the night through, he watched and waited for his mamma, but she came not. Who can realize the anxiety, the suffering, the heartache of this little one?

After a sleepless night, hungry and half frozen, thinking not of his own suffering, but fearing his mamma was in distress, this brave little fellow, with shawl in hand, fought his way to the jail through the most terrific blizzard known in Hoboken for fifteen years.

It is easy enough to censure the mother, for it requires no courage to do that, even a coward can do it—but it is hard to muster up courage to lay the blame where it really belongs, and that is right at our own doors. What hope for the future has this poor little soul when such scenes occur without creating any special commotion in the very midst of what we call Christian churches, but which seem to be spiritually dead, and if so, whose spires pointing heavenward, are a libel upon the religion of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ?

What is destroying this mother? The saloon.

What will in time destroy her boy? The saloon.

Who legalizes the saloon? The government.

Who makes the government? The voters.

Who constitute the voters? Largely those who claim to be Christians—and most of whose names are enrolled on the church books.

Then who will be guilty at the judgment seat of Christ?

THESE VOTERS.

WILLARD HALL.

NOON MEETINGS,

BY MRS. S. M. I. HENRY.

For the last month the noon meetings have been specially preparatory to the evangelistic campaign to be conducted from March 7 to 28 by Mr. Charles Crittenton, of New York.

The effort has been made to bring many teachers of divine gifts to the platform and the responses have been exceedingly gratifying. City pastors and specialists in different lines of rescue work have occupied the thirty minutes given to the speaker for the day, have fed the people with truth and laid the responsibilities of Christ-like activity upon us each with great power of conviction. The result must be a deeper consecration and more earnest service.

The testimonies have taken a more spiritual tone. Less of dogma partisanship, personality and more of Christ, has become the rule that governs the social half of the hour. Many and touching are the requests for prayer that come through the mails as well as those given verbally. To-day comes the cry of a white ribbon mother from a distant state that we pray for her son and his wife who are living careless lives in this city. A few days ago a Catholic woman arose for prayer, remained to the after service and was converted.

One noon the prodigal son of one of our superintendents of prison work in a distant city came in and at the close made himself known to the leader, asking our prayers and help that he might get away from the wretched past.

Yesterday there was received a letter from the son of another white-ribboner who had been not only converted but wonderfully delivered from the disgraceful results of a career of crime. He had been helped to return to his home, and in the letter he gives a thrilling testimony to the power of Christ to save and to fill even the remnant of such a life with His joy and peace.

We are inspired at this noon hour by remembering that the eyes and thoughts of the white-ribboners of the world turn toward this central place of prayer and that in every place upon which the noontide falls there are found some to add their prayers to ours for the coming of the kingdom of our Lord in the earth.

AMERICA'S GUILT IN THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

[Read at the Polyglot Petition Meeting.]

Honored Representatives and Rulers of the People of the United States:

You have heard the cry from the heart of motherhood all over the world, voiced in the Petition we present to you to-day. To you, perhaps, it sounds faint and distant. You may not catch the note of agony in it; you may not realize that it rolls up in mighty volume to the throne of God, and enters His ear who answers as well as hears. But I have heard these cries at my side, on my right hand and on my left, from high and lowly all over the world.

For seven years I traveled in every quarter of the globe, and in nearly every country, in the largest cities of Europe and Asia, in the jungles of the Congo and Madagascar; at the foot of the great wall in China and where the Amazon and La Plata roll their mighty volumes to the sea; under the midnight sun of Norway, Sweden and Finland, and far up the slopes of the Himalayas; on the diamond fields of Africa and the gold fields of Australia; in the midst of epidemics of cholera and yellow fever—alone, grayhaired when I started.

Why all this? To do what one woman could do, by the blessing of God, to put an end to the awful horrors of drink, by organizing women everywhere against it. One item of my work was to procure the Petition you receive to be translated and put in circulation wherever I went.

I shall never forget the cry of the young queen of Madagascar to me: "I want to save my people from drink but I cannot. My hands are bound by treaties forced upon me by England and France. I can do nothing." Her predecessor, born into a heathen family, uttered the remarkable words that have been attributed to nearly every dusky sovereign: "I cannot derive benefit from that which injures my people." She lived up to this saying to the day of her death. Every tenth barrel landed was set apart for her, but all of them were stove on the beach where they were placed. Nor can I ever cease to hear the cry of that mother in Freetown: "Oh, the drink from the Godmen's (missionaries') country. It has killed my son. I am a lone woman now."

Americans began the traffic on the West Coast of Africa and sell all they can now, though hindered greatly at the present time by the Germans underselling them. We cannot throw off the guilt in Africa nor in the islands of the Pacific.

Even the honorable functions of our representatives in China and South America have been prostituted and they have become "touters" for American liquor dealers. I speak of what I have seen and therefore know.

Colored peoples are worth saving. They are as capable of elevation as European races. Again I speak of what I have seen and therefore know. I have conversed with persons of every colored race on earth who were as well fitted by native ability, by education, by manners, by elevation of character and purity of life to take the title of gentleman or lady as any white person in the United States or Europe.

But to turn to our own land. There are well on toward one hundred thousand babies less than a year old, asleep to-night in sweet unconsciousness of the life upon which they have entered, who will, during some year not far off, go to untimely graves because of the licensed sale of drink in our own country. Are not American children worth saving?

In the past Congress made it a duty to refuse entrance to diseased hides from South America, because two men were poisoned to death by them in a tannery in Massachusetts; and disease infected rags from Italy, because two women and a man lost their lives by handling them in a paper mill. Congress did well to protect the lives of Americans. Will it not protect these one hundred thousand American babies by prohibiting the manufacture and sale in the United States wherever it has jurisdiction and protect the children of foreign countries by forbidding exportation?

I know the moneyed complications. There is not time to discuss them now. We have had national crises in the past, when we did not for a moment consider money.

There is always an eternal justice and right for nations and governments that they must heed without regard to financial considerations if they would continue to receive the favor of God, without which no nation can endure.

We have had a glorious record among the nations as the pioneer of human liberty. I beg you, honored rulers, to be the leaders into the greater liberty of freedom from any complicity in the drink crime—to cast down the drink traffic from its national throne in these United States, and thus become the leader in the movement all over the world.

For God and Home and Humanity,

MARY CLEMENT LEAVITT,

NEW YORK NOTES.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The situation at Albany a month ago indicated the passage of a Sunday opening liquor law. In the meantime the saloon-keepers' prospects for such legislation has materially changed. There have been several committee hearings on liquor bills, the last one occurring on February 28, at which Mrs. Mary T. Burt, representing the W. C. T. U. of this state, made a strong argument against Sunday saloons. The situation at the present time may be briefly expressed: The politicians believe they will lose more than they will gain by the passage of a Sunday opening law. As long as they are of this opinion the law will remain unchanged.

An organization in this city, calling itself the Anti-Vice Society, has secured the introduction of a bill in the legislature entitled, "An Act for the Protection of Health and Prevention of Vice." It provides for three commissioners, to be appointed by the mayor of the city of New York. These commissioners would draw $5,000 salaries. They would have authority to district the city for houses of prostitution (or, as the bill says, "inns"). To these inns they would issue licenses, ranging from $250 to $500. Furthermore, six physicians would be appointed, each receiving a $2,500 salary, who should examine the inmates of these inns not less than twice every month. The bill also provides for six inspectors. There is little likelihood of this infamous bill becoming a law this year, although it is well for opponents of such legislation to be on guard prepared for surprises.

Assemblyman Ainsworth has introduced a bill in the house providing for the compulsory teaching of the effects of alcohol in the public schools. It provides that the nature of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics and their effects on the human system shall be taught in connection with the various divisions of physiology and hygiene as thoroughly as are other branches for not less than four lessons a week for ten or more weeks in each year, and in all grades below the second year of the high school, in all schools under state control or supported wholly or in part by public money, and also in all schools connected with reformatory institutions. All regents' examinations shall contain questions relating to the subject. Any teacher who neglects to teach as required by this act, or is a habitual user of alcoholic drinks, opium or tobacco, may on the complaint of three patrons of a public school have his license revoked.

Certain women in this city who were prominent in the woman suffrage campaign last year have organized a league for political education. The object of the league is to arouse among women practical interest in public affairs, in civic institutions and in good government by means of broad and systematic study. The league is distinctly for political education and is ready to help women of all beliefs and conditions so far as it can. The plan is to form circles or clubs either with or without special teachers. Any one who so desires may form a study circle and hold meetings in her own house, in a hall or club-room. The only outlay that is required for commencing is the price of the books, which may be procured at the league headquarters. So far two circles or classes have been formed.

With the renewed activity of the equal suffragists begins the criticism of their opponents. A divine of this city has made a lengthy argument against woman suffrage on the ground of the "contaminating influence of New York city politics." This seems to be a stock argument here just at present. In reply to it the following extract from the Mail and Express of November 4, a few days prior to the late election, is especially pertinent.

"Even in politics women carry their nice ways and insist that their headquarters shall be at least as spotless, if not as ornate, as their homes. They are also more courteous. When you cross the threshold there is always some one present to welcome you and to give you whatever information you may desire. It is very unlike either a Democratic or a Republican bureau. . . . Another thing that strikes a political observer is the conspicuous absence of tobacco. The floors are never pools of horror. Neither does a ward statesman on either hand blow into your face a mingled column of tobacco smoke, whisky flavored, and the remnants of some savory but malodorous free lunch. . . . Another very pleasant feature, doubly so by the contrast, is the absence of the "striker" and alcoholic "hanger-on." The women won't have them around at any price. The "strikers" know this, and, what is more, they know that the women will not yield to appease their insatiate thirst. For these two reasons they give the women's quarters a very wide berth."

MRS. C. B. HOPKINS.

THE NATIONAL BRITISH WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It is cause for gratification to many women here that the home office has recognized the wisdom of the urgent appeal made last year by a representative deputation on behalf of the National British Women's Temperance Association and the Women's Liberal Federation for the appointment of police matrons.

The letter which Miss Balgarnie (superintendent of police matron department B. W. T. A.) received recently from the home secretary gives assurance of satisfactory steps already taken, and the promise of permanent arrangements as soon as practicable. All women in London (except in the city, which is still under the control of the Lord Mayor) when under arrest will, if detained in consequence of the court not sitting, henceforth be seen by a matron; a matron will be in attendance if a medical man is required; and will also attend when women take their meals and perform their ablutions. This courteous concession to the earnest appeal of English women for a much needed reform will give great satisfaction in all classes of society. On the day that the home secretary's letter to Miss Balgarnie was published in the press, one of the most representative meetings yet held on the subject took place at Dudley House, Park Lane, when a large gathering of influential people, at the invitation of the Earl and Countess of Dudley, met to hear Mrs. J. K. Barney, of Rhode Island, United States of America, give her experiences of prison work in America.

We are now working hard in the interests of progressive candidates for the London County Council election which takes place on March 2. The present council has accomplished great things in respect to social and moral progress. They have improved the people's dwellings, opened parks for the people, and in administering the Weights and Measures Act have saved the pockets of housewives by some thousands of pounds. In all their dealings with labor they have adopted a "living wage" so that even the charwomen have been benefited under the administration of the present council.

In temperance reform they have made a splendid record. They have dropped licenses on houses which came into their hands to deal with. They have discontinued the use of stimulants in asylums under their control; they decided that drink should not be sold in the auditorium of places of amusement, of which the Empire music hall was a noteworthy case. You will not be surprised that all who seek the welfare of the people are anxious to keep these administrators in office for another term. We are doing all we can to arouse the woman elector from apathy and ignorance.

Out of one hundred thousand women voters, only five thousand recorded their votes at the recent vestry elections. We are doing our utmost to arouse the branches to active work during the next few weeks. The members are especially urged to canvass women voters, and inform them of the social and moral progress which has already been made in London; and secure their interest on behalf of those candidates who will uphold the present policy of reform.

We are eagerly looking forward to the return of our beloved president in March, and hope soon to see your dear chieftain once more in London.

With affectionate greetings from your comrade,

MARY A. WARD POOLE.

ONE MORE WORD.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In a recent issue of your paper there was given the origin of the term 'teetotalism." Were it not that the great principle of total abstinence seems belittled by the term arising from an accidental stammering of the tongue, I would not take the trouble to correct it. Yet it is better when history be written that it be recorded right. So here is the origin of the word "teetotalism," now acknowledged by English as well as American writers.

The author is Rev. Joel Jewell, who now resides, still hale and hearty at the age of ninety-four, in the town of Troy, Bradford Co., Pa. These are the facts as given the writer by "Father Jewell" less than a year ago, and which are corroborated now by English historians of the movement. In 1826 Mr. Jewell joined the old temperance society, whose pledge did not include wine, beer or cider. He, with some others, proposed the adoption of the full pledge. The proposition was voted down. In course of time a new society was organized, consisting of over two hundred young people, who took what they called the "total pledge." Mr. Jewell was secretary of both societies, and carried with him everywhere a book, taking names for membership. To those who wished to join the old society he added the letters O. P.—meaning old pledge. After the names of those who wished to join the new society was written the letter T—meaning total. From this came T—total—Teetotal. After eight years of work the old society was merged into the new, and the old pledge was a thing of the past. Father Jewell has been for over sixty years an honored minister of the Presbyterian church, and often preaches now, because he says "it does him good whether it does any one else or not."

DEAR CO-WORKERS:—Some weeks ago an inquiry was addressed to this department concerning

WHAT TO READ ON FINANCIAL QUESTIONS.

A general and, perhaps, somewhat vague answer was given, which however was a good one, in that it called out definite expressions from our readers, and from their recommendations we have culled the following books;

"COIN'S FINANCIAL SCHOOL," by Warner, editor of Coin, Chicago, price 25c.; "SEVEN FINANCIAL CONSPIRACIES," by Mrs. S. E. V. Emery, Lansing, Mich., 10c.; "TEN MEN OF MONEY ISLAND," E. Schulte, publisher, Chicago, 25c.; "MONEY: ITS NATURE, FUNCTIONS AND POWER," by R. S. Thompson, editor Beacon, Springfield, O., 10c.; "ERRORS IN OUR MONETARY SYSTEM," Mrs. Mary E. Hobart, New Whatcom, Wash., 10c.; "NATIONALIZATION OF CREDIT," T. V. Cator, San Francisco, Cal., 5c.

A correspondent says in the above connection: "I think nothing could help along the union of reform forces faster than for the thoughtful readers of THE UNION SIGNAL to become well posted in regard to the iniquities of the money power."

Another friend writes: "The Congressional Record that is printed every day Congress is in session gives an exact account of the proceedings of the day before. It contains the opinions of all parties, direct from the fountainhead, and is a most valuable reference book." The Congressional Record may be obtained by addressing W. H. Collins, chief clerk, Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C.

have been accumulating for the past few weeks, and we may use the space profitably this week in answering some of them.

QUERY.—Is it right for a white-ribboner to buy and sell—for profit—tobacco and cigars while she is a district superintendent of the department of unfermented wine and corresponding secretary of a local union?

ANSWER.—No. The spirit of the white ribbon alone, without any other considerations, ought to keep its wearer from having any dealings with tobacco in any form.

Q.—What is to be thought of a local union that has no L. T. L.?

A.—As the question is presented it is hardly in the form of a "difficulty," but there may be one behind it! Therefore—a local union without an L. T. L. is far from being an "all-round society," as a home in which there are no children and no young people is hardly a home. Such a union should send twenty-five cents to the W. T. P. A. for Anna Gordon's "Questions Answered," which gives all the information needed to enable any woman to form a local L. T. L.

Q.—In how many states are women allowed to vote?

A.—In Wyoming and Colorado they vote on precisely the same basis as men, i. e., for every officer, local and state; in Kansas they vote on municipal questions only, and in twenty-three of the states they vote on educational questions. Under this last head we cannot give the exact extent to which they vote in each state, as the laws are different, and it would require more space than we can devote to the subject. We advise our correspondent to send to the office of the Woman's Journal, Boston, where this information can be obtained in printed form.

Q.—Is it right to have non-churchmembers elected to hold office in a local union?

A.—A number of questions bearing on different phases of this subject have been sent to MOTHER EXPERIENCE from time to time. They cannot be answered arbitrarily "yes" or "no," as the term churchmember is not one that can be interpreted arbitrarily. The foundation of the white-ribbon movement is Christian principle and purpose. Were the term "churchmember" synonymous with the term "Christian," as it ought to be, then the question could be answered. A union should see to it that its work is done and its interests represented by those who have the spirit of Christ.

Q.—What can we do to offset the Boys' Brigade movement?

A.—It has been thought wise by many of our leaders to suggest to our women in the local unions to organize a fire brigade among the boys, appointing the regular officers and getting some man connected with the fire department to give them the drill so that they can be "on hand" in case of need. They will go to the fire anyway, and they might as well have the athletic drill and the discipline in the matter of obedience that are valuable not only to firemen but to all men. Besides, under the figure of putting out the alcohol fire, many lessons of the temperance reform can be imparted to them, as their work will be under the auspices of the local union. This is a seed thought worthy to be considered by our white-ribboners throughout the land.

Q.—We have nearly enough subscribed to rent and furnish a reading room. (1) What plan would be best to raise money necessary to keep it up? (2) What rules and regulations would be necessary?

A.—The writer adds to her question, "Our union is not only very small, but very unpopular," and I think we can all say in response to this that the union has taken a step which will lead to its growth and to strengthen it in public favor. (1) As to raising money: Interest those who ought to be interested. Put the matter on the basis of a public benefaction. A bright, clean, warm reading-room, where young men and women, boys and girls, will find only good influences, ought to meet with the indorsement of every interested citizen. Call upon the men and women of the town and secure individual pledges for whatever sums they are willing to give, these to be paid periodically—weekly, monthly, yearly, as the case may be. Interest the churches. Such a movement is parallel with their own endeavors. Interest the local press. Keep at it, "everlastingly at it." (2.) Rules and regulations are a bugbear to the ordinary young person. Printed cards, stating briefly hours for opening and closing, with rules for using books and papers, would be sufficient in the way of regulations, with an added request that visitors abstain from loud talking. Better still, is to have present each evening two or three of the white-ribboners, whose quiet, genial presence will do more to "enforce order" than any other one thing. Abundant success to the new reading-room!

Q.—Should the president of a local union vote at the annual meeting, except on a tie?

A.—The following is from "Roberts' Rules of Order": "The chairman (or president) is entitled to vote when the vote is by ballot, and in all other cases where the vote would change the result. Thus in a case where a two-thirds vote is necessary and his vote thrown with the minority would prevent the adoption of the question, he can cast his vote; so also, he can vote with the minority when it will produce a tie vote, and thus cause the motion to fail."

Q.—Please tell us what to do for dead unions.

A.—Bury them and "begin over."

Q.—Should the officers of a union be recognized as an executive committee when there has been no mention of it in the constitution nor motion to that effect through the union?

A.—Yes; unless there is an executive committee formally appointed by the union the officers always constitute this committee.

Q.—Is a superintendent of literature to use her own discretion in the free literature fund, or should she consult the union?

A.—Circumstances alter cases. If, as is too often the case, she alone does the work of distributing literature, she might well use her "own discretion." If the union be a large one and the members active, their needs should be consulted and the literature purchased accordingly.

Q.—Should all moneys pass through the hands of the treasurer or should the superintendents of departments merely report cash received and spent in her department to the treasurer?

A.—That is according to local arrangements. If some one gives the superintendent of mothers' meetings a dollar for her department she is at liberty to use it, simply stating its receipt and expenditure in her report. Were the dollar given to her for the general work it certainly ought to be turned over to the treasurer.

Q.—To whom do the minutes of a county (or any) union belong after the secretary's term of office is expired? To the secretary?

A.—To the union. The secretary simply is an officer in the service of the union; there is nothing personal in the arrangement.

Q.—Where may we obtain particulars concerning anti-cigarette leagues?

A.—Address Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, 4119 Westminster Place, St. Louis, Mo. Also see THE UNION SIGNAL, January 24, page 7.

Q.—Where do we write for particulars concerning Demorest contest work?

A.—Address Demorest Contest Bureau, 10 East Fourteenth St., New York, N. Y.

Q.—Having voted an appropriation for anything whatever in the work of the union, is it needful to go through the form of voting an order on the treasurer for that amount when needed to be paid?

A.—No. The vote for appropriation usually includes or is understood to include an order on the treasurer, though the best form is to move that the treasurer be instructed to pay the appropriation.

Yours for service,

Mother Experience.

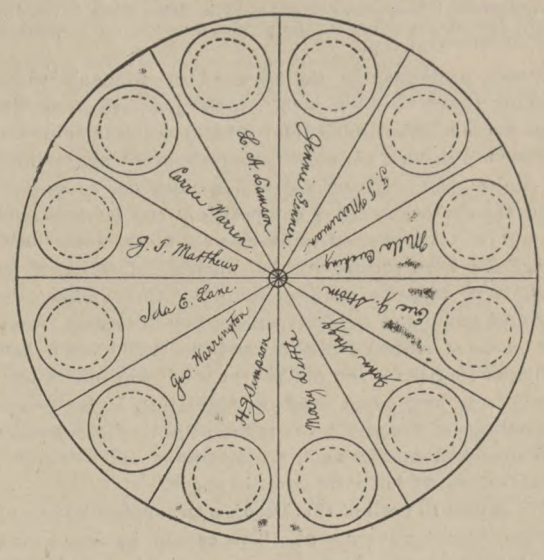
BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

PRAYER.—Let the weak say, I am strong.—Joel 3:10.

PROMISE.—The people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits.—Dan. 11:32.



While I write I am being whirled along on a train by the banks of the beautiful Hudson—not beautiful any longer for its life seems still and dead—only a great expanse of ice and snow. Soon it will be brought to life by the loving breath of spring and its majestic waters will delight the eye once more as its rippling waves, sparkling in the sunlight, flow toward the sea, bearing upon its bosom crafts of all kinds ladened with the wealth of the great Empire state. How our natures recoil from death in any form! We love life and motion. We get impatient even if a train is detained a little over schedule time on account of an overheated wheel. This brings me back again to the subject of Wheels and the impossibility of doing anything in a civilized land without them. This long, heavily ladened train could not move a peg if it was not for the great wheels that glide under it so smooth and swift. Although I admit to having a Wheel in my head, yet I desire to be fair in the matter and not give too much credit to them. After all, necessary as the wheels are to this great train they would be useless unless the engineer made a fire and got up steam to set them in motion. No matter in what direction we look in the world we are forced to admit the fact that no agency of itself is independent, there seems to be duality in everything.

The working of the Temple Wheel is no exception to the rule. It will take a million Wheels to move the Temple into the financial condition we desire to see it in. We expect to send that number out, but unless there are willing hands to give them a whirl among a dozen of their friends and pick up as many dimes, the work would be but a waste of time and money. We are glad to say the Temple Wheel is proving a great success. The children especially take to it most enthusiastically, and are proving a mighty factor in the undertaking. Deep imbedded in the substratum of human nature is the love of recompense. No doubt this has much to do with the great success that has attended the Wheel enterprise. Everybody that touches it receives something either for their labor or generosity. Rarely does any one who has filled a Wheel and returned it done so without asking to have more sent them.

Mrs. Belle C. Rowley, Wyandotte, Mich., writes: "My little boy received the enclosed Wheel last night and had it filled by ten o'clock this morning. He would like premium No. 1. Please send him another Wheel. We are very much interested in the Temple, and hope it may soon all be paid for. We think the Wheel the best method yet devised for raising money." Mrs. P. R. Steele, Emory, Va., writes: "I send by to-day's mail one Wheel which the Perry children filled, and they want three more sent to them in order to get the souvenir spoon. I showed them my spoon and they think it lovely." Miss N. W. Guttery, Morrow, Ohio, writes: "My Wheel, which I return was received yesterday. I filled it to-day with scarcely any effort. Please send me three more as I wish to secure the souvenir spoon." Mrs. Olive M. Bowden, Dunbar, Pa., says: "When the Temple Wheel appeared in THE UNION SIGNAL I told my little boy, Earl, who is only five years old, about it. He was very anxious to have one so he might help to pay for our Temple, as I have told him so much about it. I sent for two Wheels; they came this morning at nine o'clock and by noon he had his filled and ready to return. He wants the game of Pixies and another Wheel. My other boy will soon send his." "Enclosed you will find my Wheel," writes Mrs. D. Cunningham, Cadiz, Ohio. "and I would like to have two more. I think you have hit on a grand plan. Every W. C. T. U. woman should keep the Wheel in motion. If we would only be faithful in doing the little we can, how it would help."

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money order and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1113, The Temple, Chicago.

THE POLYGLOT PETITION.

[Address of Frances E. Willard read by Miss Anna A. Gordon at the first presentation of the Polyglot Petition in Washington, D. C., February 15, 1895.]

Home protection is the keyword of woman's work. Manufacturers seek the tariff for the purpose of protection to industries, adult and infant; trades unions are founded to protect the wage-earners from the aggressions of capital, and corporations and monopolies to protect from the encroachment of competition; but ten thousand groups of loyal-hearted mothers and wives, sisters and daughters have formed for the purpose of acting in an organized capacity as protectors of their home, the tempted youth and the little child. For this cause "there are bands of ribbon white around the world," and this Polyglot Petition is but our prayer that "tells out" a purpose of our hearts and heads wrought into a plea before the nations of the world. It is the protest of the world's wifehood and motherhood, its sisterhood and daughterhood—a protest "in sorrow not in anger."

We expect to present this Petition to representatives of every civilized government. This cannot be done in the usual form, because when once received this Magna Charta of the home would become the property of the various legislatures and parliaments, and our plan requires that it be conveyed from one to another. We are also aware that in a legal and technical sense no government accepts the signatures of those outside its own barriers. We have therefore preferred to make our Petition a great popular testimonial against the enemies of the home, but we expect that its presentation will give an added impetus to progressive legislation against the liquor traffic, the opium trade, the gambling den, the house of shame. For, while the last two are not specifically named, they are so closely interwoven with the traffic in alcohol and opium that the spirit of the Petition necessarily includes them all.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has circulated many petitions. The number of signatures and attestations secured throughout the world to our different petitions in the last twenty years aggregates not fewer than fifteen millions of names—probably twenty millions would be nearer the truth. In this estimate I include the memorials and petitions for scientific temperance education in the public schools, also for laws raising the age of consent and otherwise involving the better protection of women, not to speak of the anti-cigarette crusade and numberless local petitions circulated by the faithful hands of white ribbon women. We are therefore veterans in our knowledge of petition work, and for this reason are perfectly aware that the best outcome of such undertakings is the agitation and consequent education that comes to those who affix their signatures or who by resolution make the prayer of the Petition their own. For example, in the state of Illinois in 1878 we circulated a "Home Protection Petition," asking that "since woman is the born conservator of home and the nearest natural protector of her children, she should have a voice in the decision by which the dram-shop is opened or is closed over against her home." Two hundred thousand names were secured in a few weeks, some of us traveling from town to town for this purpose and remaining for months at Springfield, the capital, in the hope that the legislature would adopt the "Hinds bill," based upon this righteous plea. I need not say that we were wholly unsuccessful with that legislature. Not for that end was it born; not for that cause did it sit in the great state house among the corn fields of the Prairie state and near the tomb of the immortal Abraham Lincoln. On the contrary, it was a legislature chosen for no other purpose so explicitly as to legislate in the interest of the Peoria distillery, the Chicago brewery and the Illinois saloons, in which the "middle men" of those great monopolies dealt out their deadly product. But the reflex influence of the petition work upon the home folk of Illinois was such that under our local option law, in six hundred out of eight hundred towns, the popular vote that year was registered against the dram-shop, a larger percentage of temperance votes, I grieve to add, than my state had ever cast before or has cast since up to this day.

We prize the Polyglot Petition work because it has afforded a nucleus around which women may rally. It has furnished immediate work to new and distant societies which was essential to their success. The Petition has also been the peg upon which has been hung paragraphs and presentation speeches, sermons and songs in every part of Christendom—and the end is not yet; nay, the beginning is hardly here. Because we are patriots we have come to the capital of our native land to present this Petition first of all in the country in which it originated and which has sent out all the white ribbon missionaries who have secured its circulation in foreign countries. The greatest number of names, endorsements and attestations has been secured in our own country, and next to ours, in Great Britain. Miss Gwenllian Morgan, of Wales, has superintended this work in the mother country under the untiring and efficient leadership of the president.

We greatly regret that none of our round-the-world missionaries could be present on this occasion, toward which they and we have looked forward so long, and which their faithful work has alone made possible. It is well known to most of those present that Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, of Boston, our first round-the-world missionary, and the honorary president of the World's W. C. T. U., was the first who went forth with the Petition in 1884. Mrs. Leavitt was absent nine years, during which she visited practically every nation of the world. So far as I know there is no one, either man or woman, who has ever made a journey extending over so long a time and so wide an area as that of Mrs. Leavitt, without money—except as we collected three thousand dollars in small sums from our members after she had gone forth single-handed and alone. Mrs. Leavitt was followed by Miss Jessie Ackermann, of California, who honeycombed Australasia with local unions, federating them into a National W. C. T. U. of their own of which she became president. She also traversed all the Oriental countries, and in her seven years of journeying covered a distance nearly equal to seven times round the world. The journeys of Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell came next and have resulted in the breaking down of the system of legalized vice in the Indian Empire, and bringing to light the hidden things of darkness in the opium trade of India and China. Miss Mary Allen West went to Japan with the expectation of following up the work of the white ribbon missionaries who had preceded her, but after a few weeks of heroic exertion she passed away, leaving a memory that is hallowed by all good people in the beautiful Empire.

But the time would fail me to tell of the earnest women who have circulated this Petition in every nation. We could not have secured signatures in oriental countries but for the coöperation of the denominational missionaries who have been most faithful and devoted.

The labor of sending out blank petitions for signatures was largely carried on by our lamented Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, of Chicago, corresponding secretary of the World's and National W. C. T. U. They were gathered in and acknowledged by Miss Alice E. Briggs, for years the office secretary of the World's W. C. T. U. at the Temple, Chicago, and were mounted on white muslin by Mrs. Rebecca C. Shuman, of Evanston, Ill., the seat of Northwestern University. The dimensions of the task which Mrs. Shuman undertook may be imagined from the fact that the aggregate of time she has already spent amounts to about two years of steady work. The signatures came to hand in fifty languages; they are of all sorts and sizes, and were to be trimmed and prepared for mounting as compactly as possible on interminable webs of muslin, one-half yard in width, one edge of which is bound with red, the other with blue ribbon—red, white and blue being the prevalent colors of the flags of all nations and the symbolic badges of the great temperance movement of modern times.

The names are necessarily mounted somewhat irregularly, but they average four columns abreast, making, in reality, a quadruple petition, with about one hundred names to the yard in each column. Mrs. Shuman has now mounted 1,928 yards, or over one mile of canvas—making five miles of names written solidly, one under the other—771,200 in all. This is exclusive of about 350,000 names that came from Great Britain already mounted, making the total of 1,121,200 actual names on the document that will be submitted to President Cleveland. Besides these, there are hundreds of thousands of names yet awaiting to be added to the long roll. Nor will we ever rest until we have 2,000,000 actual names, besides the present 5,000,000 additional signers by attestation.

It must be remembered that the signatures to this Petition are of three kinds. First, the names of women; second, the written indorsements of men; third, the attestations of officers of societies which have indorsed the Petition by resolution or otherwise. The document has been circulated in fifty nations, and in the three ways stated has received over 7,000,000 signatures. The total number of actual signatures from outside the United States is 480,000. Great Britain, with Lady Henry Somerset's name at the head, leads the procession with its 350,000. Canada comes next with 67,000. Burmah follows with 32,000, and Ceylon, Australia, Denmark, China, India and Mexico follow, with all the others coming after.

Though this is a woman's petition, it should be noted that it is indorsed by perhaps 1,000,000 men—some by personal signatures, but most by the attestation of the officers of societies to which they belong. Even from far off Ceylon, which we are accustomed to think of as a small island of dusky savages, comes the signatures of 27,000 men, who call for the cessation of the liquor and opium traffic. The following are the

To name the countries from which these signatures have come would practically be to name every state from Finland to Cape Colony and from Alaska to Chile. To enumerate the languages in whose characters the beliefs of women have been molded to action by this far-reaching document, would be to make a list of almost every tongue that has survived the confusion of Babel. There are columns of Chinese women's signatures that look like houses that Jack built. There is a list of Burmese signatures that looks like bunches of "tangled worms." The thousands upon thousands from the spicy Isle of Ceylon are enough to make a short-hand man shudder; the incomprehensible but liquid vowels of the Hawaiian Kanaka jostle the proud names of English ladies of high degree; the Spanish of haughty senoras of Madrid makes the same plea as the "her mark" of the converted woman of the Congo. There are Spanish names from Mexico and the South American Republics, French from Martinique, Dutch from Natal and English from New Zealand, besides the great home petition from the greater nations. The total, counting men's and women's signatures, indorsements and attestations, aggregate seven and one-half millions.

In making this Petition we claim that we are entirely constitutional, inasmuch as the right to sign "has not been denied or abridged on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude." Perhaps this is the reason why we have secured many a name of reformed men. Catholic, Protestant and Pagan are equally represented.

It would be invidious to mention the names of signers, but they represent every grade of human life, and the great procession is headed by the name of Neal Dow, the father of prohibitory law, who signed when over ninety years of age, and who is hale and hearty, and would be with us to-night but for the severity of the weather in his own piney woods of Maine. Scientists teach that every signature involves somewhat of personality, not only in the appearance of the autograph itself, but by the impartation of individual particles that surround every one, and which project themselves into every deed that we perform. That this is true is more than likely, so that when we consider that every nation, tribe and people of the earth, almost, is represented; when we reflect that these infinitely varied autographs representing persons born and bred under equally varying conditions have found in this Petition against the greatest curses of the world their focusing point, there is reason to believe that by God's good providence we have in the Polyglot Petition the promise and potency of the better time when by the personal interdict of a higher intelligence and the conclusive law of social custom the sale of intoxicating drinks and opium shall be banned and banished from the world. In that day the laws for which the Great Petition asks and which we believe must be enacted as the most cogent means of education for the people, will no longer be required, but every human being will enact in the legislature of his own intellect a prohibitory law for one and enforce that law by the executive of his own will.

"It will come by and by when the race out of childhood has grown."

It is more than ten years since the Petition was written; if I had to re-write it I should assuredly include the enfranchisement of women among the requests it specifies, for I believe that our Heavenly Father will not suffer men alone to work out the great redemption of the race from the bewilderment of drink, the hallucination of opium and the brutal delirium of impurity. Hand in hand we have traversed the Sahara of ignorance and escaped from the City of Destruction; hand in hand let us mount the heights of knowledge, purity and peace.

BESSIE'S KITTEN.

BY M. ALICE BROWN.

My kitty wears a ribbon white
  Upon her snowy neck;
Save water cold or nice sweet milk
  She does not drink a speck.

She 'tends our Legion oftentimes
  And does not know a note,
Yet in her corner sits and sings
  Like she would split her throat.

The 'ciety that shields the birds
  She should be in I say,
For rats and mice are all the game
  She ever dares to slay.

If she could only learn to read
  Or write her name, 'tis Muff,
I'd take her to my school, and yet
  Perhaps she knows enough.

For she is very 'bedient
  Yes, rather more I guess,
At least so mamma often says,
  Than is her little Bess.

FAN.

BY J. L. HARBOUR.

It was a dark, cold and stormy night; the wind blew with such force that my father could not be sure that what he heard was a knock at the door. He listened, and when the knock was repeated he opened the door. Fan and Carey Tracy stood there in the cold, bareheaded and without wraps. They had been crying, and Carey's lips were quivering still.

"Will you let us come in out of the storm, Mr. Harley?" said Fan, with bitterness in her voice. "We've no place to go, and I wouldn't ask for any place for myself—I'd crawl into a haystack or stay in the woods all night; but I don't dare to with Carey. He isn't strong, and I wish you'd please take him in, anyhow."

"Come in, both of you," replied my father. "Why are you out at this time of the night?"

Fan hesitated.

"I'll have to tell you the honest truth," she said presently. "Father came home from that ferry saloon about an hour ago, and turned us out. He never would have done it if he hadn't been drinking. He isn't mean to us when he's sober. It's the fault of the saloon that he acts so, and I'll—I'll tear down that saloon to the ground! I just will!"

"But that would be breaking the law, and another saloon would probably be built in its place," said father. "Perhaps if you spoke to the saloon-keeper it might—"

"I have been to him," interrupted Fan. "I've coaxed and begged him not to let father have drink, but what good did it do? Not a bit."

She put an arm around Carey protectingly, and the little fellow clung to her side. My mother rose and prepared a bed for Fan and her little brother.

The next morning my father went home with them to see if he could not make some appeal to Tracy in behalf of his helpless children.

The man was sober now and repentant. He promised earnestly that this should be the last time that he would drink rum.

"But he's promised that so many times!" said Fan, wearily, following my father a short distance from the old house. "He promised it over and over to mother before she died, and he'd keep his promise if he could. He can't while there are saloons around. But there'll be one less in this neighborhood some day if this happens again!"

It did happen again. It happened three days later, but this time Tracy did not at first turn his children out of the house. He fell to the floor in a drunken stupor the moment he stumbled across his own threshold, and lay there, a helpless, degraded creature, a shame and a sorrow to his children and to himself.

Fan had put little Carey to bed before his father came home. Now she sat alone in the dim light of a smoldering fire in the rusty stove at one end of the room. Her father lay, breathing heavily, just where he had fallen when he had stumbled into the house, and Fan sat or crouched down on the floor by the stove and looked at him.

Her face took on a sullen, dogged look as she sat there. Her brow contracted in a deep frown and her thin fingers worked nervously together as she clasped her hands in her lap.

Sometimes she whispered something to herself, and shook her head savagely, but she did not stir from her position until long after the fire had died out and the room was cold and dark.

Finally she got up and touched the sleeping man on the shoulder.

"Father," she said.

He made no reply, and Fan bent over him and shook him lightly.

"Father," she said again, "don't you want to go to bed?"

He struck at her in the darkness, and sprang suddenly to his feet, raging and cursing. Fan knew what might come.

She ran to the bed and dragged Carey from it. His clothes were on a chair by the bed; Fan picked them up and fled from the house with the child in her arms, a ragged old quilt wrapped around him. She did not stop running until Carey's weight compelled her to do so. He clung to her, frightened and crying.

"There, there; don't be afraid; sister will take care of you," said Fan, soothingly.

She sat down on a fallen log, put on the child's clothes and wrapped the old quilt around him, saying to herself as she did so:

"I'll do it! I'll do it! I've said that I would, and I will! But I'll give Jim Fifer fair warning first. I'll go and tell him to his face."

"Where are we going now, Fan?" asked Carey, as Fan fumbled about excitedly, trying to tie one of the little fellow's ragged shoes in the darkness. "Are we going up to Mr. Harley's again, Fan?"

"I hate to go up there again, Carey."

"But it's raining now, Fan, and we can't stay out here in the woods all night, can we?"

"No, not if it rains, Carey; but we can—I know where we'll go, Carey!" she said, with sudden resolution. "It's where we've got the best right to go; it's where we've got a perfect right to go; come on."—Youth's Companion.

NOT AFRAID.

Once a week the children of the kindergarten are requested to tell a story of something which has happened at home, and this is one: "Last night I had to get up to get Yetta a drink of water, and I saw the stars shining, and I sunged twinkle, twinkle, little star, and I wasn't afraid, 'cause God was taking care of all the world, and He was looking at me, but I didn't see Him, and 'twas awful cold and dark." That child lived in one of the lowest and dirtiest quarters of the city.—Selected.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Some time ago a Cozy Corner boy was asked to write again and tell us more about his missionary "Aunt Jane" in Asia Minor, and he has done so. This Cozy Cornerer is named Morris Mc. Edgar, and he lives in Sterling, Kan. The portion of his aunt's interesting letter which he gives to us is below:

I was out calling yesterday among the natives and I will tell you of some places where I went. One place was a little house of one room. There were two doors in it but no window and not a single piece of furniture except a funny looking little thing they called a cradle.

We sat down on the floor. The sons always bring their wives home to the father's house to live, so there were three families living in this one room.

One of the women said, "I have a new baby and it is a boy." She had three girls but they do not like girls here.

They have a funny way of tying up babies here. They bind their hands and feet down close to their bodies, so they cannot move them. They do this they say to strengthen their backs. I always feel sorry for the poor babies.

In another house we went to there were some native women calling. One of them had a little baby girl with her. When the women got up to go away the lady of the house said very seriously, "May God be good to you and give your daughter a husband, and may you soon be the mother of a son yourself."

("I guess the girls are all glad they are not over there, don't you, Aunt Jane?" remarks Morris.)

It is a very common thing when a little child is crying for the mother to promise she will get it a good husband or wife soon if it will stop crying.

The people here keep to-day (January 18) as a feast day. It is thought to be the day Christ was baptized. For three weeks before this all the water is supposed to be full of devils. The people here would not bathe during that time. A devil, they say, will catch them if they get into the water.

If they have water in a vessel and want to pour it out they will set it down on the ground and pour it out very carefully. If they throw it they are afraid of making the devils angry and one would jump out and slap them in the face, and then their face would become all crooked they think. But to-day the devils will all be gone and then they will bathe and throw water as usual.

Morris adds these earnest words: "I hope the time will soon come when Uncle Sam won't allow them to send whisky, etc., on the ships with the missionaries or any others."

In giving our countersign he says, "I mean to do all I can for temperance" by the grace of God.

Well said, Morris, for it is only by saying, God willing, that we can hope to do anything we mean to do.

A warm welcome to this little temperance trio, and we hope they will come again.

I have been reading a very interesting book. It is "The Story of the Government," by E. S. Brooks. It is especially a book for every American boy or girl. I wish to say a word to the girls. Read your histories and books about the government so that you will be as intelligent a citizen as any boy. A temperance girl.

Mary's suggestion is a splendid one. If girls are to be voters (and it's surely coming!) they must know about the government which, after all, is only housekeeping on a large scale, as somebody has well said.

Please may I join the Cozy Corner? I am nine years old and have two older brothers. We all belong to the L. T. L. Mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U. Papa is a Prohibitionist. I like to read the Cozy Corner and crack the Soft Shelled Nuts. I made a puzzle to-day and hope it will be published in THE UNION SIGNAL.

O Lord God of hosts, who is a strong Lord like unto Thee?—Ps. 89:8.

"IT DOES MOVE."

Conservatism may be called the law of inertia in "the spiritual world." It is that principle in human nature which clings to present conditions; which would keep things running forever in the ruts in which they have been running in the past. Like inertia, conservatism doubtless serves a useful purpose, that of holding fast to the good attained by centuries of experience.

But there is an exaggerated form of conservatism which, like some housewives, would fill the edifice of our civilization from cellar to garret with rubbish which has no value save that of age. Such conservatism has lost entirely its true function of clinging to the good, and has developed into mere morbid passion for all that is old, and an equally morbid hatred of anything new. It is incapable of appreciating when things have been left "behind" in the forward march of humanity and utterly refuses to "press on to that which is before." From a beneficial force it has turned into a positive evil, a hindrance to the progress of civilization.

There are people who fully believe that in all essential respects we have reached the ne plus ultra in our social and political institutions; indeed, there are not wanting those who think we shall advance only by going backward. They would remand woman to the "sphere" of a hundred years ago; they look with distrust upon democratic institutions, and do not hesitate to say that monarchy is a safer, more stable form of government. They cannot conceive of the possibility of the ideal presented in a perfect democracy, of a society all of whose members shall have the culture, education and necessary leisure now possessed only by the few, but regard as a necessity the old time ideal of a lower laboring class which shall bear all the burdens and give opportunity to the upper few to develop the arts and sciences. They say regretfully that the art and architecture and literature of past civilizations are not possible under a democratic form of government.

The difficulty with conservatives of this ultra kind is that they cannot see beyond the end of their noses. They are so occupied with little, trivial details that they are utterly unable to see the great issues that are thronging into the present. The Pharisees of Christ's time were of this class. Their eyes had become permanently microscopic in their capacity from over much attention to the jots and tittles, and were totally unable to see the weightier matters of the law. The Great Teacher wrought daily His stupendous miracles before their eyes, but they were chiefly impressed by the fact that He worked many of them on the Sabbath, and that He was not well informed as to the number of times He should wash His hands before eating. In the midst of the magnificent opportunities of the greatest epoch of the world's history, they could find nothing of greater importance to do than to tithe mint and anise.

Those ancient Pharisees have a large following in this nineteenth century, and now, as then, they occupy positions of influence in church and state. To minds of this class to-day the question of individual cups at the communion service is fraught with greater dangers to the Christian church than the fermented wine contained in those cups and all the great problems of temperance, labor or our financial system. He who supposes that Christianity has "turned the world upside down" for the last time; who settles down to the idea that we have practically reached in our institutions, social, religious and political, about all that humanity ever will reach; who fails to see in great revolutionary movements the promise for the future, will do comparatively little in helping humanity up to new heights. Such a one may do a great deal of excellent work along the old lines; he may mitigate the present ills of humanity, but, to a very large extent, his work will die with him. Providing charity dinners for the starving, the establishment of hospitals and homes for the needy, are work good in their way, but he who sets in motion a single force which will tend to lessen the number of those who need charity dinners, homes and hospitals, does a work as far above the other as the heavens are higher than the earth.

Christ Himself relieved innumerable cases of human suffering; had He done no more His name would be almost forgotten. All of His miracles of healing failed to lessen appreciably the sum of human misery. He secreted Himself from the clamoring multitudes and forbade those who were healed to tell of their healing, because these labors of mercy became a hindrance to His real work, which was the setting in motion forces which should ultimately banish human sin and with it human pain and sorrow from the earth.

Now, as then, the multitude care little for the "signs" of divine power; it is the loaves and fishes that they seek. The charities of earth press on us. It is easy to allow our lives to be consumed by them. If we do, we shall commit the fatal error which the Master refused to commit. Work of this kind must be done with the utmost care or it will injure rather than help humanity. A wise, kind-hearted despot was a calamity, for he made bondage endurable and postponed the day when men would throw off their chains. The employer to-day who is generous with his employés is acting in a right and Christian manner; but one of the least of those who labor to introduce into the social system an enduring principle which shall help the laboring class out of the position in which they need generosity into one where they are assured of justice, is greater than he.

One of the finest characters in many respects which fiction has ever produced is Mrs. Humphry Ward's Aldous Raeburn, Lord Maxwell, in Marcella. And yet this man who in his individual character is admirable almost beyond criticism, has both the strength and weakness of the conservative. He does his work with the most painstaking conscientiousness along the old lines; is generous and kindly in all of his relations; nor is he a conservative of the hopelessly extreme type. He sees clearly the new forces and the new movements and realizes keenly that they are leading into a new world, but he himself is utterly unable to seize and direct the forces which are to be the molding influences in the new social order. "He was no democrat by conviction. Still every sane man of to-day knows, at any rate, that the world has taken the road of democracy, and that the key to the future, for good or ill, lies not in the revolts and speculations of the cultivated few, but in the men and movements that can seize the many." . . . "They filled the human stage—these men and movements—and his mind as a beholder. Beside the great world spectacle perpetually in his eye and thought, the small old-world pomps and feudalisms of his own existence had a way of looking ridiculous to him. He constantly felt himself absurd."

Such lives and such characters are not without their great worth, but the ideal character is that which, holding firmly to the good of the old, yet recognizes that present conditions are but a preparation for a better future and which is capable of seizing upon and directing the forces which are leading out into that future.

PROTESTANTISM IN TURKEY.

At this time when by reason of Armenian atrocities Turkey has drawn to itself the attention of all nations any literature which incidentally throws light upon religious and political life in the Sultan's dominions is read with more than ordinary interest by the Christian world. The recently published book, "My Life and Times," by Rev. Cyrus Hamlin, D. D., aside from its interest as the record of a somewhat unique missionary enterprise, derives additional value from the fact that the author was for thirty-five years a resident of Turkey. Of that important history-making epoch whose pivotal point was the Crimean war he may truly claim to be a part.

Mr. Hamlin graduated from Bowdoin College in 1834, and three years later from Bangor Theological Seminary. We find him in his student days an ardent temperance advocate. He has, he says, the credit of doing "two first things" in Maine—he made the first steam engine and the first prohibitory law address. His aptitude in mechanical science proved of inestimable value later on to the cause of Protestantism in Turkey, as will be seen; while his prohibition ardor increased and strengthened with increasing years and widening experience.

Having expressed his readiness to enter the mission field he was appointed by the American board "to Constantinople and to Education," and in 1839 took ship thither with his young wife in one of "Boston's rum and missionary vessels."

Dr. Hamlin's account of the founding of the Protestant church in Turkey, of difficulties surmounted and of triumphs achieved through the persistent effort which is the outcome of faith in God, furnishes most interesting and entertaining reading. Much opposition was encountered from the Jesuits, and once as the result of Russian hostility the American missionaries were ordered by the Sublime Porte to leave the empire. Political events, however, favored them. Mr. Hamlin and his associates remained, and, despite severe persecutions, succeeded in opening Babek Seminary.

One of the most interesting features of the enterprise was the industrial annex, established for the purpose of enabling the poorer students to obtain necessary clothing without appeal to charity. The results were gratifying in the extreme. Not only were the students neatly clothed, but the system was "promotive of studious habits, good morals and manly character," and convinced Dr. Hamlin that a "certain amount of industrial education is desirable in all schools of learning."

But, like all innovations, it received from friends a good deal of unfriendly criticism. It was said that it would secularize the mind and divert the student to a worldly life, and Dr. Hamlin was ordered by the "station" to close his workshop. It ended, however, in "Brother Hamlin having his own way in the matter."

When, later, the great anathema from St. Petersburg, designed to crush Protestantism in Turkey, brought about a general boycotting of evangelical Armenians, the industrial scheme expanded, and Dr. Hamlin showed his comprehensive grasp of the gospel spirit by helping these people to help themselves. In this emergency, he tells us, he saw as never before how absolutely necessary are capital and labor to each other, and what a blessing the man of capital may be to the unemployed. Capital was providentially provided and, with Protestant Armenians furnishing the labor, the milling and bread-making industry was set on foot. When a steam engine was ordered the Prudential Committee in Boston "thought Brother Hamlin needed to be held in with bit and bridle," but notwithstanding the prognostications of these gentlemen the enterprise proved an eminent success, both financially and morally. It was here that Dr. Hamlin's mechanical skill played no insignificant part in steering the Protestant ship through stormy seas safe into port.

The opening of the Crimean war furnished still further opportunities for the boycotted Christians. Besides the increase in the bread business, by reason of immense contracts with camp and hospital, the exigencies of war developed a new industry—that of washing! When the battle of Inkermann brought to the hospitals hundreds of sick and wounded soldiers, their clothing in such a condition that a general holocaust was ordered, Dr. Hamlin and his Armenian converts saw another open door. They came to the rescue with washing machines improvised from empty beer barrels, and with a force of thirty persons and six machines washed and dried three thousand articles a day!

Thirteen churches with schoolrooms annexed were built with the proceeds of the baking and laundry business, and thus these industrial schemes vindicated themselves

The coöperative system was followed throughout, and developed in the indolent Orientals an unlooked for spirit of industry, enterprise and inventiveness.

The next step was the founding of the first Christian college in Turkey. Robert College, named for its chief benefactor in America, opened in 1863 with four students. It grew slowly but steadily, and in the fifth year was self-supporting. After a long conflict with the Turkish government, permission to build was secured—largely, it afterwards transpired, through the diplomatic intervention of Admiral Farragut—and the college placed under the protection of the United States.

In the unsuccessful attempt to raise an endowment fund and the consequent forced abandonment of the college enterprise Mr. Hamlin met the great disappointment of his life. After thirty-five years of arduous missionary labor, he found himself in America with want staring him in the face. It was at this period he wrote and published the book "Among the Turks," which yielded him about five hundred dollars. Later he was offered and accepted the chair of theology in Bangor Seminary. He had left Bangor as a young man, seventy-two dollars in debt, and returned after forty years, two hundred and eighty dollars in debt. This is not what the world generally calls success! And yet the most worldly man living will admit that the success of Cyrus Hamlin's life has been beyond all telling!

At seventy-five years of age he is retired as superannuated, but now though his "life is fall'n into the sere and yellow leaf," he has, unlike the Scottish king, "that which should accompany old age—honor, love, obedience, troops of friends." As he himself expresses it, "The possession of house and land was thrust upon me by the kindness of friends, and I came down from the heights of poverty to be a land owner and a payer of taxes."

Dr. Hamlin is now missionary editor of Our Day and a contributor to various magazines and papers. In concluding the reminiscences of his eventful life, during which he has seen "every grade of human life from beggar to Sultan," he places the Earl of Shaftesbury and Lord Stratford de Redcliffe "at the summit of all the public men he has known." His references to Florence Nightingale and her magnificent work in the hospitals are particularly interesting.

And what of Protestantism in Turkey to-day? The blow intended to crush it—the great anathema—had just the opposite effect. It was the occasion of its establishment as one of the legal and protected religions of the empire; this subversion of the Czar's plan being brought about by the Englishman whom Russia most hated and feared, Sir Stratford Canning. So that to-day there flourish in the Sultan's domain one hundred and fifty Protestant churches. Dr. Hamlin points out that "the Turks are now deluded by their own fanaticisms and the policy of France and Russia to attempt the effacement of evangelical religion from the empire. But Turkey," he pertinently reminds us, "exists by the permission of Christian nations and should not have permission to persecute Christians."

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE AND THE HOME.

It does not seem possible that there can be need of longer replying to the accusation that the women who are seeking the ballot are averse to the cares of home and despise motherhood. The facts so utterly contradict such statements and are so patent that even a careless inquirer may easily find the truth. Woman's suffrage women as a class will compare favorably with any other class of women in their care of home and children, and never have they preached against home duties or urged that women should refuse to become wives and mothers. On the contrary, they have declared not once or twice, but constantly, that they hold home to be the most sacred spot on earth, and motherhood the highest and holiest responsibility that can come to any human being; they constantly assert that their chief reason for asking the ballot is because they believe that the best interests of home and childhood demand that the mother, the natural guardian of both, should be enfranchised. Moreover, they as constantly disclaim any hostility towards men.

Women do not desire political rights that they may change places with men and in their turn play the tyrant; they do not even wish to imitate men. They claim that the best results will come to man as to woman from the coöperation of both in all the activities of life; the greater the inherent differences between man and woman the stronger the reason for their participation in all things which equally concern both. In the face of all this, any one who continues to make the above accusations either does not make the investigation into the matter which the commonest justice demands of a person who is expected to speak upon it at all, or else he deliberately says what he knows to be false. There is no middle ground; there is no possibility of mistake to one who candidly and fairly informs himself upon the question.

It is, therefore, with the deepest pain, as well as some righteous indignation, that we still hear of men holding the highest positions in the Christian church, giving to these calumnies the support of their influence and position. We will interpret their action by the more charitable of the two suppositions, and we will not return railing for railing, but it should impress upon us all the need of continuing to contradict these slanders. We cannot hope to make any impression upon these "blind leaders of the blind," but there are those who will listen to us. Very many people have been honestly deceived by these statements coming, as they do, from men whom they have a right to expect will not make assertions of this kind with no other ground than personal prejudices. Such people will hear and weigh the statements of the other side.

One of the best results of the Suffrage Convention held recently in Atlanta was the revelation which it brought to hundreds of people that the accusations against suffrage women were utterly and maliciously false. Many people went to the convention expecting to see "mannish women," imitating male attire as closely as possible, and with their "hats on one side," according to the description recently given by a man from whom we had expected better things. Instead they saw attractive, womanly women dressed in most feminine style. They had to look among the fashionable belles of the street car who "would not go where woman suffrage was talked" to find women wearing the shirt bosom, four-in-hand tie and silk hat. They went expecting to hear these same women express their contempt and hatred of men and rant against the duties of home and motherhood. Instead they saw several instances of man and wife sitting side by side as delegates to the convention; they heard words of motherly love and tenderness for helpless childhood; they heard home praised continually as the most sacred spot on earth; they heard these woman's rights women scorn the idea that the ballot, "or any other creature" could ever turn the woman heart from its dearest loves—husband and children; they heard that convention utter its rejoicing with unanimous voice that the first bill ever introduced by a woman legislator was one for the protection of the home.

And these people who had been deceived by teachers who might have known the truth if they had cared to know it, went home astonished and with changed ideas of woman's suffrage and woman's suffragists. So it will be everywhere. The "common people," now as of old, are ready to listen to the truth. It is to them we must appeal. Let them know that notwithstanding the accusations of "the priest and the Levite," the women of to-day ask the ballot, not that they may use it against men, but with, and for, all good men in making this world a better and a safer place; not that they may disrupt the home and forsake their children, but that they may the better protect both home and children; that they ask an increase in their own privileges, a broadening of their outlook not primarily for any benefit which they themselves will reap, but chiefly because the greater development of mind and heart which will result to women, will make them more fit for the responsibilities of motherhood.

Apropos of the good work of the Chicago Civic Federation in suppressing obscene literature, the Chicago Herald graphically comments on the extent to which this evil prevails. Good men and women have no idea of the amount of capital invested in the obscene productions of this criminal trade. In some cases a million dollars, perhaps several millions, have been expended in buildings and equipments for the illicit publications. The means of distribution are equally as extensive and appalling. Adroit and alert agents leave no means untried for the introduction of their illegal merchandise in households and schools, aiming to reach the innocent and unwary. Parents, law-makers and law-enforcers can not be too alert in preventing and bringing to justice these soulless purveyors of vice and immorality.

If the wage-workers of any city would boycott the saloons, even for a specified time, and that time not very long, and would put the money into the funds of the labor leaders or the trades unions, they could soon make such an impression on the country that the reforms they urge would be effected. If we were a labor leader in this or any other country we should make an appeal to our associates to take this position. It would do them no harm (to say the least of it!) in life or limb, and it would furnish the sinews of war to put the propaganda at the very front and compel attention and action on the part of the propertied classes. It would not be necessary to put this before them as a temperance measure, but simply for their own good in carrying out that process of liberation for themselves and their homes from the present cramped and rigid conditions that they have set themselves to escape. Here is a way out, simple, straightforward, practical, and requiring only sufficient enthusiasm to tide a mass of human beings over the dead level of habit and inertia.

The Mothers' Society of Christian Endeavor is one of the latest phases of that great international movement for Christ and the church. I have been interested in reading their special pledge:

"Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise Him that I will strive to do whatever He would like to have me do, especially that I will endeavor to bring the children to Christ and train them for Him. To this end I will help all other mothers and teachers of the children in any way I can. I promise to seek daily the Master's blessing on the children. I will attend each meeting of the Mothers' Society of Christian Endeavor, unless detained by some absolute necessity; and I will come prepared to add to the interest of the meeting. When obliged to be absent from the meeting, I will send, if possible, a message to be read in response to my name."

On Duty is again favored with several choice documents, this time they are letters written for the great Polyglot Petition meeting at Washington, February 15. The first is from Mother Thompson and I give it in full:

"As your privileged ones are working up the affairs of nations in the direction of peace and sobriety, we little ones who heard the call of the Master so many years ago, are rejoicing in the repentance and conversion of the children (a son and daughter) also the wife of the saloon-keeper, in whose 'establishment' we held our first prayer service of the Crusade! By this sign of promise we may know that the God of Jacob is still with us, opening the eyes of the blind, executing judgment for the oppressed, and raising those who are bowed down! Courage, my sisters! you who are in the front of the battle, for the Lord is fighting for us, and 'the way of the wicked He turneth upside down. The Lord shall reign forever, even thy God O Zion, unto all generations. Praise ye the Lord.' Yours in the bonds of the white ribbon. E. J. Thompson."

Mother Stewart writes from a sick bed and in the shadow of a great bereavement—the death of her beloved husband, but her fervor for the cause is in no way abated. Speaking of the coming World's Convention in London, she says: "How I have wished to be one of that gathering next June! Nobody can understand what the sight would be to me—on the ground where I, nineteen years ago, laid the foundation stone (assisted by my Good Templar friends and the grand workers of all temperance organizations), upon which has been builded the British Women's Temperance Association."

Miss Jessie Ackermann's letter contained this message: "It has been my privilege to gather yards and yards of the Great Petition from many parts of the world, hence I am keenly interested in this meeting. I have often been asked since my return to the home land when I intended to take up foreign work again. I shall never take up work in heathen lands again. I have no message to the heathen; if I have a mission or a message it is to the voters of Christian lands." Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt sent an excellent letter, which is too long for this column, and will appear in the Correspondence department.

"The next is from an old-time friend and reads as follows:

"I have great joy over the union's achievements of the past twenty-one years and warm sympathy with your aims for the future. You are now arrived at your majority, and if youth has accomplished so much what may we not reasonably expect of full maturity? If you were only a callow youth of the male persuasion instead of an organization of two hundred thousand women, I might appropriately congratulate you on your now being clothed with all the rights of American citizenship. I hope that before another twenty-one years shall pass your power for good will be vastly augmented by the ballot. In the recent notable struggle for honest government in New York city, though the late constitutional convention had just declared against the enfranchisement of women, they promptly and generously responded to the appeal for their help. It is not strange that Father Knickerbocker chose 'the lady' rather than 'the tiger,' beauty rather than the beast. And when the nation clearly sees the alternative between 'the lady' and that tiger which ravens in every community and imperils every family, I trust like wisdom may lead to a like choice. Josiah Strong."

KANSAS JOTTINGS.

LEGISLATIVE NEWS.

I have delayed reporting news from the Sunflower state, waiting for some definite action by our state legislature; and now the session is nearly over. Many bills have been passed in which the W. C. T. U. have an especial interest. First in order came the election of Senator Lucien C. Baker, who was without doubt elected because his most powerful opponent was a man whose character would not bear the test of morality. Over such a defeat the W. C. T. U. ought certainly to rejoice. It seems like the dawn of a better day when a white life is demanded of our most honored public servants.

Senator Baker's record on prohibition is not all we could wish, but we have hopes he will feel that he was elected to represent Kansas and not that small minority who are always clamoring for the repeal of our prohibitory law, and that if our legislators send up a petition as has been proposed, to the national government, not to grant revenue stamps to dealers in prohibition states, that he will represent our state with credit by voice and vote. It is not too much to ask of him, although I am ashamed to say that at the banquet given in his honor, by citizens of Leavenworth where he resides, it is reported that wines were in abundance.

Leavenworth has always been in rebellion against our law and this open violation was probably made as flagrant as possible in order to have influence in the resubmission campaign, which the whisky men were waging. It is said that "whom the gods would destroy they first make mad," and the "influence" they hoped to exert recoiled in a different manner from what they had hoped, for it aroused the temperance element to a true sense of their danger, and in the end was, no doubt, the cause of their defeat.

The "German-American League" of resubmissionists (why should we have German-Americans?) announced before the legislature convened, that they should present to that body a petition of one hundred thousand Kansas people praying for the resubmission of our prohibitory amendment. At last accounts the number had reached barely ten thousand, which is scarcely a majority of the citizens of the state, and no doubt many of those names were borrowed for the occasion from some eastern Brewers' Association, who it has been said make a catalogue of the names recorded on the tombstones of the dead. When this "League" ascertained that their "petition" was not likely to be a success they again started the old, old cry of our great need of a constitutional convention, giving as the reason that our constitution was framed when the state was but thinly populated, and did not now fit the necessities of our commonwealth, the same resubmission crowd championing the movement.

The temperance people of Kansas are very jealous of any attempt to rob us of our temperance law, no matter in what guise it appears, and the "conventionists" were given to understand that our state constitution was good enough for at least a few years yet, it not being quite as antiquated as the constitution of the United States which was adopted when our nation was not much larger than the state of Kansas.

No doubt the same whisky crowd will be on hand again when the next legislature convenes, with these same schemes, but perhaps dressed up in a little different style to entrap the unwary. The W. C. T. U. and all friends of prohibition have need to watch as well as pray when the legislature is in session, for if "caught napping" some measure would be introduced by the liquor interest in an innocent guise that would endanger our welfare and the peace and safety of our homes.

The strongest kind of an anti-lottery and gambling bill has been passed and now our state and county fair superintendents will not find it so difficult to eliminate that dangerous element from our annual fairs, where so many of our young people have taken their first lessons in gambling. Merchants can no longer sell or give tickets for a draw when customers purchase a certain amount of goods, and even the church sociables can no more sell tickets on a bedquilt and the ring baked in the cake, and the vote on the best looking girl will have to be abandoned as a money making scheme to raise the pastor's salary. (Isn't that a step in advance?) The penalties imposed are severe, being heavy fines and imprisonment.

Dr. Tracy, of Kentucky, has been giving some powerful temperance addresses in Topeka, and the ministers of the city have become aroused to the necessity of trying to infuse a little more religion into politics.

A bill has been introduced in the legislature making it a misdemeanor for any one under sixteen years old to be seen smoking a cigarette—good news for our narcotic superintendents. Another bill makes it lawful for school districts to furnish pupils with text books free: should this bill pass it will make an opening for our scientific temperance instruction superintendents to get the right kind of physiologies in the school library.

A bill granting "presidential suffrage" to women has been presented, but has not yet been passed upon, and probably will not be; also a bill to have the suffrage amendment again submitted. The Senate has passed a bill granting full suffrage to ten representative Kansas women—just why the number was so limited I cannot say. This action was probably taken to make a test case before the supreme court, to decide whether or no Kansas women are citizens. I believe the house has not yet acted upon the bill. It is thought by many that the legislature could as well grant full suffrage as municipal. Who knows but that before we are aware of it we shall become fully enfranchised?

It is reported by the press that a movement is on foot among some of the leading equal suffragists of the state to secede and form a new state government "of the women, by the women and for the women," and carry it on by taxing the property of women only, claiming that their acts would not be treason against the state, as treason can only be committed by citizens of a country. The idea of itself is rather ludicrous, but such a movement might perhaps result in good as showing our lawmakers what a one-sided government ours is.

A bill was presented to the house to authorize county commissioners to pay the expenses of drink cures for inebriates from the public treasury. While this may seem a humane thing to do, I confess I can not see wisdom in the movement as a temperance measure, for while the county would be curing inebriates at public expense, the "joint keeper" would be doing his best to keep up the supply, so that it would be a "bonanza" for the liquor men and drink cures both.

The W. C. T. U. circulated petitions all over the state against resubmitting the prohibitory law, to be presented in opposition to that of the German American League.

Douglas county held a convention in Lecompton, February 1. Although on account of extreme cold weather the attendance was not large, yet the meeting was full of interest and enthusiasm.

Our state superintendent of evangelistic work had a long and serious illness, but at last accounts was on the road to recovery. Illness in the family of our state president has kept her somewhat closely confined at home but she hopes to do more field work now, and will be in attendance at spring conventions.

The spring executive meeting will be held at Clay Center in April.

RHODE ISLAND.

STEADY PROGRESS.

"No day is commonplace if we had only eyes to see its splendor."

The work in our local unions goes quietly but steadily on. And, too, we have been blessed from beyond our borders. Within two weeks the leaders and founders of three of the grandest Christian movements of our day have visited our little state.

First came Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset. Ladies in the good old Saxon meaning of the word "loaf-bearers," they broke for us the Bread of Life. Their advent was ushered in by one of the severest days that Rhode Island has known for many years. But, notwithstanding the intense cold and snow that impeded travel, the old First Church of Providence was filled with those eager to hear our beloved leader, and in the evening the largest hall in the city was required to accommodate those who flocked to listen to our two grand sisters whom the band of white ribbon has bound so closely together. Miss Willard's theme was the home as the foundation, not only of the best in individual lives but in the life of the state and nation. Her words, "Womanliness first and then—what you will," gave the keynote as she showed why women as the natural home-makers should have a care not simply for the upbuilding and strengthening of their own homes, but for the homes all about them.

Other brief addresses were given and then Miss Nichols, our corresponding secretary, summed up in outline the work accomplished by our Rhode Island union during the past few years.

She said:

The W. C. T. U. of Rhode Island is twenty years old and has proved itself a training school for workers and a dread to rumsellers. Since our Chieftain was here before we have continued steadily on our way. We have secured the passage of the anti-tobacco law, and the age of protection has been raised to sixteen years.

An earnest campaign was conducted against the repeal of our prohibitory amendment. Police matrons have been stationed in every city and good reports are given of their excellent work. Receptions have been held by several unions, at which Mrs. Mary H. Hunt has encouraged the teachers and school boards to give practical temperance instruction to the children. Mrs. Gleason has visited many of the schools in the state and taught the scholars the awful effects of tobacco and cigarettes, and stirred a sentiment against these poisons. She also addressed the Teachers' Institute in behalf of the enforcement of our anti-tobacco law.

The work of the local unions varies from the oldest Providence W. with its coffee house and work among street boys, and the Providence Y, with its splendid tea room, Rest Cottage and ice water fountain, to the six-months' old union at Ocean View, which has been such a working force in evangelistic work that it has roused the church, and reinstated prayer and conference meetings, which are held with power, and the community is deeply stirred. Some unions are interested in gospel temperance work, and hold services every Sunday afternoon.

Some are deeply engaged in mission work and help to sustain these soul-saving stations, while they give food to the hungry, clothe the naked, and preach Christ and His power to save. Other unions hold meetings in prisons, jails and almshouses, and send the gospel text with the ministry of flowers. Many public meetings have been held in various parts of the state, and we are glad to record among the speakers our round-the-world missionary, Mrs. Mary C. Leavitt, Dr. Henry Lunn, of London, and many National speakers and lecturers.

The work among the children is deep and earnest, and we are hoping from this reserve force to bring thousands of recruits for our white-ribbon army. At Headquarters a large supply of W. T. P. A. and other literature is kept for every department of our work, and last year more was distributed by our unions than in any like period.

Our National interests have had a large share of attention; over ten thousand dollars has been pledged and paid by our unions, and those whose hearts are in the work, for the Temple.

Every year we send good donations to the Temperance Hospital, and an effort is being made to do more this year.

Of our faithful workers much might be said, but they are more anxious to have "their works praise them in the gates," than to be crowned with flowers of speech. Their seed sowing is constantly attended by prayer and faith, and we trust the harvest time will show glorious results of their labors.

Next in order of coming was General Booth. Clergymen and Christian workers of every name gathered to see and do honor to the founder of that wonderful organization, the Salvation Army. The General pleaded earnestly that the heart of stone be supplanted by a heart of flesh, that our sympathies be broadened and our hearts set on fire with Pentecostal flames.

Washington's birthday dawned clear and bright, and as a fitting commemoration of him "our forces in the moral and religious warfare," the Prohibitionists and the Y. P. S. C. E., met in convention on that day. The "farce comedy," as the Prohibition convention was styled by the Providence Journal, met in goodly numbers and the report of the committee on credentials showed more towns represented than ever before.

A clear statement of the position and aims of the party was given by the chairman, Hon. H. B. Metcalf; the national platform was heartily indorsed; and stirring addresses were made by Mr. G. H. Niver, of Albany, Mr. Fogg, who represented the intercollegiate Prohibition Club, and Mr. J. G. Woolley. It was a rich treat and a time of strengthening for the coming campaign which will be pushed with vigor.

The Christian Endeavorers also held an enthusiastic all-day's meeting. The eager, absorbed faces of that large churchful of young people as they listened to "Father Endeavor Clark" was an earnest of good things to come in every line of Christian work.

GLIMPSES HERE AND THERE.

East Greenwich has had a visit from the Christian Crusaders. Christians have been revived, and very many have confessed Christ.

Monthly parlor meetings for mothers are held at Middletown, and much interest is manifested.

Washington held a parlor meeting in the interests of the Outlook.

Richmond and Hopkinton held a successful fair, netting ninety dollars.

A new Y has been formed at East Providence, called the Literary Y, because their time for the present is to be devoted to a careful study of the different branches of our work.

The Rescue Mission at Pawtucket has gone into more commodious quarters, and the work grows.

Miss Cummings, of South Africa, has visited several of our unions, and has raised in the state one hundred dollars for the work in Africa.

Bible Reading, led by Miss Reis, was given to the Providence Y. W. C. T. U. and their friends at the home of one of the members, subject, "Consecration." The annual thankoffering to meet the winter expenses of the Beacon work, was held at the home of the treasurer, Miss Brownell. Mrs. Wallace led in a Bible Reading upon "God's Great Gift," after which the offerings were opened, the texts read and money counted. A goodly sum was added to the treasury. The evening closed with a social hour.

Meetings were held each evening during the week of prayer at the Beacon, and so large was the attendance and so great the interest in the services that they were continued two weeks longer.

The Rev. Dr. H. S. Lunn, of London, England, gave his first address to the women of the United States, in Westerly, by invitation of the Y. W. C. T. U.

The "Local Conference," held between the W. C. T. U's of Westerly and White Rock, by invitation of the latter, proved an enjoyable and profitable occasion; and it is hoped may be the precursor of many others held in the fourth district. We can recommend these simple conferences to other districts.

Memorial services for our honored standard-bearer, Mary T. Lathrap, have been held in different places.

The outlook in our state is encouraging. The elevating influences of our local unions are bringing them more and more into popular esteem.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

WORK IN SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE.

What a wonderful opportunity for good work our National superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, has placed in the hands of every W. C. T. U. woman, and she has been most ably seconded in our state by the energetic and persistent efforts of our state president, Miss C. R. Wendell, who has been state superintendent of this department from the time of its inception. This is especially brought to mind, as it is at this time that our school boards are elected for the year and women allowed to vote at school meetings, and the adoption of the endorsed books and placing them in the hands of the children will be surely followed, if care is taken to select the right persons on the school board.

STATE NEWS.

From the pen of Mrs. Ina B. Hassell, of Tilton, I would report two successful conventions held in Belknap county, the first at Meredith, October 4, 1894, was the most successful one ever held in that county, very largely attended by temperance workers outside the unions. The program was filled with interesting and instructive papers on the different phases of department work, among which were the following: Mrs. L. R. Cross, of Concord, "Woman's debt to Christianity"; Mrs. Menon, of New Hampton, and Mrs. M. A. C. Calef, of Tilton, upon "Securing homes for homeless children"; Mrs. Brown, of Laconia, "Temperance work advanced by women."

The second convention was held at Laconia, Feb. 6 amid severe wind and bitter cold, the attendance somewhat smaller, but unabated in zeal. Papers were read by Miss Smith, of Laconia, Mrs. Eaton, of Meredith, and Mrs. Frank Brown, of Laconia, recitations by the children, interesting remarks by many members and a fine convention despite wind and weather. The W. C. T. U. of Tilton feel a deep interest in the inmates of Mercy Home, and have recently sent them useful articles, the gift of their president, Mrs. Osborne.

The Merrimack county convention was entertained by the Franklin union, Jan. 22, the new county president, Mrs. C. W. Hardy, Jr., in the chair. Reports from nine unions were received. Fine papers were read. Mrs. Helen G. Rice, of Boston, was present during the whole convention, and added much to its interest.

Candia union reports two fine lectures, one given in December by Dr. Ellen Wallace of Manchester, on "Hygiene in the home, in the school, in the church," and one in January by Mrs. Helen Rice, of Boston, subject, "The child in the midst."

Derry union reports an earnest, helpful address given by Mrs. Rice at Derry Depot, with a handsome collection and eight new members added to the union.

On Monday, Feb. 4, Mr. Renrick presented to the legislature a petition from the state W. C. T. U. for the amendment of the law relating to the age of consent, then only thirteen years. The bill has been passed and the age has now been raised to sixteen years. The National Eagle, Claremont, says in an editorial: "Think of it! the law guarding a girl's honor in New Hampshire extends only until she is thirteen years old, after which time she is pronounced capable of guarding her most sacred birthright, and placed at the mercy of every animal in human form. Out upon such a law! imposing no penalty on the brute who despoils her of her purity."

Our state organ, The Granite State Outlook, is published at Rochester, and not Exeter, as given in the list of state papers in The Union Signal, the editor Mrs. J. H. Fitts, South Newmarket, the state agent, our recording secretary, Mrs. C. M. Abbott, of Rochester.

Many of our churches have introduced the individual cup for use in administering the Lord's Supper. The adoption of this method has been greatly increased by the earnest appeal of our state superintendent of hygiene, Dr. Ellen Wallace, in her able and convincing report at our state convention. It is admitted by pastor and people that the attendance is increased, the spirit of devotion greater, and time of distribution less.

The women of Concord are to have their names placed on the check list for the approaching annual school meeting, the ladies having always taken a strong interest in their public schools.

It is to be hoped that every W. C. T. U. woman in the country has already made up her mind whom she wants on the school board, and will influence all her friends to attend the meeting. For is not the saving of the children of our land worthy the most earnest Christian endeavor?

TENNESSEE.

A FEW ITEMS.

A good friend writing to me recently wittily remarked, "Did you ever feel such weather and so much of it?" And I was compelled to reply, "I never did." The thermometer has been playing around the zero mark, sometimes above, sometimes six or eight degrees below, seldom above freezing, with the ground covered with snow and frozen for weeks at a time since the 24th of December. And this, remember, is in the southern part of Tennessee, a few miles north of the Alabama line.

Another friend, coming from the North for a pleasant winter in the "sunny" South concludes we are approaching another glacial period. Anyway, in the memory of that ubiquitous individual, "the oldest inhabitant," never before have we been through so severe a winter in this section of the country. Perhaps that accounts for the fact that Tennessee had no report at all in December, and only a little for the present letter.

Athens reports that they are circulating a petition for the repeal of the charters of the cities of Athens and North Athens. That is the only way we can abolish liquor from our towns until we can get a local option law, such as is now pending before our legislature. They feel confident of abolishing the charter and routing the whisky demon. They have one avowed temperance paper in their town, The Athens News, that will not advertise saloons or whisky.

The W. C. T. U. is doing good work in the prison department. Visited the jail Thanksgiving and Christmas days and carried lunch and fruits. They gave to each prisoner a Testament and held religious services. They were cordially invited back again by prisoners and sheriff and now hold services there every Sunday afternoon. They use unfermented wine in all the churches but one. They have thirteen women pledged to read the Scriptures and pray daily for the temperance work in Tennessee. This is done at the request of Mrs. Ada Elliott Lee, our evangelistic superintendent. The colored people there presented "Ten Nights in a Bar-room" recently, which was well received. They have several staunch Prohibitionists among the colored people and also a thriving Band of Hope.

Knoxville has a second W. C. T. U. now, called the Mary T. Lathrap union, of which Mrs. J. R. Lauritzen is president and Miss Nannie McCormick is secretary. With such leaders its success is a foregone conclusion. They have sixteen members and have taken up five departments of work.

Another letter from Knoxville, from the older union there, tells of good work faithfully done in spite of the bad weather. On the 28th of January Miss Elizabeth Yates, of Maine, was with them for a lecture, which was attended by a good crowd, though in the midst of a snow storm. Her plea for equal suffrage was irresistible and unanswerable.

They have been circulating the Polyglot Petition with good results. Their kindergarten, their especial pride, is doing well, even in the bad weather. They are hoping soon to begin their mothers' meetings, holding them monthly, and to push up their work all along the line when the weather is better.

A letter from Nashville informs me that scientific temperance instruction petitions are coming in, and that they are trying hard to remove Tennessee from the list of black states that gives no such instruction to the children. But they cannot as yet predict results. Unions that have not yet sent in their petitions are urged to get them signed by as many as possible and send them in by the time the legislative recess expires.

The purity department has a bill before this legislature. Its provisions make seduction under promise of marriage a felony. The penalty is not less than five nor more than twenty years in the penitentiary. But "evidence of the female's want of chastity at and before the time of the commission of the alleged offense shall be admissible in behalf of the defendant." That is the substance of the bill.

As superintendent of this department, I have written every union in our state urging them earnestly to send in petitions for the passage of this bill, and to write their representatives at Nashville asking them to vote for it and interest themselves in its passage. And I take this occasion to beg them again to attend to this matter as soon as possible and have all petitions in by the time the legislative recess expires. These petitions may be sent to me or to Senator Wm. M. Fitzgerald, house of representatives, Nashville, Tenn., who has charge of the bill in the senate. Hon. Sam. P. Rowan has charge of the bill in the house, and in both places, I think it is now awaiting the action of the committee to which it has been referred.

The form of the petition might be something like this: "We, voters and citizens of —— county, petition your honorable body to pass a law making seduction under promise of marriage a felony."

The bill was drawn up at my request by Hon. W. E. F. Milburn, of Greene county, who so ably championed the age of consent bill, that became a law the last session of our legislature. And he has been of incalculable help to me in this matter in many ways.

We cannot as yet predict results as to the fate of the two bills in which we are so much interested. The gubernatorial muddle seems to occupy a large share of the time and attention of our learned solons. But we are hoping they may give us a mite yet, and are patiently (?) awaiting their pleasure.

I will close by asking our unions to send in their next reports promptly, in time for my next letter, due April 20.

TEXAS TIDINGS.

It has been so long since I wrote a letter for The Union Signal I scarcely know how to commence. "My constituents" must not attribute my silence to indifference. Since November we have been walking through the waters of affliction. Our oldest son has been very ill with typhoid fever. Several times we thought he was dying, but God was good and spared his life. When our physician was dismissing the case I thanked him for not using alcohol in any form. He said: "I knew your opinion, and while I do not agree with it I respect it." Some time ago I had given him the leaflet, "Alcohol in Therapeutics." He said he had used the most powerful stimulant known, strychnine. Our second son has had a mild attack for the past month, and is just now sitting up. This long personal explanation must be my reply to the unanswered letters that have accumulated on my desk.

Our work in Texas moves forward. This winter the unions all over the state have been busy sending in letters and petitions to the members of the legislature to from twelve to eighteen years. That this foul blot was on our statute books was unknown to the large majority of the people until the W. C. T. U. began to agitate the question of removing it.

When the legislature met Mrs. Stoddard, our state president, was promptly on hand to do all in her power to assist the passage of the bill which was early introduced and fought for by Senator Harrison. Mrs. Stoddard made a strong speech before the senate judiciary committee which has been published by the leading papers of the state. During the second reading of the bill many of the best women of the city were present at the earnest request of the senators who had provided chairs for them in the lobby. The women showed their interest by braving the worst blizzard of the winter.

What astonishes the women is that the younger members all favor eighteen years while the gray-headed fathers are opposed to raising the age from twelve years. But the force of public opinion has compelled them to unite in passing the bill at fifteen years. There is little doubt that the house of representatives will pass the bill without discussion.

Fort Worth union has sent to all the pastors of the city a letter, requesting them to preach on the subject of before the municipal election which takes place in the spring. If space allowed I should be glad to include it in this letter. Fort Worth Central also supports a city missionary by subscriptions. The superintendent of railroad work has distributed thousands of pages of literature this month. They have tried to get a police matron but have failed.

Waco union has every alternate meeting a social one. A parlor meeting once a month and a meeting for sewing for the poor. Several new members were added at the last parlor meeting.

Marshall union is proud of its treasurer's report.

Hillsboro W. C. T. U. is in better condition every way than ever before. Not long since Hon. Jink Evans, of Corsicana, spoke for them on the subject, and roused the voters to punch out the eyes of the "blind tigers" which seem very open in Hillsboro. Prison work is carried on faithfully.

GOOD GOVERNMENT,

Dublin union is getting along better than for some time, feels very much encouraged. They contribute five dollars a year for the publication fund of the White Ribbon.

Corsicana W. C. T. U. has taken great delight in participating in the silver wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Yates. It was beautifully celebrated and many valuable silver presents attested the esteem in which they are held by their many friends.

Mrs. Mary D. Carter, of Brighton, makes an appeal in the last White Ribbon for MORE WORKERS AMONG THE SAILORS.

She attests that she has never worked among a class of human beings who have proven so universally generous and practically grateful.

Miss Carrie Lee Carter, National organizer, has been lecturing in Texas and writes as follows of her work for three weeks: "Lectures, thirteen; day meetings, three; members gained, fifty-five; honoraries, forty-one; pledge signers, eight; World's Petition, 296; union organized at De Kalb; Y. W. C. T. U. at Dallas. Storms several times prevented meetings from being held. On the whole the trip was successful, except from a financial point of view, expenses were so great. But that does not distress me, for I believe some good was done and everywhere I am invited to return."

It is a shame that our women should be so unappreciative of the fine service rendered by Miss Carter.

Mrs. Hoffman and Mrs. Woodward lectured in a number of places in Texas during the early winter, and all the unions were benefited, new members gained and interest created in our work.

have been held, all for silver medals that I have heard of except one for a gold medal in the West End L. T. L. of San Antonio. The medal was won by Miss Bertha Mehlin. The church was crowded, many standing during the entire exercises. Miss Fannie Chambers, state superintendent of medal contests, was present, and made a charming little talk. She is spending the winter in San Antonio on account of her health, which I am glad to say is steadily improving. San Antonio's Central union is well attended, and is busy trying to secure a police matron, as over one thousand women were arrested in this city last year, as Mrs. Fry states in her letter to the White Ribbon.

THE VIOLET Y'S

of Waco celebrated their first anniversary on February 9. They number twenty-three active and twenty-eight honorary members. Their financial report is very creditable. Refreshments were served and dainty souvenirs for each guest, a gilded white card with a tiny white ribbon bow in upper left hand corner. On one side in violet ink, "Anniversary Violet Y, February 9, 1895," on the other in gilt, "Faithful to Accepted Trust." Two young men signed the pledge.

A queer mistake was made in my November letter. Among the promoted I put the name of Mrs. Lizzie D. Johnson, our state superintendent of prison work. It was her mother-in-law, who bore the same name. Mrs. Johnson writes that she is very much alive, and hopes to spend many years in the employ of her beloved Master.

In the early winter Miss Norma Mow, a lovely young girl of seventeen, died of consumption. She was editor for several years of The Texas Blue Violet, which was adopted as the state paper of the L. T. L. It is proposed that Miss Norma's name be put on a tablet in the Temple. She was a niece of

IDAHO.

ON THE MOVE.

Reports from Idaho do not appear often in print, but remember, please, we are on the move.

The Idaho legislature has been in session at Boise City, our capital, for several weeks. Important bills have been passed which reflect great credit on our legislators.

A bill has passed amending the constitution, giving women the right to vote, submitting it (at the next general election) to the votes of the people. It passed with but few dissenting votes.

The age of consent was raised from fourteen to eighteen years.

An effort was made to reduce saloon licenses, but failed; if we must have license let it be high.

Our state president, Mrs. Rebecca Mitchell, has been at Boise City during the session, and has done good work. While there she has held services at the penitentiary every Sabbath morning; the hearts of some of the poor unfortunates have been won by her earnest, motherly talks, and have expressed themselves as trying to be followers of Jesus.

The Boise City union held a gospel temperance meeting, led by Mrs. Mitchell.

Memorial services for Mary T. Lathrap, late president of Michigan, were properly observed, February 3, by this union. The state executive committee met at Boise City February 8. The next annual convention will be held at Idaho Falls in September.

MISSISSIPPI.

ITEMS.

The state reporter for Mississippi pleads guilty to a neglect of duty owing to sickness and change of residence, etc.

At a meeting of state executive committee in Greenville, December 11, reports showed faithful work on part of officers and increased interest in unions.

Plans for establishing a state paper have not been abandoned.

Our faithful and efficient corresponding secretary, Mrs. N. N. Somerville, writes, "I can say this much, our work is more closely directed and reported than ever before, and more money has been put into state work. Most of our state superintendents have had something for expenses, which is something new in Mississippi. I am never discouraged but content to build slowly, if the progress is real and in the right line. Our state superintendents reported to the National, and our treasurer paid in more money than last year. All these make the sum total of a substantial gain in systems."

Wesson, McComb, Iuka, Columbus, Holly Springs, Vicksburg, Oxford and Brookhaven have made reports which show that they still live to some purpose. As usual the cry is for reports which so seldom come.

Our state convention will meet in Natchez on May 5, when we hope to plant a tree which will bear good fruit. Mrs. Mount, our president, is working now to insure its success.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

Owing to the impossibility of her giving to the National department of legislation and petitions the time and attention that the work requires, which is one of the most important and far-reaching in the National union, Mrs. Mary T. Burt resigned the department a few weeks ago.

A county Y conference was held in Pesotum, Champaign county, Ill., February 28 to March 1, under direction of Miss Mary Mahon, state Y secretary, whose addresses each evening captivated the audience. Several new names were secured for the local union and quite a number of subscriptions for our papers.

Action was taken at the last meeting of board of National superintendents at Cleveland, expressing great appreciation of the valuable service rendered by Mrs. Mary F. Lovell, superintendent of department of mercy, as chairman of the board for the past year; and of the faithfulness of Mrs. Winnie F. English, superintendent of work among miners, who had served three years as secretary. Mrs. C. M. Woodward, superintendent of the railway department, was elected chairman of the board of superintendents for the coming year, and Dr. Annette Shaw, superintendent of health and heredity, secretary.

The Prohibitionists, the Independent Labor Party and the Populists of Cleveland, O., have united in nominating Mrs. S. M. Perkins for the school council. This may be a slight indication that these parties may unite in reform work in the future and become a power in the land. When this union is secured the saloons must go.

The local superintendent of mothers' meetings, Mrs. L. A. Howard, of North Springfield, Mo., in speaking of the profitable work of their union in this line mentions the greatest obstacle to mothers' meetings as being the difficulty in obtaining suitable literature at rates cheap enough to purchase with the small amount at their disposal.

An earnest worker at Rollo, Mo., starting out with Mrs. Hoffman's appeal and a copy of the Polyglot Petition, succeeded in spite of many obstacles, born of ignorance on the subject, in securing quite a list of names. The uninformed were reminded through her efforts that if they had read The Union Signal they would know more of what was being done in the world by women.

Mrs. H. E. Hammond, editor of the Ohio W. C. T. U. Messenger, has received and accepted the nomination for school council from the recent prohibition convention in Cleveland. This choice is a peculiarly wise one, for if elected, Mrs. Hammond would bring to the office a ripe experience and practical ability. She is a full-fledged equal suffragist, a desirable speaker and ardent W. C. T. U. worker, as well.

The press of Southern California and the white ribbon workers, their friends and allies, speak in unstinted words of praise concerning the work of Major E. T. and Mrs. Scott. They have recently stirred large audiences in South Riverside, Redlands and Santa Monica. March 4 they begin a week of meetings at Colton, March 12 at San Jacinto, following at Riverside and Downey, each a week.

The Y's had a highly successful mass-meeting on Sunday evening during the recent county convention at Berea, O. The program was varied and original. An honorary, Mr. Howard Young, gave an address, taking for his topic the first part of the National W. C. T. U. motto, "For God;" Miss Mabel Leach took the second part, "For Home," and the choir sang "Home, Sweet Home." Mrs. Henry Hill, county Y superintendent, presided.

A fine opportunity to work for sailors has opened at Saunderstown, Rhode Island. This town is on the coast of Narragansett Bay close to Dutch Island harbor, where vessels of every description and from all ports come for harbor and sometimes are at anchor for many days. The local superintendent for seamen, Mrs. Eaton, has taken up the work with vigor, having unusual facilities from her husband's position as a state pilot. The post-mistress is a member of W. C. T. U. Her coöperation is valuable to the local superintendent. Personal letters, printed literature and the home faces of motherly women go very far to soften the sailor's heart.

Charlottesville, Va., white ribbon workers display such activity and enthusiasm as to greatly interest and surprise a northern visitor who has recently gone among them. They have been inspired by the presence of Mrs. Anne G. Randolph of Carthage, Ill., who was district organizer in her county and is a strong woman, mentally and spiritually. Besides the regular weekly meetings of the W. C. T. U. under the efficient leadership of Mrs. W. C. Payne, "Mothers' Meetings" are held monthly. Public meetings that promise to exert a wide influence, are gaining the good will of young and old. From the programs prepared, the way is open to spread the principles for which we contend. Refreshments, served at the close of the exercises, is a "taking" feature of these occasions. Cultivate the social element.

The Somerset Y union in the Fitchburg, Mass., high school was organized by Mrs. Barnes last fall, and is presided over by Miss Elizabeth Sleeper. Ninety-nine members are enrolled, and about one hundred and fifty were present at a recent meeting. Twelve different temperance periodicals are subscribed for and read by members, eight copies being placed in the public library. The flower mission sends flowers to the jail and a friendly letter at Christmas time. The superintendent of press work supplies half a column of temperance items in the Saturday edition of the local papers each week. A box or barrel will soon be sent to a lumberman's camp. And a nice book is to be presented in a temperance story contest, stories to be handed in the first day of the high school term. This Somerset Y under its wise leadership is an example showing what an earnest teacher and enthusiastic scholars can accomplish for God and Home and Every Land.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

From the shadow of a great sorrow and in the light of a great joy I am writing to the dear sisterhood once more. That "mystery" which lies before us each as we "follow that way" has come very near to my own life, and instead of filling the lecture engagement made for to-night I find myself watching by what will, without doubt, prove the dying bed of my only surviving parent, the gentlest, truest, most absolutely selfless of fathers. Therein lies the sorrow—in the thought of facing life without the knowledge that his true heart is beating somewhere as the refuge which never failed his child.

The joy comes in the memory of his long life of absolutely uninterrupted usefulness—fifty-four years given to the active work of the Christian ministry, and in seeing the calmness and triumphant serenity with which, in the midst of sore physical infirmities, he faces "the last, great enemy." Surely death ceases to be an enemy when thus disarmed. For him I have only gladness; for myself—you will bear with me a little, sisters, for you know what the tie is, and that it is not always easy to feel, although we know, that it is not broken by death—only purified and made more blessedly enduring. You will pray for me. I need not ask that.

Remember that the securing of signatures to the Great Petition does not stop but may go on up to its presentation in London and perhaps after that. Therefore the enthusiasm with which you so nobly responded to the last appeal need not cease. Keep on sending for blanks to me at The Temple, and send the signatures as heretofore, to Mrs. Rebecca Shuman, 2130 Sherman avenue, Evanston, Ill. That modest little white-ribboner has done a work of which kings and potentates might well be proud. It seemed too bad that she could not go with the Petition to Washington, but she may be able to witness its triumph in London next June. Help her to make it a grand one whoever may witness it.

The phonograph of which mention has been hitherto made, will be set up in the Temple very soon and we are hoping that under its benign influence the Lathrap fund for work among colored people, as well as the Woodbridge fund for free distribution of literature, may swell up to a grand total. Further particulars for the modus operandi of both funds will be given on my return to the Temple. It was a specially happy inspiration on the part of the Chieftain which linked Mrs. Lathrap's name with our work among colored people. Her interest in this work was always most keen, and it was a matter of personal delight to her that over her own district in Michigan, a colored woman—Mrs. Lucy Thurman, our efficient National superintendent—was president. There is equal fitness also in linking Mrs. Woodbridge's name with literature, since none knew its importance more than she. Be ready to "boom" these two funds in the coming months.

As a special incentive to earnest effort we have decided to fix the limit for reporting gain of membership upon October 1 instead of August 15. It will be necessary, however, to have the reports in promptly at that time, both in order that the program for the National Convention may not be delayed and that Miss Willard may be able to arrange her own dates in such a way as to accommodate the two chief victors. Do not forget that the Convention will be three weeks earlier than last year, and begin on county and district meetings betimes.

You will notice a blank in the Annual Leaflet, where the name of the superintendent of legislation and petition work should be, and will doubtless think it strange, remembering that Mrs. Mary T. Burt's name graced that place in the National Minutes. Mrs. Burt was indeed appointed, and at first felt that she could accept, but because of the multiplicity of her cares as president of the largest state in W. C. T. U. work, finally decided she could not, therefore the blank. At the meeting of the general officers in Washington Mrs. M. B. Ellis, the efficient corresponding secretary of New Jersey, was appointed to fill the vacancy, and in a letter most characteristic of her modest intrepidity, she accepts. Therefore address all letters concerning this department to its new superintendent, who will soon make herself felt in it at 174 North Third Street, Newark, N. J.

Apropos of the Annual Leaflet: that malicious fiend who superintends all proof-reading and seems determined that no piece of work shall be absolutely without flaw, put his finger into my pie, when it was almost finished and made me omit the name of Mrs. Lucie B. Away off in Alabama organizing W. C. T. U's, I was kept three days in one place by the extreme cold weather; looking about me as to the most profitable way to spend the time I determined upon house to house visitations. In one of the homes visited I met a dear saintly woman of eighty years, who was an inspiration to me and I know will be to others, so I write a part of our conversation to our white ribbon host: "Fifty years ago," exclaimed this saint, "I used to ride eight miles to Sunday-school on horseback, and carried all the books we used in the Sunday-school back and forth to the log school house where the Sunday-school was held. I was the superintendent, teacher and all, and taught many all they ever knew of books. I even taught many of the grown people to read; I did this for years, and finally won my husband to Christ. He died last year one hundred and six years old, a happy Christian. I don't know what the Lord keeps me here so long for unless it is because I claimed a long life from Him one time when they thought I was going to die. I said, 'I am ready to go but I have yet more work I want to do." I have kept the command, "Honor thy father and thy mother," and God has promised that my days shall be long. I know I am not going to die now,' and I did not die."

"Did you ever teach the colored people?" I asked.

"Oh, yes, all I could. One of them got to be a preacher. After the war he became offended with me, left the state, was not gone long until he came back, asked my pardon and said I was the cause of his ever being a preacher."

I told her of the white ribbon army and what they were doing for temperance; how her eyes glistened and how enthusiastic she became. "I have always worked for temperance. I never would use liquors or have it in my house. Oh, I am glad of this work—I would like to be one of them"—out came my white ribbon and I pinned our badge on her black dress and I said, "You are one of us, grandma." I told her of our noontide prayer, and asked that she join in it with us. She said she would do so. Then I bade her good-bye, feeling the help and comfort that comes from contact with one of God's own.

POLYGLOT PETITION.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society, and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

Our Library Table.

AMONG THE MAGAZINES.

The Century for March continues the "Life of Napoleon Bonaparte," by William M. Sloane. The numerous illustrations of this historical narrative are a beautiful and valuable addition to the author's work.

"The Art of Living," by Robert Grant, published in Scribner's March issue discusses "House-furnishing and the Commissariat." Mr. Grant's humor and satire illuminate what he has to say and render his articles very brightly attractive.

Lippincott's leading story for the month entitled, "A Tame Surrender," by Captain Charles King, U. S. A., is an admirable sketch of the late Chicago strike. The title, however, has to do with the love side of the narrative, for, as usual, there is "a woman in it."

The Charities Review for March publishes an admirable article upon "The Problem of Charity," by Frederic Almy. The distinction between charity and alms is emphasized, and the elevating or demoralizing effect of various methods of bestowing charity very clearly shown.

The New England Magazine in its March issue, gives the history of the founding of the Northampton Association of Education and Industry, in an article by Olive Rumsey. "Massachusetts in the Civil War," by Thos. S. Townsend, relates acts of bravery performed by the heroic sons of that state and of the prominent part taken by the old Bay State in aiding to preserve the Union.

That vigorous writer of fiction, John T. Trowbridge, tells in the March Atlantic Monthly how he was led to turn his power of pen upon the great theme of abolition. His paper is titled "Some Confessions of a Novel Writer." Two papers of importance are "Immigration and Naturalization," by H. Sidney Everett, and "Some Words on the Ethics of Coöperative Production," by J. M. Ludlow.

The Church At Home and Abroad is rich with information of the work of that sturdy branch of Christ's church on earth—the Presbyterians. The March issue, aside from its complete table of items, facts and statistics, contains timely articles of general interest. Among these are: "The Red Cross Society at Tientsin," by Boudinot C. Atterbery, M. D., and "The Power of the Spirit," by George P. Wilson, D. D. An editorial upon "Early Christian Communism" is especially able.

One of the most valuable features of the Annals of the American Academy is the series of papers which it contains on Sociological questions. This is now augmented by the Department of Sociological Notes edited by Dr. Samuel M. Lindsay. In the March number this department contains much valuable information. There are besides in this number three papers on Sociology. One by Prof. H. H. Powers, on "Terminology and the Sociological Conference;" one by Prof. Albion W. Small on "The Organic Concept of Society," and one by Prof. F. H. Giddings on "Sociology and the Abstract Sciences."

AMONG THE BOOKS.

"As Natural As Life." A booklet, comprising four sermonettes, styled "Studies of the Inner Kingdom," by Charles G. Ames, minister of the Church of the Disciples, Boston. The subjects are practical, and handled with force, ease and eloquence.

James H. West, publisher, 174 High St., Boston.

Abandoning an Adopted Farm, by Kate Sanborn. Published by D. Appleton & Co., New York. Price 75 cts.

To thoroughly enjoy this little volume one should have read a preceding publication, "Adopting an Abandoned Farm," by the same author. But even without this preparation, the former book is full of charm, as is everything from Kate Sanborn's pen. Her abandon in writing coupled with her irrepressible wit, bright humor, keen sarcasms and hard good sense, puts her far above the "common run." In the book in question she touches off woman's weaknesses with inimitable skill, even while in almost the same breath of utterance she emphasizes her strong points. Her recommendations of "Outdoors, M. D.," her wise words about women and farming, and her rich anecdotes of celebrated people are attractive portions of this breezy little production.

Sickness Among Children,

is prevalent at all seasons of the year, but can be avoided largely when they are properly cared for. Infant Health is the title of a valuable pamphlet accessible to all who will send address to the N. Y. Condensed Milk Co., N. Y. City.

OUR BOW PIN.

We desire to call the attention of our women to the new white ribbon badge. It consists of a bow pin of white enamel on sterling silver and will meet a very general demand for a "white ribbon" which has some intrinsic as well as distinctive value, and which—like the inclusive "aim" of the organization it represents—will retain its pristine purity and all opposing forces. Every W and every Y should wear one of these truly symbolical pins.

"WERE you moved by her music?" "Yes; it amounted to that. I think we should have kept the flat for another year if it hadn't been for her."

IF a colored waiter carrying a roast turkey should drop it what effect would it have on the nations of the earth? It would be the downfall of Turkey, the overthrow of Greece, the breaking up of China and the humiliation of Africa.

TWO VALUABLE BOOKS FOR MOTHERS.

1. Confidential Talks with Young Women.

By Lyman B. Sperry, M. D., with introductory remarks by Frances E. Willard and Mary Wood Allen, M. D. "Dr. Sperry," says Miss Willard, "brings not only an adequate scientific preparation but a pure mind to his high task," and, says the National superintendent of our purity department, "he speaks not only with the earnestness of a friend but with the authority of a physician." It is just such a book as mothers will find helpful in bringing to their daughters the necessary instruction—often so hard to give—upon a subject concerning which every girl is, mentally, at least, asking questions.

2. The Science of Motherhood.

By Hannah Whitall Smith. All the world is beginning to think with Froebel that "we must cultivate mothers," and the aim of this suggestive little book is to present a true idea of scientific motherhood. "We women," says the author, "should study this science as carefully and intelligently as any other, and make of ourselves 'mothers of understanding' as well as mothers of instinct." This booklet is a most fitting gift to a young mother.

Going Forward.

It will come as a word of encouragement to white-ribboners who imagine their work is not meeting with the success it ought. "Eternity alone will reveal the good you have accomplished," as an organization or as individuals.

The Responsive Reading for March

is Mrs. A. S. Benjamin's well known reading on which is reissued in response to a general demand. No union can be said to be "thoroughly furnished unto good works" unless it has adopted methods which are systematic and orderly. The aim of Mrs. Benjamin's reading is to emphasize this and to point the way to a "consummation devoutly to be wished."

PRIZES ON PATENTS.
How to get $100 and Perhaps Make a Fortune.

We secure patents and to induce people to keep track of their bright ideas we offer a prize of one hundred dollars to be paid on the first of every month to the person who submits to us the most meritorious invention during the preceding month. We will also advertise the invention free of charge in the National Register, a weekly newspaper, published in Washington, D. C., which has an extensive circulation throughout the United States and is devoted to the interests of inventors.

NOT SO HARD AS IT SEEMS.

The idea of being able to invent something strikes most people as being very difficult; this delusion the Company wishes to dispel. It is the simple things and small inventions that make the greatest amount of money, and the complex ones are seldom profitable. Almost everybody, at some time or another, conceives an idea, which, if patented, would probably be worth to him a fortune. Unfortunately such ideas are usually dismissed without thought. The simple inventions like the car window, which could be easily slid up and down without breaking the passenger's back, the sauce pan, the collar button, the nut lock, the bottle stopper, the snow shovel are things that almost every one sees some way of improving upon, and it is these kind of inventions that bring the greatest returns to the author.

The prize we offer will be paid at the end of each month, whether the application has been acted upon by the Patent office or not. Every competitor must apply for a patent on his invention through us, and whether he secures the prize or not, the inventor will have a valuable patent.

Signal Notes.

The Christian Commonwealth states that the British Women's Temperance Association has 70,000 pledged women abstainers in its 800 branches.

Miss Ellen Spencer, known as the first woman who taught school in Illinois, died at Jacksonville recently, lacking but a trifle of being one hundred years old.

There are 6,000 sandwichmen in London. At the Home in Queen Square, Westminster, four-fifths of the residents are abstainers, and no liquor is allowed in the house.

Recent statistics show the expenditure of seventeen and a half million dollars in a year by the population of the Transvaal, So. Africa, for intoxicating drinks, an average of eighty-one dollars per capita.

Dr. Talmage expresses his opinion that the proposition to open saloons on Sundays in New York is "the greatest insult to decency and religion that has been offered since the discovery of America."

A comparison of the consumption and profit of intoxicants in Great Britain, show that during ten years the consumption has increased ten per cent, and the profit to the brewers and distillers forty per cent.

Boston entertained the New England convention of the National Reform Association last month, during which topics were discussed covering the attitude of the church toward Christian reform movements, the relation of the Sabbath to individual and national life, the right and duty of the government to teach the foundation principles of the Christian religion in the public schools.

Iowa has a system of cottages, ten in number, in connection with her Soldiers' Home. They are simply furnished, but are comfortable. A soldier and wife may occupy a cottage if he prefers to have his wife with him. They are furnished by the Woman's Relief Corps of different towns of the state. There is also a dormitory building for the dependent mothers and widows. These cottages are always full, and many applicants waiting for a vacancy.

Michigan's State Liquor Dealers' Association is boldly asking the legislature this year to grant a few additional favors, having sent a petition for signatures throughout the state in which their desires are voiced. These are for a uniform license of three hundred dollars; that dealers be permitted to keep their saloons open on all legal holidays; that they be permitted to secure bondsmen anywhere in the county in which the license is taken out instead of being confined to the township or city as now; that they be permitted to keep open until ten o'clock, and that local option shall be operative by township, villages and cities instead of by counties. Granted these, what next?

Forty thousand public school boys are now numbered in the Anti-Cigarette League of New York, which has been organized in all the ninety-five grammar schools of the city.

Practical philanthropy is exemplified in the work of transplanting the unemployed from the crowded city tenements and slum districts to the country where most of them are delighted to go. The Chicago Bureau of Labor and Transportation has such a work in hand, the railroads aid by free transportation and thus many become farm helpers, tenants, purchasers on the installment plan, etc. Any one having an opening of this kind should address the secretary, John Visher, 719, 167 Dearborn street, Chicago.

The nineteenth annual meeting of the American Purity Alliance, of which Aaron M. Powell is president, was held in New York, February 14. Among those who gave addresses or sent papers were Rev. Dr. Wm. N. McVickar, of Philadelphia, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Rev. Joseph May, of Philadelphia, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Rev. Anna Garlin Spencer, J. W. Walton, Esq., of Cleveland, Rev. Antoinette Brown Blackwell, B. O. Flower, Esq., editor of The Arena, Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, Martha Schofield, of South Carolina, Rev. Dr. B. F. DeCosta, President of the White Cross Society, Dr. O. Edward Janney, of Baltimore, and others. The Philanthropist, edited by Mr. Powell, is the organ of the Alliance.

Joseph Livesey, the active English temperance reformer, set a noble example in his personal labors of visiting the poor and instructing them. It was his claim that "unless we go to the people the great mass will remain untaught and uncared for." His son, William Livesey, also an ardent supporter of the great cause, is the author of "Chats with Children."

After five years of active labors in the temperance reform (woman suffrage included) for the Australian colonies, Mr. E. T. Smith has returned to England to take part in the temperance campaign. His record in Australia and New Zealand is a fruitful one, the workers there voicing high appreciation of his ability and activity.

The British Women's Temperance Association has secured Mr. Smith's services in England; later he contemplates a visit to America.

The figures given recently in this column, regarding the Methodist Church reports, did not include the complete membership, the grand totals being considerably in excess of those quoted: Thirty-one thousand preachers; 2,681,639 lay members; 29,559 Sunday schools; 339,024 officers and teachers; 2,501,917 scholars; 24,914 churches; 9,578 parsonages valued at more than $126,000,000, are statistics which give an idea of the enormous agency for good wielded by the M. E. Church.

Kernels.

"Are these colors fast?" she asked of the new clerk. "Yes, indeed. You ought to see them when they once start to run."

"America has no standing army, I believe," said the foreigner. "It is clear you haven't spent much time in the street cars of this great country," replied the native.

Farmer Tibbets: "Hang that cow! I always have to club her 'fore I can make her stand still." Little nephew(from the city): "Is that the one that gives the whipped cream?"

Doctor: "You cough more easily this morning?" Patient: "I ought to, I practiced all night."

"Dah ain' much practical use," said Uncle Eben, "in de kin' of penitence dat comes atter a man's done et de chicken whut he gathered de night befoh."

Professor of astronomy: "Can any one tell what the 'milky way' is?" Tommy: "Please, sir, I don't know what it is, but I think it was caused by the cow jumping over the moon."

First Poet: "I had thirteen poems rejected by one editor." Second Ditto: "And I had one poem rejected by thirteen editors." And they could not agree which was the worse misfortune of the two.

"Longevity? I should say longevity did run in the family," said Mrs. Spriggins. "Why, John was six feet two, Bill was six feet four, and George had more longevity than any I ever see. He was six feet seven, if he was a foot."

Mrs. Kimball (to tramp): "So you are very hungry and want something to eat? Well, here is some cold veal." Tramp: "But I haven't got no fork to eat it with." Mrs. Kimball: "Well, you just keep on going down that way a little further and you will find a fork in the road."

Two young Americans have been riding through Asia on bicycles. The Chinese viewed the machines with great curiosity. The most graphic description, perhaps, was given by a Chinaman whom we overheard relating to his neighbors the first appearance of the bicycle in his quiet little village. "It is a little mule," said he, "that you drive by the ears, and kick in the sides to make him go."

Mrs. S.: "Well, here we are in another boarding-house. We are regular Arabs." Mr. S.: "Yes; folding Bed-ouins."

A contemporary tells the following story: "An elderly gentleman accustomed to 'indulge,' entered the room of a certain inn, where sat a sedate old Quaker by the fire. Lifting a pair of green spectacles up to his forehead, rubbing his inflamed eyes, and calling for hot brandy and water, he complained to the Friend that his eyes were getting weaker and weaker, and the spectacles did not seem to do them any good. "I'll tell thee, friend,' replied the Quaker, 'what I think. If thee were to wear the spectacles over thy mouth for a few months, thy eyes would soon get well again."

A kind friend and consecrated white-ribboner has recently added $10 to our philanthropy fund.

This will enable us to place on the subscription list the names of many poor women hungering and thirsting for the inspiration of the best temperance paper in America. Did it ever occur to you that a penny a day would supply your minister with a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL fifty-two weeks in the year?

Don't charge us with the "slang" of the day when we write of a "back number," for in no sense is the subject-matter of THE UNION SIGNAL out of date.

If you will read with care the copies we are willing to send for the trifling cost of postage you will find some article of especial interest, some thought which has added value from your personal experience, and a pencil mark along the margin will remove the delicacy you might otherwise feel in handing the paper to your friend.

We are looking for a "legion" of boys and girls (Loyal Temperance Legion) to sell the current numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL—L. T. L's with hands and feet so consecrated to the temperance cause as to make them willing "messengers" of the white-ribbon army. A few weeks ago an enthusiastic little news girl made to us a straightforward business proposition, and she is now our authorized agent in a town in this state. We sent her a sample package of the latest issue of the paper, and an interested friend writes: "It would have done you good to see her beaming face, as she came to tell me of her success. She sold them all very readily, and will increase her order." We want a "legion" of just such agents. Who will be one of them? Address NEWS DEPARTMENT,

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Sir Robert William Duff, governor of New South Wales, aged sixty, is dead.

The Illinois township equal suffrage bill failed to pass the senate by one vote.

Women petitioned the Utah constitutional convention for an equal suffrage provision.

The persecuted Armenians have sent an address of appreciation and gratitude to Hon. Wm. Gladstone.

The Spanish cruiser, Reine Regenta, went down in a gale off the coast of Morocco, with over four hundred on board.

On account of rioting by the unemployed, martial law has been proclaimed in the department of Panama, Colombia.

Charles Frederick Worth, the famous Parisian man dressmaker, died at Paris last week. He was born in England in 1825.

Both the senate and house committees will, it is said, report favorably the proposed constitutional amendment for equal suffrage in Wisconsin.

The Missouri senate has approved the bill introduced through the efforts of the St. Louis Humane Society, which prohibits the docking of horses' tails.

Japan has stipulated for the cession of Formosa, the payment of a two hundred and fifty million dollars indemnity and the independence of Korea as terms of peace from China.

Our government has issued a demand upon Spain for prompt apology for the unwarranted action of a Spanish gunboat which fired upon the mail steamship Alliance, off the coast of Cuba, the shot fortunately falling short.

MRS. STEVENSON, National corresponding secretary, returned to her work last Friday, bringing the good news of her father's partial restoration to health, with the probability of entire recovery. Our secretary is in the best of health, and ready for "ye nexte thynge," as her enterprising, capable disposition will not let her rest when there is work to do.

MISS JESSIE A. ACKERMANN, second round-the-world missionary, has so far recovered from her long illness as to leave Chicago last week for England, traveling by easy stages to New York, with the intention of sailing on the steamship City of Paris. In her parting message Miss Ackermann writes: "My plans are to rest with Lady Henry Somerset and in England till I am restored to my usual health and strength; beyond that I have no plans." All friends of our cause will unite in wishing for Miss Ackermann's complete restoration to health and to the work in which she has labored so prominently and successfully.

EACH week the secretary of the "pilgrimage bureau," 13 Astor Place, New York city, sends us the names of those already registered for Dr. Lunn's party to London and Switzerland this summer. The list is growing daily. Up to March 14, forty-five were booked for the trip and more than twice that number were considering the matter. It is very important that every one contemplating this delightful journey should register at once in order to secure a choice of state rooms. It is better to pay the five dollars booking fee and lose it than to postpone the decision until too late to obtain a desirable location on the steamer. Beginning with the first issue of April, we will keep standing a list of the passengers, because of the keen interest felt by our readers in the personnel of this unique party. Very soon we will publish an article, descriptive of the preparations for the journey, baggage, wardrobe, etc., required, as such help has been earnestly requested.

MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS, the enterprising president of Illinois W. C. T. U., has returned to her state after a very profitable rest of several weeks at Clifton Springs, N. Y. Mrs. Rounds' health is most excellent, and she presided over her mid-winter executive at Bloomington, Ill., March 7, where plans for more aggressive work were matured. Illinois white-ribboners are always richly enforced in power with their state president at the head.

WE are delighted to be able to correct our statement concerning the officers of the National Council of Women by adding the name of Mrs. E. Burlingame Cheney to the list of white-ribbon officials. This makes four instead of three officers of the Council who are "ours." Mrs. Burlingame was for several years the honored president of the Rhode Island W. C. T. U., and since she married Rev. Dr. Cheney and went to Maine to live she is none the less true to white-ribbon interests.

DELAWARE no longer heads the "black list" in the failure to protect the girlhood of its commonwealth. Mrs. E. C. Marks, state superintendent of purity, writes under date of March 8, "The bill to raise the age of consent to eighteen years has been passed by our legislature. Please publish it abroad that we may no longer bear the ignominy of the past." New Hampshire has also raised the age to eighteen years and has taken a forward step in making the law apply to both sexes. We exclaim with Dr. Mary Wood Allen, the National superintendent of the purity department: "Sisters, take courage, and while interest on this subject is being kindled, apply the breath of your influence to fan it into a flame that shall sweep over the land with purifying power."

THE Indiana Organizer for March 14 contains an interesting account of the passage of the scientific temperance instruction bill through the state legislature. Miss Reed, the state superintendent, who has worked so diligently for this legislation, was placed in a very trying position, for while this particular bill was not entirely satisfactory, upon her "no" or "yes" depended the passage of any scientific temperance bill this session. The chief objection to the bill as passed, was the absence of any compulsory use of text books, but the friends of the measure have hopes of influencing the state board of education to order the physiologies revised with temperance instruction in view. We rejoice with Indiana white-ribboners that their black cap is removed.

"IT'S an evil wind that blows no good." The truth of this maxim has often been proved, and we believe it will be in the Illinois supreme court enactment of last week, which declared unconstitutional the sweat-shop law, prohibiting the employment of women for more than eight hours a day. On the surface this decision seems like a disaster, as hundreds of sweat-shops in the state have required women and girls to work twelve and fourteen hours a day. But to those who have looked deeper, it has become apparent that the eight-hour law operated against the interests of women, inasmuch as it did not include men, who were often substituted for women, thereby causing them to lose their positions. But this decision reaches farther than mere monetary considerations, as it places women upon an equal footing in the eyes of the law. Attorney Mayer, of Chicago, states it tersely in this sentence: "I am doubly glad that the supreme court has applied and enforced in a way so rugged and decisive the doctrine that woman is equal to man before the law, and that her right to her labor, which constitutes her property, is as sacred and impregnable as is the similar right of man." Mrs. Florence Kelley, an old-time contributor to THE UNION SIGNAL, was factory inspector under the former law, and will endeavor to secure the passage of another bill covering the defective points in the old law. We hope to give her views to our readers soon.

IN TRANSIT.

BY ADELINE HOHF BEEBY.

The swift aphelion of his life's ellipse
A soul is crossing; out of thought eterne
Projected, lit with energies that burn
Their influence on beholders; lightly slips
His rosary of years; through chance eclipse
His graciousness and truth more brightness earn;
Aye, to his orbit's axle his eyes turn,
Lode-star toward which his noble impulse dips.

But now the interplanetary chill
Strikes him; his head is sown with delicate frost,
His round limbs shrink, his gait majestic slows,
Yet patiently the home-track keeps until,
All weight of weariness in lethe lost,
Clasped to the heart of God he finds repose.

'STILLERY LU.

In Two Chapters.

BY MARTHA YOUNG.

Chapter II.

Time crept slowly along. Zeb was less and less at home. The narrow fields of corn were unworked and netted with grasses and rank weeds, the later crops were unsown. Ma Kato feared her letter had miscarried. On a golden midday the old woman with her daughter had started down the mountain to the cabin of Sue Bates. Her heart was heavier than on the night she had made the long distance alone. She had been full of hope then. Despair had taken hold of her now. She saw no way of saving her son but by the breaking up of the still, and now that seemed an impossibility. The grinding wails were constantly heard on all the mountain sides where the cave echoes could creep. Misery grew in the sparse settlements a-near, and "Nick Scarlet's gang" included nearly every young man on that slope of Sand Mountain.

Ma Kato left Lu at the Bates cabin while she walked the two miles farther to the village with the hope of selling the batch of homespun yarn she carried, for need was sore at the home. Her yarn disposed of, she noted an unusual stir in the village. There were spruce city men about the streets and every man of the village was trying to hire out a horse to the new-comers.

Presently to her old ears came the welcome word, "Raiders! A raid on Sand Mountain to-night!" Her old heart leaped with joy, then she heard a "store man" say warningly, "Mind out! There's one of 'em, she's one of 'em." She felt as if her old body had grown wings as she hurried up the slopes to the Bates cabin. She could hardly stop long enough to bid a kind or civil good-by to old Sue. She hurried off up old Sand with Luella.

It was sunset; that sudden falling of darkness that comes on the mountains, a moment of roseate golden splendor, and in another instant purple darkness everywhere save where the long mysterious lines of afterglow lie down the mountain sides. In the purple dusk, out of sight of any human habitation, the mother grasped Luella's arm, made her face her in the path, and began with every gesture of excitement to explain how she had sent the letter and how the raiders were even now preparing to come up the mountain.

Luella uttered one of those great speechless cries so awful to hear, flung her arms over her head and wept with a vacancy of words for her grief that was appalling. Ma Kato looked at her in amazement, dumb as Luella's agony. But Luella quickly recovered, and with gestures more rapid and excited than her mother's had been she told a story that her mother might have known long ago.

Zeb was one of the chief men who ran the still. Because of the potency of the name of Kato on the mountain and of its association with the still in the old days, and because the mountaineers had some superstition against starting up of the still, fearing old Kato's curse, Nick Scarlet had given Zeb a half interest in the still to go into the distilling with him. Luella had found some little scrawled accounts and some bits of money between the mattresses of Zeb's bed as she was righting his little lean-to room on the cabin. It was all a losing business with Zeb, however, for he was losing character and caste and all health of mind, body and soul, and when there came a divide in the proceeds of the still either Nick got the lion's share or a throw of the dice lost Zeb all that Nick had allowed him.

All this 'Stillery Lu showed quickly and excitedly to her mother. The mother followed her, fitting with each sign recollection of some instance not noted at the time, but upon which she was sure now Luella's keen perception had put the right interpretation. There needed only for the completion of Zeb's ruin that he should be captured at his work in the still and suffer a long imprisonment with a horde of criminals.

This last his own mother had brought to him. She was nearly palsied with terror, but Luella made rapid signs to her. There was no time to lose! The men at the still must be warned! The two women with one accord sped toward the crown of the purple peaks. Already the raiders must be nearer the still than they, but the way that the heavily-armed posse must take was more circuitous than the paths and cut-offs these women hastened to traverse.

Now the purple shadows were heavy about them, and the low notes of night birds weighted the air. Again, as they crossed some streak of light left like a lost angel amid a surrounding host of darkness, it was clear day about them, as if another Joshua had bidden the sun stand still to aid them in their desperate fighting against time. Less frequently, however, these spaces of light came to their path. A little longer and all the glory of the afterglow was gone. Once in their hurrying they were divided from the raiders only by a hedge of laurel. They distinctly heard their talk, and the mother's heart leaped with terror as she heard frequent mention of Zeb's name.

Such blackness had fallen on the mountain that the women were obliged to feel their way up by the boulders and tree trunks, only they knew that every step must lead up up, and that haste must be in every spring. They could hear the sighing, groaning sound that Ma Kato had warned the raiders to listen for. The raiders heard it also. They hastily stationed their men by twos and threes to catch any moonshiner who might escape the posse that made ready, loaded guns in hand, to advance on the still.

Out on the darkness the two women could see the firelight from the cave's mouth, a long line of shine down the mountain side. There was no time for the women to enter the cave, no time to give warning that the streak of tell-tale light be smothered. The two women, almost breathless from the long running climb up the mountain by the most rugged of by-paths, stood on one side the belt of yellow glow clinging close against a great oak trunk, sheltered from view of the raiders by a clump of thick leaved mountain camellias.

There was little noise in the still; only the voices of Nick and Zeb could be heard therein in the intervals of the grinding of that mill of misery. This was a night of work. The old woman and the girl could plainly see four raiders coming cautiously up to the line of yellow light. There was one moment of infinitely horror-striking silence and then a whistle, piercing and most peculiar, rent the air.

Ma Kato had suddenly recalled out of bygone years the shrill, strange whistle of warning that she had heard on the mountain side many a time when danger threatened old Kato in his still. The raiders, startled at the weird sound, felt that they were entrapped. Nick and Zeb rushed out. By inspiration of terror each struck out different ways down the mountain side out of the cave's mouth. Two raiders plunged down the rugged way after Nick. Two turned swiftly to grasp Zeb. In a flash 'Stillery Lu had snatched a gun from one raider and in less than a moment her strong arms were about the other pinioning his arms to his side. The mother, inspired by her child's daring, grasped the unarmed man in a very vise of bitter terror.

Zeb had glanced back to see in the streak of light his sister like a beauteous Amazon in the heat of conflict and his mother holding, like a grim wrinkled fate, one spruce young raider, then he was off into the fastnesses of old Sand. Over the slope echoed the calls of the raiders. The two captured ones soon wrenched themselves free from the women and were ready to laugh with their comrades at their unique misadventure.

Nick was caught. The barrels of golden liquor were poured down the mountain sides, the charcoal scattered to the winds, the vessels broken—old Ma Kato herself raised a heavy stone and flung it with all her force on the mighty iron kettle,—the fire was smothered and the old still in the cave was no more. Zeb hid out for some weeks, ministered to by his mother and sister, but the raiders returned no more. They probably discerned that they held the moving spirit of the illicit distilling and that young Zeb was more a victim than a criminal.

It was not long before Zeb was back in the cabin above the cave. The grass was no longer allowed to weave its green meshes in his fields. The fall crops were planted. Peace and the simple prosperity of the humble came once more to his cabin. Every day, at least once, sometimes twice he declared cheerily and loudly as if an uplifted tone could reach Luella's deaf ears, "Deaf and dumb critters of gals is the best 'count gals thar is! I wouldn't give Luella thar now for every gal on the mounting fer outright vally of good work and cooking up of good vittles and all such like!"

'Stillery Lu, as the mountaineers still called her, never heard the words, but she felt the kindly, cheery tones, and saw the look of loving kindness and gratitude in her bluff brother's blue eyes.

Lillian Whiting.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

When I first went to Springfield, Ill., in 1878, to present the Home Protection petition with which we visited the state house where Abraham Lincoln had been the central figure in time past, I was told that my best counsellor in the legislature would be Senator L. D. Whiting, who had held that office for twenty years and was the temperance "stand-by" of the state of Illinois. I found a stalwart indeed when I met this refined, intellectual, statesmanlike leader. He was a direct descendant on his mother's side from Cotton Mather, and his paternal ancestry dated back to the Rev. William Whiting, the first Unitarian minister at Concord, Mass., in the early days of the seventeenth century, while his mother was the descendant of an honored Boston family. So it did not simply happen that Senator Whiting was devoted to the ethical view of great subjects, but to use our sturdy old New England phrase, "he came honestly by it."

Miss Lillian Whiting, one of the best known and most capable of women journalists, is her father's own daughter. Beginning as a journalist in 1879 on the Cincinnati Commercial, she came to Boston a year later, and by her talent and ingenuity worked her way up without adventitious helps, until in two years she was made literary editor of that old and famous daily paper, The Boston Traveller, and through her work on that well-known paper she came to be quoted as one of the leading literary authorities of the daily press. After eight years of work in this connection she was offered the editorship-in-chief of the Boston Budget, a weekly paper of literature, affairs and society. In both papers Miss Whiting has made a remarkable record as a critic and litterateur.

A series of papers with the caption, Le Beau Monde, (which words Miss Whiting uses in their literal sense of the "World Beautiful") was published by Miss Whiting in the Budget and has been brought out recently in book form by Roberts Brothers. The five essays that make up this volume are on that high plane of living and thinking for which Miss Whiting has been remarkable from the dawn of her bright career. Few women have produced a book so full of the choicest ethical ideas set forth in language so pure and elevated that no right-minded person can fail to find a genuine attraction on every page. From the time of her advent in Boston until his death, Miss Whiting was a member of Phillips Brooks' church, and perhaps no one has more nobly comprehended that great and many sided character.

Readers of The Union Signal do not need to be told how beautiful and helpful is her spirit as shown forth in the writings that seem like a garment of her soul. It has been well said that her creed as a journalist is that her mission is a ministry; that the responsibility of the journalist is to freight the space he occupies with the best thought and the utmost significance that he can gather into it. Strength and tenderness are blended in her nature and it often seems as if the keen and brilliant editorials which she produces could hardly have been penned by the same hand which writes poems "as tender as a rose leaf and sweet as the breath of violets."

Although devoted to literature and art, Miss Whiting is so much more strongly devoted to life itself that her facile pen befriends every good and great cause. With charming freshness and simplicity of treatment, she advocates the woman question, the temperance question, the purity movement and all those growing reforms that seek to incarnate Christ in the world's heart and life. Miss Whiting is young, active, attractive, devoted; long may she live and grow! We have in her a friend tried and true and a sister good and gracious.

"THE UNIVERSAL NUISANCE."

BY MRS. HELEN E. STARRETT.

This is the caption of a well written editorial in a late number of one of the best religious papers in the United States. Of course a moment's reflection will tell any one that by the universal nuisance is meant the constant infliction upon a long-suffering and patient public of the fumes of tobacco. The assertion is made, and the observation and experience of all corroborate it, that tobacco users are becoming more and more indifferent to the rights of non-users of tobacco, and this rudeness is shown more and more to women. During the late snow blockades when cars filled with passengers were often detained for hours it was the rule rather than the exception that a few men would arrogate to themselves the privilege of filling the air with the fumes of cigar smoke, utterly indifferent to the discomfort or even the sickness and suffering inflicted upon their fellow passengers.

What can society do to arouse public sentiment against this growing arrogance and indifference to the rights of others on the part of tobacco users? What can good people do to help arouse the moral sentiment (which indeed indulgence in the use of tobacco seems to blunt) in the hearts and minds of those who practice this selfish and pernicious indulgence. The chief sufferers are women—affectionate, loving wives whose very kindness and gentleness is made an excuse for inflicting upon them the distress of being compelled to tolerate the foul breath which every cigar smoker acquires, and foul odors which stale tobacco distributes around the habitat of the smoker. From these inflictions wives have no escape short of absolute disruption of the most sacred of home relations, and this very fact is also taken advantage of by the selfishness of husbands. In the present state of society probably the only thing that wives can do is to submit; probably there may even be a slight consolation for a wife if her husband does nothing worse. But it is a sad commentary on the times and manners that a wife must find consolation in such considerations. If she is the mother of sons her position is doubly painful and embarrassing, and the question whether she shall submit silently to the imposition and run the risk of the effect of example upon her boys is one to be decided by circumstances. Many a wife and mother is so dependent, so utterly at the mercy of her family relations that she must endure and submit. But there are others so independently situated that they can force an issue on the matter. Perhaps if a few more women thus situated would do so it would be a benefit all around.

There are two classes of the community who can work effectively to abate this evil. One class comprises the young women of the country, the other the non-tobacco users among men. An anti-tobacco sentiment cultivated and expressed by young women might in time effect much. There should be a sentiment also that would mark as a girl of small spirit one who would express liking for the smell of a cigar. Generally, such an expression is merely a bid for the attention and good-will of some cigar-smoking young man. Let the truth be maintained that the highest style of gentleman does not smoke. A perfect gentleman! Ah, how rarely is he met! How many a wife who is a perfect lady realizes in the depths of her heart that her husband falls far short of being a gentleman in this particular. Many a wife realizes the gradual dulling of the moral sense in her husband, a growing selfishness and indifference alike to her comfort and to the outward refinements of life. We have known a gentleman who at one period of his life denounced in the strongest terms the impertinence and vulgarity, as he termed it, of the presence of a spittoon, who in a few years became so changed by his own indulgence in the use of tobacco that two or three of these nuisances were kept in requisition with never a thought or word as to their unpleasant effect upon others.

But it is to men who are non-smokers that society will probably have to look for an abatement of the nuisance of the use of tobacco. It is all right and proper for them to claim and insist upon their rights and denounce the rude selfishness of tobacco users. Women cannot do this without the liability of being called strong minded, prudish, disagreeable, unwomanly, etc. To the non-smokers then among men society earnestly looks for help in abating the universal nuisance.

MEDIUM OF EXCHANGE

BY HON. WILL D. GOULD.

[Printed by special request.]

There is no divine money either in name, form, denomination or character. No two nations use the same money. Money is artificial. It is wholly the creature of law. All of its attributes are given by legislative authority. Interest and the rate of interest are created and regulated and may be abolished by act of government. Money is a medium of exchange, and is created for that purpose. It is not original wealth. It has no ancestry and of itself has no increase.

In the exercise of its sovereign power a nation establishes a standard of weights and measures for the convenience and benefit of all its people. A yard-stick is made by law a measure, and it is important that it should remain unchanged. By the same authority money is not only made a measure of values and a medium of exchange, but it is also clothed with all the attributes of actual wealth. It is of the highest importance that the medium of exchange, the governmental standard of measure of all the nation's wealth, be established and remain unchanged. It would be as unjust to the debtor to contract the medium of exchange and make money scarce by law as it would be to lengthen the yard-stick by law and require the debtor to pay the same number of yards he agreed to pay before the change was made. A contraction of the circulating medium increases the burden of the debtor—changes his contract without his consent.

The object lessons, the conditions and not theories of this vast country, show that something is radically wrong in our monetary system. And it is quite possible that the money-changers do not possess all the wisdom, understanding and patriotism that are necessary to right the wrong and restore prosperity. We believe it has not yet been proposed to farm out the army and navy; nor has the cry yet been raised that the government should keep out of that business. Yet that would be quite as consistent as to say that the government should keep out of banking. It is no more the exercise of a governmental function to establish and maintain the army and navy than it is to establish and maintain a monetary system.

Our national constitution places the twin money metals, gold and silver, on a parity. That is their legal status in our organic law. Congress has no more right to degrade one of these metals than the other. It has as much authority to demonetize gold as it has to demonetize silver. Both silver and gold have intrinsic value and commercial value. Their commercial value in a great measure depends upon the law which clothes them with the attributes and functions of money that makes them a medium of exchange and the measure and representative of all other wealth. Whenever any of these attributes or functions are withdrawn by law, the commercial value immediately decreases. Withdraw from gold all the attributes of money—demonetize it in all the nations of the earth—and its commercial value would be immediately impaired. The same is true of silver; hence it follows that both gold and silver money have and always have had in addition to their intrinsic value, a commercial value which is in part the fiat of the nation that declares it money. In other words, there never was gold or silver money that did not possess some element of fiat. The government alone, in all nations, has the sovereign power of creating money, and whoever else attempts it without permission of law will find himself guilty of crime. And we submit that it is as morally wrong to impair the value of money created by our government as is counterfeiting, and that it ought by law to be made a criminal offence.

Legal tender standard money issued by any government on the face of the earth is not and ought not to be redeemable. It is money. It is a medium of exchange and it is the sovereign decree of the nation that it is and shall be the medium of exchange between all the citizens of that nation, and to that extent the measure of all values in the nation. The moment a nation permits its laws to be so modified as to make one kind of its money redeemable in another kind of its money, it surrenders a portion of its sovereign power to the brokers and gamblers and financial thugs, who have been the curse of all the nations since long before the time Christ scourged and turned out the money-changers.

ELASTICITY.

A new word has been given to cover a new scheme, and that word is elasticity. We have heard about expanding the currency for the benefit, first, of the so-called national banks, and secondly, for the people. We have heard about hard money and soft money, about wildcat banks and private banks called national, founded alone upon government bonds and permission of congressional law. The government of the United States is necessarily the great banker of the nation. It creates by its authority all the money and should never permit any money to be created or issued in this country that is not standard legal tender money.

The elasticity that is demanded by the people is legal tender gold money, legal tender silver money, legal tender paper money, and all to be declared legal tender standard money for all purposes within the nation, and neither to be redeemed in the other, nor to be demanded of the debtor by right or in preference to the other. If the national government would issue legal tender gold money, legal tender silver money and legal tender paper money, and would establish national savings banks the great financial panic and business depression would soon pass away. Read the telegraphic dispatches reciting the recommendations of our executive officers and the doings of Congress, and behold how Republicans and Democrats are vying with each other to see who can most please the Bankers' Alliance, Wall street and the money-changers! They little think what an uprising is coming from the people. The people are not all stupid, and patriotism in this nation is not yet dead.

This nation should, with its vast resources, its location on the globe, its improved machinery and its unequaled people, produce for export more than it buys from abroad. It should always keep the balance of trade in its favor. Good statesmanship and the highest patriotism demand it. Otherwise, our metal money must be exported to balance our accounts and the very foundation of our metal money system undermined and swept away.

An English colony, speaking the English language, familiar with English law and using English money, by recourse to arms, achieved its independence. A new nation was born, among whose citizens were many of the most learned, enlightened and patriotic people on the face of the earth. How easy it would have been for this young nation with three millions of people to have continued the use of English money; and it certainly would have done so had the people believed it to have been for their best interests. But instead of continuing the use of English money, farthings, pence, shillings and pounds, our nation established a new system, United States money, the decimal system, without asking the consent of any other nation, and with sole reference to its own rights and convenience. In its organic law it wrote the name of the twin money metals, gold and silver, on a parity.

If this nation of three millions of patriots could create a new system and maintain it for a hundred years, while the nation grew to sixty millions, how much more certain it is that this growing nation could now either adopt a new system or maintain the system given us by our Revolutionary fathers for the protection of our own rights and for our own convenience. Its sacred sovereign right cannot be taken away without the consent of the nation. We demand national legal tender, standard gold, silver and paper money, national savings banks, the annihilation of the liquor traffic and the overthrow of the oppressors of our people. Give us a government of the people, by the people and for the people.

THE FRATERNITY OF REFORMS.

Sabbath Reform: its Scientific Basis. VI.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

That the crusade against Sabbath breaking has not yet recovered its holy land is proclaimed aloud by the recent Sunday session of Congress, which, having wasted its own time, stole the time that divine and civil law alike has given to rest and religion to finish up its wretched work. Alas! the case becomes the more significant of progress in the wrong direction in that there was no minority to protest as when the like was vainly attempted a generation ago.

On the other hand it is an omen of good that such a man as Mr. Gladstone should be asked by a popular magazine (McClure's) to write for its March number such an article as there appears.

As in the case of temperance, so in that of the Sabbath, we believe the need of the hour is to reinforce conscience with science, to show in this case that it is not a Christian doctrine only but a certainty of science that the best health and the longest life cannot be attained without Sabbath rest. Dr. Haegler's chart, soon to be inserted, we hope, with explanations, in the text-books of scientific temperance as they are, one by one, revised, ought to be as familiar and fundamental in every child's education as the rule of three, since this rule of seven is more radically essential to wise living.

Each downward short stroke represents a day's work, which is not quite equaled by the upward restorative stroke of the night's rest, so that one is a little weaker every morning, a little wearier every night, as the week's work goes on. In the case of a certain laborer, taken for example, the normal day's work overdraws his oxygen one ounce, and the normal night's rest only restores five-sixths of it. Losing one-sixth of an ounce per day, he is six-sixths of an ounce short on Sabbath morning, a whole ounce short, a whole day behind—in the same condition physically on Sabbath morning, in the same need of rest as on Monday night. He is therefore called to a whole day's rest to balance his account with nature. If he habitually disobeys this divine law of weekly rest he "runs down" more and more until he is as far from what he ought to be, as is shown by the chart, about which doctors do not disagree.

One breathes less oxygen and uses more during ordinary work than when at rest, absorption of mind checking the respiration to the extent of 12,960 cubic inches in eight hours. Oxygen being but another name for vital force, the bearing of the foregoing facts on health and strength is apparent. Dr. Haegler calls attention to the chemical facts of expenditure and repair in the constituents of the food, as demonstrated by Pillenkofer and Voit, who showed that the nightly rest after the day's work did not afford a complete recuperation of the vital forces, and was insufficient to keep the mind and body in tone, but that if this reparation is not supplemented by an occasional longer period of rest, the system is subjected to a gradual falling in pitch. (See Sabbath for Man, alphabetical index, Hygiene; also Sunday Problems, pp. 25, 37.)

Such facts as the above, written in nature, as indeed the Fourth Commandment was carved upon the face of nature, should be pressed upon the mind and conscience as a preventive of summer Sabbath breaking, by sermons and otherwise, during the world's week of prayer for the Sabbath, which includes the first two Sabbaths of April, wisely chosen as the very best period for agitation and education in regard to Sabbath observance. Let it be not only a week of prayer but also a week of helping God answer the prayers by such action as shall suppress Sunday ball games and Sunday excursions before they begin. Let the civic revival be turned on the wheel of law enforcement wherever necessary, before the offence is committed.

But let it not be forgotten that except saloonists and tobacconists and "baseballists" there are few who need anything more than "the arrest of thought"—to use Miss Willard's phrase of sweet charity. Let there be in each city, through the aid of Endeavorers, a distribution from door to door in April and May, of such literature as Mrs. J. C. Bateham, of Williamsburg, Ky., and Rev. J. B. Davison, of Matthews Block, Milwaukee, are using so wisely and effectively. With the former the W. C. T. U. are already familiar. The latter includes documents in German and Scandinavian and English, adapted for Roman Catholics as well as Protestants, with a Sunday closing pledge for shops also, all at cost prices.

A friend who has been corresponding extensively with pastors and presidents of young people's societies, finds the need of education on this question very great and declares: "I have been startled to find so large a number of earnest Christians, ministers and others, who have no settled belief as to the course they should follow in this matter. It seems impossible for the Sabbath Association to do much good until the ministers realize their duty as to teaching and example."

Let us sow the whole land knee-deep with reform literature that in the new century just at hand, if not in this, we may see a golden harvest of Sabbath observance to the honor of God and the joy and blessing of man.

MRS. BARNEY'S WORK IN ENGLAND.

Dear Union Signal:—I would like our American sisters to know that in sparing Mrs. J. K. Barney to come over to England this winter they have done the cause of our noble temperance reform more good than they could have imagined possible. Her visit has been of incalculable benefit to our work. Wherever she has gone she has won golden opinions, and fresh doors have opened for her on every hand. I hardly know any worker who in so short a time has succeeded in making her way into so many hearts. Her earnest, sympathetic manner, and the touching and vivid illustrations given from her own experience, combined with the deep spirituality that pervades the whole, make her a speaker of marvelous ability and attractive power. While, through all, her audiences are made to feel the truth of the prophet's words that it is "not by might, nor by power, but my spirit saith the Lord of hosts." As some one who was present at several of her meetings said, it was indeed true that the Lord gives the message while the messenger is hidden behind the Cross.

Wherever she has once been they have been eager to have her again; and the superintendent on our Lecture Bureau says that if she could only secure her services for a year, she would be able, without the least difficulty, to fill every night with engagements, and still could not satisfy the demand.

Mrs. Barney has been especially successful in enlisting sympathy in our work from many who have hitherto held aloof, and has in this way secured us substantial help. In some drawing-room meetings attended by influential members of the upper classes of London society she brought the subjects of prison work and of the police matron work before them with such convincing force that a deep and practical interest was aroused. And this interest made itself felt in influential quarters to such good effect that during her stay the consummation to the long and earnest work of the B. W. T. A., under the leadership of Lady Henry Somerset, aided by Miss Balgarnie, was reached, and the chief of police in London practically promised us all that we ask, namely, that every woman arrested in the London streets and taken to London station houses shall be placed under the care of a police matron instead of, as heretofore, under the care of men. We feel that this is a great victory, which may well cause our dear Mrs. Barney to go home rejoicing, bearing her sheaves with her.

Mr. Osborn is writing for your columns a more detailed account of her visit, but I felt as if I wanted to tell you over my own name a little of the blessing that has attended her coming.

It is a great trial to us that Mrs. Barney is obliged to leave us so soon (she sailed for home March 6), but we are fully determined to have her back again before many months have passed; and I trust all our American sisters will do what they can by their prayers and encouragement to help us to this good end.

Hoping to see a good many of you over here at our World's W. C. T. U. Convention in the coming June, I am yours, In Christian love and fellowship,

London, England. Hannah Whitall Smith.

CHIEF KHAMA'S VIEWS.

Dear Union Signal:—I think your readers will be glad to see the accompanying letter. Khama stands to-day a noble Christian ruler, not only before South Africa, but with a lesson to America and England and all other nations as well. This letter is in reply to one written by our Cape Town secretary when members of the Cape Parliament first began to try to secure an expression of public sentiment in favor of making Khama permit English traders to set up public drinking houses, or "canteens," within the bounds of the Protectorate over which he is the chief:

To the Secretary W. C. T. U., Cape Town:

I write at the request of Chief Khama, who does not understand English, to acknowledge the kind letter sent by your union.

The chief wishes me to say that your letter cheers him and helps him to keep strong. He is aware of the fact that he has many friends in England and not a few in the colony. But the oppression he meets with from some that are strong and influential is so persistent and so unscrupulous, that nothing but a sense of his duty to God and to his people could ever induce him to continue year after year without wavering. He thanks you for your kind words and relies upon your valuable assistance.

I fear you cannot judge what it costs Khama to adhere to his prohibition law. As far as his own people are concerned, there is a section strongly against him on this point, but they yield to him because they know that he is wise and just in his government. They say the exclusion of the drink is Khama's only bad law. There are men who seem to care more for an extra "ten per cent" than for the welfare of a whole tribe of their fellowmen, and it is astonishing how large a proportion of such men seem to gravitate toward the whisky trade.

But if your union keeps its promise to stand by Khama I fancy the day is not far distant when it will have to make its voice heard powerfully in the capital of the Colony. If one may prophesy, I think there will soon be a circuitous method introduced for bringing in the whisky. It is recognized that Khama is immovable on the question.

The game to be played is something like this: The chartered company wants the territory. Ahab could make a fair price of Naboth's vineyard, and Naboth is only a Kaffir. But Ahab will proceed cautiously. First he will attempt by perfectly legal means to secure that portion of Khama's country which lies between the Shashi and Motloutse rivers. Then he will try on the same game in the neighborhood of the Zambesi, and so gradually closing in he will attempt to put the whole country under that humane association of sharemongers, when whisky shops will be as common as they now are in Bulawayo. If they went straight at it there would be much sympathy with Khama on the part of many Christian people, but they proceed by very circuitous paths. Are they not politicians? They will not say a word about drink; they will talk of extending the Empire; establishing a civilized and just government; abolishing an anomalous state of affairs.

Then your union will be asked to leave the matter alone, as it is a matter of political concern and does not affect your union as a union, and before the time comes that the W. C. T. U. can find fitting ground to stand on the dam will be pierced and no union can stop the flood that will ever widen the breach. But, my dear friends, God is not bound by any rules or by-laws, and He ruleth still and you will array yourselves on the side of justice I am sure. . . . When the day comes when woman is allowed to take her rightful place in the membership of the Cape Parliament and of the "Mother Parliament" you will be able to exercise the same moderating, ennobling and kindly influence in the legislature that now you exercise in the home.

But even now you have much influence in matters of justice and good government. Do not allow matters of this kind to be labeled "political" and then handed over to the tender mercies of the evil one. Nothing that concerns justice, righteousness, kindliness, the duty of the strong to protect the weak and of the wise to enlighten the ignorant can ever be foreign to God, and it ought not therefore to be foreign to His daughters.

May God bless you in your work as a temperance union and in your still larger work as Christian women, and may you at last hear it said by Him who is greater than kings and princes, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me."

W. C. Willoughby.

London Mission Station, Palapye, British Protectorate.

Our union and the "South African Temperance Alliance" memorialized the queen. We have also asked the B. W. T. A. to take some action before the "home government" at their meeting in May. I have just written a letter which I suppose will appear in The Cape Times calling attention to Mr. Willoughby's position. He is, by the way, the missionary clergyman of whose congregation Khama is a member. Alice R. Palmer.

AN EASY SOLUTION OF A DARK PROBLEM.

Dear Union Signal:—An interesting account of the fourth Tuskegee conference is published in the Outlook for March 9. These conferences, at which from five to eight hundred negroes have been present, coming on foot, and in many primitive styles of conveyance from Alabama and adjoining states of the Black Belt, seem to be of vast importance in stimulating thought and inquiry as to methods of self-improvement and advancement in education and industries.

A few extracts will give an idea of their condition when unreached by outside influences as well as the good effects of the schools:

It was very interesting indeed to see the universal influence for good the schools are having; in the varying reports this was clearly brought out; as, for instance, in two from adjoining districts. One reported, "rapid improvement in morals and education; the people are buying land and paying for it; we have a good preacher; since last October we have raised $685 for our school." The report from the next district was: "Back on the prairie land we have no schools, no preaching but hollering, no better morals." One man naively urged that it wasn't good to speak against your section when Northern prospectors came round; but when another said, "It's no use to dodge the truth; we're not what we ought to be, but we're goin' to be better than we are," there was a general murmur of assent.

The Woman's Conference, held separately in the afternoon and presided over by Mrs. Warren Logan, wife of the treasurer of Tuskegee Institute, and herself a graduate of Atlanta, as he is of Hampton, had its own value and pathetic interest. The subject of home care instead of field work for women brought out the sorrowful testimony that "the men won't let you stay from the field"; "ef you don't work they won't work"; "maybe they'll take a stick to you." This was not universal, happily; but one woman said she had had ten children and had had to work all day in the field, leaving the baby rolled up on the bed and coming home only to nurse it; then sewing half the night on the sewing-machine to keep the family in clothes. The sewing-machine is as frequent and incongruous a piece of furniture in a one-room negro cabin as in an Indian "shack."

The progress of civilization and education among these people is encouraging, but slow. And it will take many years before they will become qualified to understand and vote intelligently on political questions.

This is the section where negro voters are in the majority, and yet when the election returns come in the party which they are supposed to represent are in the minority. This has greatly puzzled the politicians, and charges of fraud have been constantly made but without proof.

That the intelligent white people of the South could live under a government elected by illiterate and immoral negroes, is too much to be expected even by the party which was responsible for placing the franchise in such hands. How it has been prevented is a mystery yet unsolved.

An intelligent young friend living in Georgia, said, "The negroes do not vote and we can't let them vote, and they understand this." But the methods by which they came to this understanding were not divulged.

Such a state of things cannot be satisfactory to conscientious Christian men and law abiding citizens, which compose the white majority in these Southern states. A speedy and easy solution of the negro supremacy question would be the conferring of suffrage on the educated women of the South. This would increase the negro vote inconsiderably, but would give the white voters such a majority that all forms of negro intimidation could be done away with and the ballot be as free in Alabama as any Northern state.

Those who are familiar with the record of Southern women since the war and have witnessed their courage, industry and executive ability, will not doubt that the elective franchise would be wisely used and be of immense benefit in settling questions of morals and increasing the financial prosperity of the Southern states. ## ADVANCED LEGISLATION IN KANSAS.

Dear Union Signal:—The Kansas legislature is simply waiting for the governor to sign its bills that it may die, and as it waits I seat myself to look over for your readers' benefit, some things connected with its existence which may be of particular interest to them. Before its assembling, the element in the state which is always ready to prophesy the speedy death of Prohibition, commenced its usual cry as to what would certainly be done this time. The non-partisan organization, which was to see to it that the prohibitory amendment was resubmitted to the people, boasted loudly that it would present to the incoming legislature a petition signed by one hundred thousand citizens asking that their request be granted.

Wishing to be ready to meet this with counter-petitions, the Ministerial Union of Topeka and the state W. C. T. U. prepared protests against this action which were circulated throughout the state to be ready for use as soon as needed. When the law makers had assembled and settled themselves for work, the conditions disclosed as to the fate of Prohibition, as far as this legislature was concerned, were very gratifying, and it soon became apparrent that neither senate nor house could secure a majority even, to say nothing of the two-thirds vote necessary to submit an amendment. Various bills introduced in both branches which were inimical to Prohibition, soon met an untimely death where they originated, or at the hands of the body in the opposite end of the state house.

A bill early introduced in the house, the openly stated object of which was to make of non-effect the prohibitory amendment by repealing all sections of the statutes for its enforcement, met speedy death at the hands of a committee to which it was referred. The senate passed a resolution providing for the calling of a constitutional convention, with but five dissenting votes, three of which came from the Republican minority. This resolution, however, received its death blow very emphatically in the house. A bill to repeal our police commissioner law, considered to be in the interest of anti-prohibition, met a like fate. The matter of a constitutional convention being settled, the resolution for a resubmission to the voters of the state of the prohibitory amendment was presented, and with it the great petition of which so much had been said. By actual count, instead of the boasted one hundred thousand signatures it was to contain, there were but 29,388. The petitions of the friends of prohibition were ready. The W. C. T. U. petitions, tied with our white ribbon, numbering 13,877 signers, were presented by the youngest member of the delegation from Shawnee county, the county in which the legislature meets, and as they were carried to the clerk's desk were greeted with applause from both sides of the house. The total number of signatures attached to the protests was 36,517, a majority in favor of our present laws of over 7,000. Various efforts were made to advance this resolution and make it a "special order," but it was impossible to secure a vote for this proposition; and when at a late time in the session, a committee to revise the calendar was appointed, they struck from its pages all bills in any way affecting prohibition, saying that the people of Kansas seemed to be well satisfied with their prohibitory amendment and the statutes to enforce it, from which position no dissenting action was secured. The statement frequently made to me by Populists in the Senate and Republicans in the House that this body won't re-submit the prohibitory amendment was borne out by their acts, and the thanks of the friends of Prohibition should be freely tendered those members who brought about the happy result by their votes. When it is said "Kansas is tired of Prohibition," point to this legislature's action, and ask if its action bears out that statement.

One of the last acts of the legislature was to appropriate $3,500 for a hospital at the Girls' Industrial School at Beloit. This school is the direct result of the work of the state W. C. T. U., and any improvements there are always welcomed by our W. C. T. U. women.

To a Kansas woman who works much about the legislature it is matter for thanksgiving that her lot is cast in a Prohibition state, especially when she reads in other state papers of sales of liquor in their capitals. Tobacco smoke she occasionally encounters in the corridors and between sessions, but the fumes of liquor as a constant reminder that intoxicants are sold near by are a minus quality.

NEVADA IN THE WAKE.

Dear Union Signal:—A proposed constitutional amendment granting women the right of suffrage has passed both branches of the Nevada legislature after first suffering defeat in the lower house. It will take four years, however, if all goes well, before it can become a part of the constitution of the state, as it will have to be ratified by the next session of the legislature, two years from now, and if it passes that ordeal must still be submitted to the people for confirmation. For the first time in the history of the state, one of its leading newspapers, the Reno Gazette, opened its columns to the discussion of the woman suffrage question. It sent out invitations to all the prominent men and women in the state and to many pronounced advocates in other states to discuss the question. The invitation was very generally accepted. As there never was, nor can be, a logical argument presented against woman suffrage in any country where men are granted that right, the weight of the truths presented were all on our side. We believe our success to be due to the discussion of the question in the Gazette, and to the two able women whom we sent to the state capital to argue the question upon the floor of each house, namely, Rev. Milia Tupper Maynard, of Reno, and Mrs. J. R. Williamson, of Austin.

Dear Co-workers:—Last week we had a good time "comparing notes" on special difficulties; may not these be well followed by considering some of the reported to me since I called for fifty replies to the question, "What is the best thing your union has accomplished?"

"Our best work accomplished during the past year," writes one of those faithful officers, a recording secretary, "has been work in the schools." She tells how the teachers have been kept supplied with the Scientific Temperance Instruction "Monthly Advices," how several schools united in a school rally for temperance, of a teachers' reception at which the school board were present, speeches being made that impressed them if not with the vital importance of the cause represented, at least with the holy zeal of the representatives. In one of these schools a teacher is planning a temperance entertainment for the children, and one little boy is reported who "has given up drinking cider as a result of faithful teaching."

---

An interesting letter, too long to publish, witnesses to the good fruit borne by faithful use of the printed page. A German grocer was given some German tracts and asked to put one up with each package of goods. He indignantly refused, but the indomitable spirit of the white ribbon was not "downed." The zealous worker took time to visit the store often standing with her package of leaflets and papers, while customers came and went, each one offered with the request, "Take and read, please," Witness the result: "That man and most of his customers are now temperance people. He has been converted to woman's suffrage, and being our best merchant and the 'big one' of the foreigners, is a great gain for the good work."

A union in South Dakota is rejoicing over an anti-tobacco meeting which was carefully planned and enthusiastically carried out. The writer says: "Some have given up tobacco since then, and there has been far less smoking on our streets. The board of education passed a regulation to the effect that any members of the schools using tobacco were to be held liable to suspension or expulsion. The young ladies formed an anti-tobacco society, pledging themselves not to accept attention from young men who use tobacco.

"The president of the wide-awake union of T—— conceived the idea of missionary afternoon. Her plea was that missionaries sent out by the different denominations are prayed for, and much of interest manifested for them by the churches they represent. Then why not, by a special service, give the news to those who, for lack of information, fail to realize how much is done by our round-the-world missionaries. It must be remembered that all of our workers do not have access to that store-house of information, i. e., The Union Signal. A symposium was arranged for, giving to each speaker ten minutes in which to tell of important work done by the faithful women who have for years been carrying the gospel of Christian temperance to all the nations of the earth, and whose perils by land and sea have equalled any experienced by those who did not have, as it were, a double mission. An interested audience gladly heard of the grand work accomplished by this part of the, to us, bravest and best women of the nineteenth century. How can we ever be thankful enough to Him who hath guided the ways of the workers in our own, and in other lands?"

Knowledge is not only power, but inspiration, and those white-ribboners, only, who know the "ins and outs" of our great reforms can powerfully push it and enthusiastically plan for its presentation in attractive and effective ways.

"We have aided our state president by our prayers and hard labors to get several bills through the house, foremost among them one raising the age of consent from twelve to eighteen years."

Do not forget Temperance Sunday, March 24!

Yours for our peaceful war on all lines,

Mother Experience.

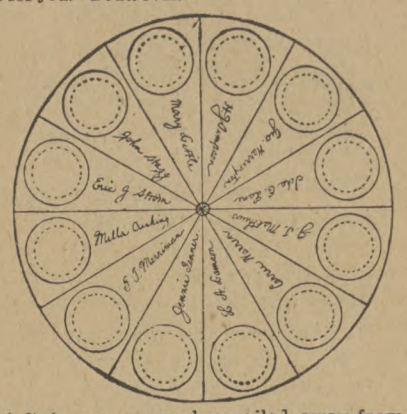
BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Prayer.—O our God, we have no might against this great company that cometh against us; neither know we what to do: but our eyes are upon thee.—II. Chron. 20:12.

Promise.—Ye shall not fear them: for the Lord your God he shall fight for you.—Deut. 3:22.



Our chieftain once more has sailed away from her native land and from us. May English air and the quiet, restful shades of Eastnor Castle, added to the loving ministrations of her noble hostess, again restore her to health and strength. Worn and frail she looked as I bade her good-bye the other day in New York, as she was starting on her much-dreaded ocean voyage. She expressed her grief that on account of her health she was able to do so little for the Temple this crucial year when the trustees have undertaken to raise $300,000; she said her joy would be great if on her return in the autumn success seemed assured. She felt certain if white-ribboners could be made to appreciate the importance of the enterprise there would be no trouble in raising the amount through the Temple Wheel. So strongly did she feel this that one of the last things she did before leaving was to write a letter appealing to the presidents of local unions, requesting them to dispose of one hundred wheels each in their respective unions. This letter will be sent out at once.

Frances Willard's parting plea might surely meet with a most enthusiastic response from every local union in the land. Let us rejoice her heart upon her return by the statement that all have responded. What think you would that mean? It is claimed we have ten thousand local auxiliaries. We have the names at any rate of over seven thousand unions who pay their dues to the National. If each of these would respond to Miss Willard's appeal, it would bring into the treasury over $700,000, not to speak of names secured on Wheels returned, to whom others will be sent out. I hear some timid, doubting sister exclaim, "We have only a dozen members in our union, what can we do with a hundred Wheels? You can each take one and fill it. Let your superintendent of Wheels distribute those remaining among the L. T. L. children, or else Sunday-school scholars, who will be delighted to fill them in order to secure a premium. Each superintendent who succeeds in getting a hundred Wheels filled will receive as a reward for her labor "A Great Mother," or, "Childhood, Its Care and Culture." If our women would but keep in mind the mighty hosts of evil before whom we are arrayed, and who are backed by unlimited millions, they would not hesitate to give a few hours' work to gaining that which will give the W. C. T. U. the "sinews of war" and enable them to cope as never before with a foe that is desolating the homes of our country, and in a menace to every fireside in the land.

There is an old saw, "He who gives quickly gives twice," and no greater truth was ever uttered. This is especially true in regard to filling Temple Wheels if our friends who send for them would immediately get them filled. It can be easily done in a few hours or a day or two at most, and return them to us at once. The chain can be continued and others sent out. The amount of money we are aiming for this year is so large, unless quick work is done we shall fall short of its attainment. Another point we would like to call attention to is the necessity for those sending for Wheels to enclose a stamp—so many forget. It is a small amount for each one, but it aggregates when counted by thousands, a great sum. For instance, it will cost us for stamps alone,—as it requires three cents for each Wheel, $250 to send out Miss Willard's letter enclosing one Wheel to each local president of a union. We would feel grateful if each person who returns a Wheel filled would enclose it in a piece of paper before placing in the envelope, as it will come much safer.

The unions continue to pledge and complete pledges for the benefit of the Temple. The W. C. T. U. of South Boston, Mass., sends $40, completing $100 for a tablet. The W. C. T. U. of Lancaster county, Pa., sends $80.48, Kennett, $55, and Montoursville $25, all completing pledges Besides this Pennsylvania sends from Tioga county, $15.82. Montoursville's hundred dollars is to place the name of Miss Alice P. Rogers on a tablet. Mrs. Nannie S. Trigg sends $14.40 from the Greenville, Miss., union to apply on its pledge.

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money order and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1113, The Temple, Chicago.

THE DAY IS BREAKING.

Rejoice! the day is breaking;
The gloom of night is gone;
The people are awaking,
And work has to be done.
The temperance reformation
Must steadily roll on,
Until a sober nation
Shall hail the victory won.

Rejoice! the cause is telling,
With power it clears the way;
Uprooting and dispelling,
Delusions which betray.
Drink customs, still prevailing,
Through centuries have grown,
But, with the truth assailing,
These shall be overthrown.

Rejoice! our tide is flowing,
By means of tongue and pen,
Choice gifts of love bestowing—
"Peace and good-will to men."
With temperance light increasing,
The brighter day shall come,
And earnest work, unceasing
Shall seal the tempter's doom.

WHAT TOBACCO WILL DO FOR A BOY.

BY MABEL GIFFORD.

(Concluded from March 7.)

"They wanted me to sign a petition," continued Mr. Melvin. "They are trying to make scientific temperance instruction one of the school studies. It's all fol-de-rol. I don't want my boy's head stuffed with such nonsense as they have put into their books, and I certainly shall not vote for it or sign any petition for it."

Franklin was listening attentively. This hour was, though not one of the three dreamed of such a possibility, a turning point in his life. This was the view his father took of the tobacco question, and his father must be right.

Years after when Franklin graduated from the public school he passed the examinations creditably but took no honors.

"I expected a great deal more of Franklin," said the superintendent, "he is a young man of great promise. He seems to be really brilliant at times, but at other times quite dull. His studies come too easy to him; he does not make effort enough."

It was the same on the playground. An expert one day, another an indifferent player. "You can't depend on Franklin Melvin," the boys said.

He was anxious to enter a military school, but he was unable to pass the examinations here, being pronounced physically unsound. "It is useless," said the examiner, "for a man that uses tobacco to attempt to enter a military school."

Then Franklin studied law, but failed in that, for, though eloquent and witty, shrewd and keen, he had periods of confusion when nothing seemed clear and he could not collect his thoughts. "So strange," people said, "that such a smart lawyer should lose so many cases."

Then he tried medicine, and it was the same old story, a brilliant beginning and every one's favorite, then a quick falling off until the word "failing" stared him in the face again.

Standing amid the ruins of what had been a promising career, Franklin Melvin acknowledged the truth to which he had stoutly refused to listen, namely, that tobacco was a viper that was sucking his life's blood, weakening body and brain, and transforming a noble manhood into a very inferior specimen. He thought of his father who year by year grew morose, irritable and dull. He thought of all the warnings to which he had turned a deaf ear, and the many young men who had failed that were slaves of the tobacco habit.

"I will give it up," he said, and he did make a struggle only to return to his habit more a slave than ever.

The friend who had gone West when he was a child returned to her old home. Strangers lived at the Melvin homestead. Upon inquiry she learned that Mr. Melvin had failed in business, most unaccountably, and had committed suicide, and the wife had died of a broken heart. When she inquired for the son, no one could tell her of his whereabouts. But they told her that he had not amounted to anything, and remarked that it was not always the smartest boys that made the smartest men. He had not married as she supposed. He had been engaged to a daughter of one of the first men in the place, but the engagement had been broken, no one knew why.

Leaving the town sorrowfully, for the Melvins had been dear friends, she went on to the city to visit other friends there.

This woman had a tender heart, and was laughed at by her friends for her generosity to beggars. "They are hypocrites and frauds, and most of them are rich," they told her. But the good woman's pocket was never empty of pennies, and she was so afraid that the beggars she saw were not the disreputable kind that she could not refuse them.

One day after having bought flowers of a little girl, pencils of a one-armed man, and leaving several pennies in the hand of a blind woman, she was accosted by a most miserable creature, so lean and so ragged, so palsied and so feeble, she could hardly tell whether he was a young man or an old man. She was alone, so there was no one to pull her by the arm and urge her not to stop.

"A penny, please, madam, a penny," begged this pitiful creature. Though the voice was whining and unsteady and feeble like a consumptive's, the woman immediately noted that his accent was not like that of the ordinary street beggars. She looked at him earnestly as she dropped a few of the never failing pennies in his hand. There was something familiar in the marred face. The man did not look up, and she stepped back a little to watch him, so impressed was she that she knew him. He chewed and spat incessantly. From women he asked a penny; from men for "a penny for God's sake, or a cigar," or "a chew of tobacco."

Suddenly the woman watching reappeared before the miserable wretch. "Who are you?" she said.

Taken by surprise, he looked up at her. Immediately his head sank down, his knees bent under him as if he would fall.

The woman, quite pale now, took the man by the shoulder. "Tell me who you are," she commanded. "You are not, you can't be, my dear friend's son, Franklin Melvin."

By the way the figure crouched and moaned she knew her worst fears were realized. She ordered a carriage, this great-hearted woman, and together they went to a public bath and to a clothier's, and then to the house where she was visiting, and listened to his account of what tobacco had done for one boy. Later she took him to a home where he would have good care and medical treatment. All that could be done for such a wreck was to mitigate his sufferings until death should release him from his enemy, tobacco.

And the woman, the friend, has taken a new motto, "As ye go, preach," and she goes up and down the country, telling everywhere what tobacco will do for a boy, preaching "death to tobacco," instead of our boys.

THE FOOD WE EAT.

BY HELEN MILLINGTON.

I began to study diet simply as a housekeeper, but as my children came to me my interest deepened and I took a broader outlook. I then studied the relative value of food from many points,—brain, bone, muscle and nerve food, what was heating to the system and what cooling, etc.

In my constant watchfulness to gather information it was odd how many facts came in my way. The one I have never forgotten, and which I have "sown as seed beside all waters," is: The man who eats no meat cannot drink liquor. Meat forms a gas in the stomach with which liquor will assimilate, and nothing but meat forms that gas. Without meat the stomach rejects drink.

This theory was advanced in London over thirty years ago, and was thoroughly tested by those vegetarians who advanced it. They fitted up a temperance hospital and placed there drinking men of all ages and stations, from the "gentleman" tippler to the gutter drunkard, and never failed to cure one of the scores of drinkers experimented upon. No meat was allowed in the institution even for soups or broth, but lentils (an English bean) formed the basis of most soups and were served in many ways, often combined with other vegetables. All fruits, vegetables and grains were given freely, and with this simple treatment every case left the hospital freed from the desire for liquor.

With this fact in mind I have pleaded with mothers to keep meat away from their little ones, and sometimes my counsel prevailed, but often it failed to break bad habits. I recall one home in which I am deeply interested in which the man was past thirty-five and the wife perhaps eight years younger at the time of their union. As might be expected from such a mature union their first and only child (a boy of four years now) is a specimen of physical perfection, and might become a grand man if properly trained. At the time of my first visit to them I was dismayed at the quantity of meat and strong coffee given to that child of two and a half years. I reasoned with them, pleaded and warned them, but the father said: "He loves it, and I don't want anything on my table he can't share." He smiled at the suggestion that he follow Paul's example and deny himself for his child's welfare. The mother urged that he loved it and cried for it, and that she could not refuse him. For weeks I tried to save this child from mistaken kindness, but every morning he came running to the table crying, "meat, meat." He always had it, and washed it down with strong coffee.

This year I visited them again. The first meal convinced me that the meat eating had increased with the years' growth, and one day after an earnest talk with the mother I asked her if this child should grow up to be a drunkard how she would bear it? "As well as other mothers do," she answered. "But," I persisted, "would you blame yourself for it?" "No, indeed! I ate meat all my life, and it never made a drunkard of me, and I'll give him all he wants as long as he loves it."

How many ignorant mothers have made drunkards of the sons they would have died to save. As we sow we shall reap. If we fire the blood of our babes with spices, pastry, cakes, animal food, tea and coffee, we need not be shocked when we find them smoking, chewing and a little later on drinking. These are the harvests we reap and the fruit is legitimate. It does not stop there for such a course of feeding in childhood excites and abnormally develops the sexual nature which is too often destroyed by youthful excesses before a ripe age. That mother who is wise enough to feed her children with cooling diet adapted to their needs will have her reward in them later.

This law of diet should be advanced in all our temperance work, for the man whose blood is full of the animal and fired with drink is a hard subject to deal with. While our public schools are teaching the children the effects of liquor on the human system, mothers at home should second their efforts by furnishing simple, wholesome, cooling diet.

WHY ORDAIN WOMEN TO PREACH?

BY A. P. GRAVES, D. D.

No one acquainted with the Bible questions for one moment the large place given to women by Christ to advance His cause. It was significant. They were warmly attached to Him; they were closely associated with the apostles and early disciples in their work; they were the last with loving words and sympathizing tears at Calvary, and the first at the grave in the triumphant hour of His resurrection. They prayed, they gave testimony of religious power and experience; they were first to proclaim the victories of Christ's resurrection, and no man ever preached the gospel more really or successfully than did the women of Samaria go to the men and tell them of Christ's power to save just after her conversion.

It is true that neither Jesus nor the apostles ever gave instance of laying on hands to ordain them in form, but they certainly did sanction their work and their proclamations of truth. There is no more authority in the Scriptures to organize Sunday-schools, have church choirs or employ our varied forms of worship or collect our usual expense funds for the church than there is to ordain women to preach. Besides all this, in all the ages Providence, as well as teaching an example, has had much to do with shaping and presenting the work of the church. Providence has brought women to the front ranks in Christian labor as never before.

No other country has ever given to woman such a place in the activities of the Zion of God as is now seen in our own land. To make allusion to the opponents of woman's ordination on the ground that Paul said, "Let the women keep silent in the churches," is too ridiculous to mention. These same negative advocates do not object to the women teaching large Bible classes, preaching in the households, singing in church choirs and otherwise, and engaging in any amount of loud talk in the church when the assembly is dismissed, but they must be forbidden to speak in the prayer-meeting and the pulpit. Amid the providential leadings, as well as the divine sanction by the Lord Jesus of women's work in the days of His flesh, it is very evident that were Christ among men in person to-day He would more fully than ever set apart the women to proclaim His truth. And what He would do we believe He would have us do, led by His unerring hand.

FAN.

BY J. L. HARBOUR.

(Concluded.)

She sprang suddenly to her feet and started down the road at such a rapid rate, with the little boy's hand clasped so tightly in hers that he begged: "Wait, Fan, wait! you go too fast, and you hurt my hand."

"I didn't mean to, Carey. I'll walk slower now."

In half an hour they came to Jim Fifer's saloon down by the ferry. The little one-roomed frame house was dark, and Fan shook her fist savagely toward it as she hurried by with Carey clinging close to her side.

"I'll do this neighborhood a good service by ridding it of you. I'd do it this minute if I didn't have Carey with me," she gasped.

Jim Fifer lived in a new house at the edge of the timber, a short distance from his saloon. A bright light shone in two of the front windows of the house.

"They're up," said Fan to herself. "It's a good thing they are, or I'd get 'em up. My father's earnings have helped to pay for that house, and I've a right to stay in it. I'll tell Jim Fifer so!"

She rapped loudly at the door. Jim Fifer opened it. Fan strode in boldly with Carey's hand in hers.

"I guess you know us, Jim Fifer," she said, when she had closed the door and was standing with her back against it. She stood and looked fiercely at him, while his wife, a sad-eyed, troubled-looking young woman stared at the two children in wonder.

"I don't have to tell you, Jim Fifer, that we are Mr. Tracy's children. He came home from your saloon mad with drink awhile ago, and chased us out into the cold and darkness; he's done it many a time when drink has made him crazy. We'd no place to go, and as your whisky made him drive us out, I thought you'd feel that it was your place to take us in."

She spoke fearlessly, with her big, shining black eyes fixed on the man's face. One arm was thrown protectingly around her little brother, who had his face in her skirts and was trembling and crying with terror of the man whom he regarded as the cause of all their misfortune.

Before the man could make any reply his wife uttered a cry, and ran to him and hid her face on his breast. In a voice broken by sobs she cried out pitifully:

"O James! James! is it true? Does she tell the truth?

Fifer hung his head in silence, and Fan said in a lower and gentler tone:

"It is true, every word of it, Mrs. Fifer. We've often been turned out at night into the cold and the wet, and we go ragged and hungry because of that saloon."

"James! James! James!" cried Mrs. Fifer, in an agony of shame and distress.

There had been strange influences at work in Jim Fifer's heart for two or three days; a slumbering conscience had suddenly been quickened into life. Several things had happened to trouble him. Other cases of distress had come to him, and his young wife had been pleading with him that very evening to forsake the business. He loved her, and he loved his own two little boys sleeping safely in their beds in the next room.

He thought of them, and of the disgrace that he was piling up for their future, as he looked at the two wet, ragged, pale and hungry children of Joe Tracy.

His wife was thinking of them, too, for she suddenly cried out in a sharper note of pleading distress: "James, James, think of our own two little boys!"

"I am thinking of them, Martha," he said.

"Then I know what you will do, James," she said.

He nodded his head two or three times without speaking, and suddenly broke away from his wife's embrace and ran hatless from the house.

His wife turned toward the two children and took little Carey up into her arms, crying over him and kissing him.

Five minutes later a red glow illumined the woods down by the ferry. A sheet of flame shot up among the trees, making their black and leafless branches stand out boldly in its light. The flames rose higher and higher, and Mrs. Fifer and Fan could see in the brilliant firelight a bareheaded man standing in the road with folded arms, looking at the destruction of his casks of liquor. He had dragged them out into the road and set fire to them.

The place at the ferry was never reopened as a saloon. In the little building Jim Fifer set up the business of a shoemaker, to which he had been trained. There he prospered and became a respected citizen.

My father and several others interested themselves particularly in Tracy. There was a little house of two or three rooms on our farm into which they moved. Mrs. Fifer did much for the children.

There were still remains of manliness and honor in poor Tracy, and the time came when Fan and Carey were proud to call him father, and when he was all that a father ought to be to his children.—Youth's Companion.

SOMEBODY ELSE.

A lady was walking quietly along the city street not long ago, when the door of a house flew open, and a boy shot out with a whoop like a wild Indian. Once on the pavement he danced a sort of double-shuffle all around the curb-stone, and raced down the street in great haste, for it was evident, by the books under his arm, that he was going to school. The lady was thinking what thoughtless, noisy creatures healthy boys always are, when just a few yards before her she saw something yellow lying on the stones. Coming nearer she fancied it was a fine shaving, and looked after the boy again.

She saw him suddenly stop short in a crowd of people at a crossing, and come back as fast as he had gone, so that just before she reached the shaving he did—and picked up, not a shaving at all, but a long, shiny plantain skin. Flinging it into a refuse barrel, he only waited long enough to say, "Somebody might have slipped on it," and was off again. It was a little thing to do, but that one glance of the boy's clear, gray eyes, and the simple, earnest sentence, made the lady's heart very warm toward the noisy fellow. He had not slipped himself; he was far past the danger—and when one is in a hurry, it is a great bother to go twice over the same ground,—but then "somebody else" might slip, and so, for the sake of this unknown somebody, the hurrying boy came back, and, it may be, saved the life or limbs of a feeble old man or a tender little child.

He might have said, "I can't wait to go back—it is none of my doing, and so it is none of my business;" but he made it his business, and in this showed a trait of character which promised well for the future. There is nothing nobler on earth than this taking care that "somebody else" shall not suffer needlessly. The child who grows up with such a spirit in him may make his home like a heaven upon earth; and he will never know what it is to be unloved or friendless.—From "Tools for Teachers."

Dear Boys and Girls:—Do you begin to realize that it is spring-time? It is not so easy to think that spring is here when we look out and see patches of snow on the frozen earth and find our ears and fingers tingling in the cold air when out of doors. But the almanac says it is spring, and that it came on March 20. With a little faith and patience the days of bloom and warm sunshine will soon be here. Our Southern Cozy Corner cousins and those in California will think I am a little late in speaking of spring, for they have had summer for some time.

Although spring isn't quite here, some of our Cornerers have been busy. I hear that Harry Hill, of Cleveland, has started the first anti-cigarette league in the Forest City. Good for Harry!

The L. T. L. of Upper Darby, Eastern School, Delaware county, Pa., has sent a picture scrap-book, gotten up with a great deal of care, to the National Temperance Hospital for the use of the little patients in the L. T. L. room. Wasn't that a beautiful work of love?

Jennie Campbell, of Beverly Hill, Chicago, sends a word of encouragement to the Cozy Cornerers who think that the part they do for temperance is very small. She writes: "Have you ever heard of the little boy whose penny did so much good for Jesus? He gave it to the missionary who bought a tract with it and by it a soul of a poor heathen was saved. Let us do our part and have our dear Saviour say to us some day, 'Well done!'"

There's nothing will make the world so bright and bring sunshine so glowing into our hearts at any season of the year as the knowledge that we have done our part no matter how small it may be.

Affectionately, your

Aunt Jane

My sisters work for the temperance cause and I do what I can to help put down King Alcohol. We have had no saloons in our town for about eight (8) years, and every spring some one tries to get one in New Galilee, but we temperance people try to prevent them, and have been successful every year. We do not know whether we will be successful this spring or not. There is a man trying to get a saloon here, but we hope and pray he will not get his license. Gray Caskey.

Galilee, O.

We all unite with you in that hope and prayer, Gray.

I would like to belong to your Cozy Corner; we have no L. T. L. here. We have two saloons in town. My papa is a temperance man and my mother is a W. C. T. U. and takes The Union Signal. I like the Children's page very much. I am nine years old and I have a cat and she will drink nothing but sweet milk. This is the first time I have written to the Cozy Corner. Grace Randall.

Huntley, Ill.

A temperance cat in a temperance family, of course.

We are all looking forward to the National Convention next fall with a great deal of pleasure. There are two people I would like very much to see who are coming to the Convention, and they are our president, Frances E. Willard and dear Aunt Jane. The Y's of the city are going to have a bazaar in April, and the L. T. L's are going to have a table. Our L. T. L. is going to take charge of it one night. I wish some of the cousins would write to me. I like to get letters ever so much.

Leonora B. Perrine.

1925 W. Baltimore St., Baltimore, Md.

Write again, later, Leonora, when Convention arrangements are more complete, and tell us what part the children are going to take in the plans for the great annual white ribbon meeting.

We have an L. T. L. here and I am secretary. I think it is very nice. We meet every other Sunday in the afternoon. I would like to join the Cozy Corner. I have been thinking it would be nice to have an uncle and call him Uncle James. I should think it would be easier on you. I wish some of the readers of my letter would write to me.

Duke Center, Pa. Edith Irvine.

Don't you remember Uncle John, Edith, who told the children how to make so many useful things? We can have many uncles as well as aunts, and we hereby invite them to visit our Corner.

My father, mother and grandfather are all Prohibitionists. My grandfather takes The Union Signal and I love to read it. I would like to receive a letter from one of the little nieces of the Cozy Corner. I go to school and am in the fourth reader. Mildred Miller.

Three Oaks, Mich.

Fourth reader cousins, attention! Here's a classmate with whom to correspond.

Let them praise thy great and terrible name; for it is holy.—Ps. 99:3.

SOCIAL ENVIRONMENT AND REFORM.

There is the highest historical authority for the assertion that since the departure from Eden it has been the universal practice of humanity to lament the degeneracy of the times and deplore the sins peculiar to the present generation. There is equally good authority for believing that each generation has had good and sufficient reason for thus lamenting its "manifold sins and wickedness" and there can be no doubt that many successive generations will have equally good cause to continue the lamentation.

The wisdom of such regret depends entirely upon the spirit which prompts it. Sorrow for sin either in ourselves or others has value only in proportion as it leads to practical efforts for the reformation of the sinner. Very many of those who are keenly alive to the sins of the present time put forth earnest efforts to secure reform. That these efforts are not more successful is, we believe, due to the fact that too generally they stop with attempts to reform the individual merely and disregard the social conditions which are largely responsible for the evil.

This is not saying that work for the individual is not necessary. The truth is that the individual must first be reached before anything more can be done. But it is also true that whenever any kind of evil becomes markedly prevalent in society, it is an infallible indication that there is something in the conditions of society which produce it. Man is not a mere creature of circumstances. He has a natural, or rather an abnormal, tendency to evil, which makes it possible for him to sin under the best possible conditions and, on the other hand, he still has within him a spark of divinity which in conjunction with the divine help that is always ready to save him, makes it possible for him to resist temptation however adverse the outward conditions.

But the majority of men will be largely molded by their environment. In a state of society where the most atrocious cruelty is commonly practiced, as in the case of the American Indians when dealing with their foes, a few persons may be merciful, the majority will be cruel and bloodthirsty. In a society where the law makes the recovery of a debt depend, in the last extremity, upon selling the debtor and his family into slavery, a few may be compassionate and forgive the bankrupt debtor, the majority will smother their sympathies and show no pity. If society is so constructed that it is greatly for people's temporal advantage to steal, a heroic few will maintain their integrity uncorrupted, but there will be a fearful crop of thieves, and the general tone of society on the subject of honesty will be greatly lowered.

Conversely, therefore, when we find that some one particular form of sin is a characteristic of the times, we may expect to find it accounted for by the conditions of society, and we are not wise in our efforts at reform if we do not include in them attempts to change these conditions. We know that Christ described the kingdom of God as a little leaven hid in a measure of meal and that neither He nor His disciples made any attempts to directly modify social conditions. But the circumstances were entirely different then. The early Christians had no political power or influence whatever. To-day, Christians not only have a strong direct control over political affairs; they have also great political responsibilities. Moreover, all history shows that the next step after the individual conscience has been reached has always been a revolution in social conditions. The leaven which at first worked so quietly has in the end always "turned the world upside down."

The evils of our time center in what was long ago declared to be the "root of all evil," "the love of money." The political bribery, the dishonest business methods, the defalcations, the lax sentiment which regards it perfectly legitimate to break the spirit of a contract provided any flaw renders the written contract void, the oppression of the laboring classes by the capitalists, all prove this. And we have not far to go to find in our social conditions cause sufficient to produce the existing evils.

A system based upon competition, which means that success depends very little upon the service rendered to others and very much upon outwitting others, in which the bread and butter problem is in its very essence a struggle of each against all, may not develop serious evils so long as people are scattered and the means of subsistence obtained from a fertile soil with comparative ease; but, when the invention of labor-saving machinery and the development of the manifold arts of a high civilization, mass humanity together in great cities and necessitate the concentration of vast wealth; when men must work together, whether they will or not, and each becomes dependent upon all the rest, the true character of the basal principle will make itself known and the struggle for existence will become, as in fact it has in our civilization, a bitter fight. The few will seize upon the sources of power and reduce those who have failed thus to do into a species of serfdom.

The remedy lies not in appeals to the generosity of those who hold the reins of power. It is not generosity but justice that the world needs and we shall never attain to justice under a system based on the theory that life is of necessity a struggle of each against all. In some way the struggle for existence of the human species must be transformed from that of the brute into a struggle of all for all. How this is to be accomplished is the great problem of our age.

IN THE CAUSE OF HUMANITY.

Nowhere is the hollowness of nineteenth century "chivalry" so conspicuous, nowhere does the modern man demonstrate so clearly his inefficiency and untrustworthiness as a protector of womankind as in our so-called courts of justice. So long as there are men who flock to our criminal trials for the sole purpose, apparently, of indulging a prurient curiosity; so long as there are lawyers who descend to insolence and insult in their examination of female witnesses; so long as there are judges who countenance and encourage such insolence and insult; so long, indeed, as there are women to be tried and women and children to be questioned and cross-questioned before the law, the presence of women spectators in our court rooms is, for the dignity of womanhood in general and in the interests of common humanity, absolutely imperative.

The beneficent effect of the mother influence was strikingly shown in a recent court room scene in Oakland, Cal., in which Mrs. O. M. Sanford, auditor of the state W. C. T. U., by a clever stratagem checkmated a move designed to embarrass girl witnesses and thus place them at a disadvantage in giving their testimony.

Upon complaint of the neighbors, one Adam Schmegner was arrested for infamous crimes, the principal witnesses against him being his two motherless daughters, aged respectively eighteen and nine years. "The testimony taken at the preliminary hearing," said the newspaper report, "did not give a complete story of Schmegner's crimes, but attracted a crowd of men that occupied every available portion of the court room."

Mrs. Sanford, as agent for the Humane Society, demanded a trial with closed doors, but upon the objection of Schmegner's attorneys—whose motive was obvious—that was refused by the court. Impelled by one of the inspired ideas which come to women in such emergencies, Mrs. Sanford appealed to the W. C. T. U. As a result, when the court opened twenty or more gray-haired mothers were found occupying seats within hearing distance of the witness stand, and many an inquisitive male spectator was promptly relegated to a back seat by the bailiff in order to make room in front for the ladies.

"Consequently," says our informant, "hardly a man, aside from the court officers and attorneys, could hear a word the witnesses spoke, and instead of having an audience that would embarrass them the Schmegner girls were surrounded by a guard of motherly, benevolent faces." Standing by the side of Mrs. Sanford the nine-year-old girl shyly but plainly told the story of her father's crimes—of his inhuman abuse of herself and his three-year-old baby, her statements being corroborated by her sister.

In arguing the case the attorney for the defense, as, was to be expected, alluded in scathing terms to the presence of the white-ribboners, asking if they were there to see justice done or from a "morbid curiosity," and was proceeding more severely to attack their motives when he was sharply called to order by the court. Perhaps it would be in order to inquire here what were the motives of the men in leaving their various important business avocations to be present at the trial; was it to see justice done and to protect helpless womanhood and innocent childhood?

The defense evidently felt bitterly chagrined at the thought that the quick-wittedness of a woman had so successfully "turned the tables" and by a bold but eminently womanly stroke had wrested from it its vantage ground and brought about its defeat. For after a conference of fifteen or twenty minutes the jury returned a verdict of guilty.

In this incident is there not a timely suggestion for W. C. T. U. women everywhere? There are occasions when women as well as men should spare a little time to visit our halls of justice. Let us give the lawyers and judges more of our attention in the future, and whenever a woman is to be tried or a woman is to be examined as witness, let us invade the court rooms.

THE "HOME SALON."

As a sign of the universal interest with which every effort in the solution of the liquor problem is viewed in rthese latter days, we have only to point to the swift notoriety acquired by the "Home Salon," of Chicago. Though this institution has been on trial but a few weeks, its fame has already extended not only beyond this city, but beyond our national borders, and from British dominions, as well as from our own states, questions come to us as to the validity of its claim as a temperance reform method.

No one doubts that in this new venture, in which Bishop Fallows is the leading spirit, its promoters are actuated by the purest and most laudable of motives—the uplifting of their fellowmen, and that, too, in the truest gospel sense of the stretching out rather than down of a helping hand. Neither does any temperance reformer question the wisdom of providing a substitute for the saloon while devising ways and means to shut up the saloon itself—a substitute that shall possess the social features of the saloon without its debasing influences. As Prohibitionists, too, we believe that any move which stimulates agitation of the drink question cannot be otherwise than beneficial in the end to the cause of prohibition.

Still, we cannot but think that Bishop Fallows and his coadjutors in their desire to attract that class of people which frequents the basement grog-shops has fallen rather too readily into the ways and tricks of the grog-seller. The salon is simply a basement cafeteria, supplemented by a bar and a white-aproned bar-tender. It has the usual saloon appointments—bottles, glasses, beer mugs and cigars—over which the pictured faces of Frances Willard and Neal Dow look benignly if rather incongruously down.

Furthermore the salon is provided with a government license. Not that the "Bishop's beverage" is intoxicating—for a prominent placard upon the wall assures his patrons that it is home-brewed and non-alcoholic—but the management would rather pay the tax than be worried by the visits of revenue inspectors. Now to our minds this is the great mistake of the Bishop and his advisers. If the salon expects to sustain a reputation as a temperance institution one of the strongest means to that end would be not only to permit but to invite the most rigid investigation. To pay a tax on beer is to cripple the enterprise in the eyes of its friends and to lay it open to attack from its enemies. Such an innovation as a "temperance saloon" cannot be too strongly fortified on all sides against misapprehension and abuse.

There is one more "temperance saloon" in Chicago, but that has even less to commend it than the "Bishop's saloon." It is not even dignified by the name of salon and has nothing to distinguish it from the ordinary drinking place except the picture of Miss Willard, the sign of "Non-intoxicants" on the wall and—its lack of customers.

The Union Signal is an optimist of the optimists, firmly believing that "all things work together for good," and notwithstanding these methods of the Home Salon which we criticize in a friendly spirit as seeming to our minds to be concessions to a system fundamentally wrong, we at the same time recognize the good in this reform effort, and the good that will result from it—though this last may be in a direction least expected by its projectors.

COMPLIMENTARY PRAYERS.

Among the many indications that the theory of prayer is changing none is perhaps more impressive than the well-nigh universal custom of introducing complimentary allusions into the petitions to the throne of the heavenly grace. A hundred years ago and less the concept of prayer made it a force that moved the Almighty arm because it had changed the purposes of the Omnipotent will.

The results of scientific study, tending strongly to impress the truth of the consistency and continuity of law, not only on this planet, but throughout the boundless universe, as revealed to us by the study of astronomy, have produced in the average mind a sense of the presence of God so much more near and constant than that presence was realized in the past, that the reflex influence of prayer on him who offers it seems now to be uppermost in the public thought.

Therefore, since it is always well for us to think the best we can of those about us, and to endeavor especially to appreciate the efforts of those who have difficult burdens to carry, good men and women have begun to make complimentary comments in their prayers in relation to their great leaders and comrades in great movements. There is something so kindly and generous in all this, and so encouraging to those thus borne aloft in the confidence and affection of their co-workers, that to speak harshly of the custom would be ungracious, nor do we think it desirable wholly to omit such helpful allusions, but we believe they should be made as impersonal as possible.

We fervently wish that ministers would form a habit of introducing into the devotions of the congregation special prayer for all who bear the brunt of criticism because of taking new departures to which they believe themselves called by the voice of the Spirit, and to pray that all statesmen, reformers, philanthropists, orators, poets, journalists—all who influence humanity in large masses, may be conscious of their vast responsibility and that they may humbly ask the guidance of the Holy Ghost. We believe that prayers for the home and those who keep its altars bright, and who put a light in the window for weary wayfarers should be constant on the part of public teachers. We believe that fireside prayers should include all these to whom we have referred, for by this means those who participate in them are lifted out of narrowness and become broad and generous in their sympathies and inclusive in the range of interests to which they are allied.

But it seems to us that much care should be exercised in public prayer not to incur the famous criticism leveled against a great preacher many years ago, namely: That he "delivered the finest prayer ever addressed to a Brooklyn audience."

ORGANIZATION AMONG WOMEN.

In a recent interview Mrs. Amie Hicks, superintendent of the labor department of the British Woman's Temperance Association, stated that the difficulty she had found in her efforts to organize trades unions in England among women was far greater than that of men who had organized among men. The low wages that women receive; the uncertainty of their work; the lack of opportunity to learn a trade thoroughly as a boy learns it; the inferior position held by women, even in the unskilled trades, and the fact that she is employed in what are called the "season trades," that is, especial work growing out of the season of the year, so that in winter she has one trade and in summer another—all these and many other reasons make it difficult to teach women to combine.

But Mrs. Hicks contended that "when women once grasp the power of organization they hold to it better than men. They are more loyal and devoted, and will endure more hardship, personally, for the success of the union. The jute workers of Glasgow and the Lancashire weavers receive the same wages as men, because they are organized, but when the daughters of well-to-do families go to work on lower wages than a self-dependent woman can support herself upon honorably, they have set a key-note that degrades the friendless girl or the one who must help poor relatives, for she has to compete with the girl who has a home and need not have gone out to work at all. What I contend for is, that if the well-to-do girl goes out to work she shall not accept a lower wage than will maintain the girl who is not well-to-do.

"Another evil is the love of cheapness, which is so strong in women and has been developed by their lack of money, so that they seem willing to buy goods at the lowest price no matter who suffers by their action. I never saw anything in England so bad as in the sweating dens of New York city. I only wish that women of means would once find out how the clothes are made that many of them wear. I have seen boys' sailor suits sold at two and nine-pence (68 cents) per dozen, and the woman who makes that dozen finds her own cottons and thread. I was told by an American girl that she had a seamstress friend who was making ladies' dressing-gowns at forty cents a dozen in New York. In the Bowery they work from sixteen to seventeen hours a day. How can such women 'combine'? The help for them must come from the outside. Not only the Trades Unionist, but the great public must help, and what I ask the well-to-do women to think about is their duty in the matter. I know they are not hard-hearted, but how often do they think what has been the sorrow of those who made the things that they enjoy?"

Mrs. Hicks was asked, "Do you object to middle-class girls working?" She answered, "I do not wish them to be idle, but I do wish them not to take less wage than the self-supporting girls must have. I think that everybody should work for the benefit of society, but if you do not need to work for your own living I beg you to demand a living rate of wage. I know of women who work for fifty-six and one-half hours a week and get seven, eight and nine shillings ($1.75, $2 and $2.50) a week. Having done this, they are too tired and too distressed to join trades unions and help build up the labor cause."

On February 18 a large party of representative white-ribboners assembled at Convention Hall, Washington, D. C., to see the Petition as it had appeared to the first great audience. Miss Willard and Lady Henry were delighted to note the tasteful and impressive manner in which it had been arranged and grouped under the supervision of Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, custodian of World's W. C. T. U. archives, who spent three days in the hall for this purpose. Going on the platform while everybody stood up because the hall was cold, Miss Willard called for the singing of "America," after which she spoke briefly, and Cassie Smith, who is getting to be called the "Chaplain of the W. C. T. U.," led in a fervent prayer. Then, as the group was about to break up, there came something not on the program. A figure of the height and general appearance of John B. Gough, with his long gray hair and beard and active motions, stepped to the front and began to render one of his famous orations. Everybody stood still, and the manner, voice and matter were a startling reproduction of the great orator. It seemed like poetic justice indeed, for the bright memory of Gough to be thus associated with the Great Polyglot, which is in part the outcome of his work. The impersonator was Miss Helen Potter, so well known in that character a few years since, having made eighteen hundred public appearances as an impersonator of Gough, Susan B. Anthony, Dr. Talmage and others. Miss Potter is a thorough temperance woman, and will "come with us" and speak for the cause, embellishing her lectures with these ingenious impersonations. She can be addressed at the Hotel Pelham, Boston.

That our Great Polyglot Petition should be held up as a herald of peace is a legitimate part of its errand of love. Home protection would shelter the home from all its enemies by liquid fires, narcotic fumes and the "flaming sword." It is not surprising that Congressman Morse, of Massachusetts, in his recent glowing speech before the House, protesting against an increase of appropriation for our national armament, referred to the Great Petition and its mission as a vivid object lesson in support of his argument, concluding with these eloquent words: "Does this great movement, championed in England by Lady Henry Somerset and in this country by that queen of American women, Miss Frances E. Willard, and known as the white ribbon movement, which has circled the world in its errand of love, mean nothing? Does this argue nothing in favor of disarmament and the ushering in of that glorious day so long predicted in God's Word, when men shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks, and when nation shall not lift up sword against nation, nor learn war any more?"

I learn from a history of the origin of the Illinois W. C. T. U. recently prepared by Mrs. Gordon H. Read, of Bloomington, that the idea of a special hour of prayer originated at its first meeting some weeks before the first National W. C. T. U. in Cleveland, but the suggestion of a twilight hour was made by Miss Willard at the second annual meeting of the National (Cincinnati, 1875), a year later, the women of Newark requesting through the New Jersey delegation that we unite upon the noon hour, which we then and there agreed to do.

What can be said of the white Christians who are still indifferent to the great inroads of the rum power, when a simple African chief can speak as did Khama, who has so successfully opposed the introduction of intoxicants into his own country? It was at a recent social gathering in Cape Town given in his honor, and a part of his speech is quoted as follows: "I thank you very heartily for your kind reception. I thank you, because I think that in respect to the question of the liquor you will help me to fight the enemy that is called liquor. You must pray greatly for me, that God will help me in this matter—that the liquor may all be spilled into the sea—the liquor which is an enemy to the world. If you can help me in this way it will be a matter of great rejoicing to me, and God will be with you. God does not like destruction. He likes those who can keep things in the right way, and you as Christians are responsible for the state of the world. These things which are in the world hinder us and trouble us. We find these things greatly embarrassing to us in serving God. These are words with which I salute you. May you remain with peace and God's blessing."

A meaningful new word, which, by reason of its length, however, is too ponderous for popular acceptance, has been coined to represent the idea of Christian unity. It is "pandenominational" and was first uttered by Rev. W. Burroughs, of Dublin, who eloquently compared this movement to the union of the varied colors of the rainbow into "that one white light which is the beauty of heaven and nearest to the throne of God."

The following has been published as an exact translation from the Arabic of the official prayer of Islam, which is used throughout Turkey and daily repeated in the Cairo "Azhar" University by ten thousand Mohammedan students frem all lands:

"I seek refuge with Allah from Satan, the accursed. In the name of Allah the Compassionate, the Merciful! O Lord of all creatures! O Allah! Destroy the infidels and polytheists, thine enemies the enemies of the religion! O Allah! Make their children orphans, and defile their abodes, and cause their feet to slip, and give them and their families, and their households, and their women, and their children and their relatives by marriage, and their brothers, and their friends, and their possessions, and their race, and their wealth, and their lands, as booty to the Moslems, O Lord of all creatures!"

This national "prayer" of the Turks breathes the essence of cruelty. It is no wonder that under such religious influence the Christians within their domain are so brutally maltreated.

That there is not a clean city in the United States is the broad statement of Colonel Waring, the newly appointed street cleaning commissioner of New York. He attributes this fact to the carelessness of the householders who throw burdens upon the public scavengers that ought not to be borne by them. The extravagance of many housekeepers is shown in the refuse thrown from their houses. Boxes and barrels which could be used for firewood are thrown away by those who buy their fuel. A great deal of rubbish which could be burned in furnaces and heaters is cast out upon the garbage men. When public pride in the appearance of our common thoroughfares and dooryards is eqnal to that of the most careful housekeeper in the order and tidiness of her domain, and children are reared to habits of carefulness outofdoors as well as within, our streets will be clean and a hopeful emulation aroused among householders in every neighborhood which will redound to the comfort and benefit of the entire community. Cultivated habits of neatness will prevent the throwing of papers and fruit parings upon the streets and a new order of municipal housekeeping will be inaugurated. Speed the day.

On Duty.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

MINNESOTA.

NOTES HERE AND THERE.

Wabasha union has been holding its regular meetings around in different homes of its members, trying thereby to get more persons interested. About three hundred signatures to the Polyglot Petition and a number to the age of consent petition to the state legislature were secured. February 17 was selected as a more favorable time than the 3d for holding memorial services for Mrs. Lathrap. The Congregational and Methodist churches united in the service. The program consisted of a sketch of Mrs. Lathrap's life, the reading of one of her poems, while another was sung as a solo, and a number of short articles were read from The Union Signal. Mr. Medlar, pastor of the Congregational church, gave a brief address, followed by another by Rev. Mr. Harbach, of the Methodist church. The latter dwelt a few moments upon the memory of Mrs. Lathrap, and then spoke of the W. C. T. U., and told of the good they had done and were doing, effectually answering for any who were present the oft-repeated query, "What good does the W. C. T. U. do, anyway?"

While this meeting was in progress in Wabasha the union at Grand Meadow, in another district, was holding an evangelistic meeting, at which the president gave an address on the Polyglot Petition to a full house. It is the plan of this union to have similar meetings in various places throughout the county, and make the Petition in this way an educator. They have also another original idea, which is well worthy of consideration. They have whole wheat flour manufactured to order, buying the wheat and taking it to the mill and supplying all who require. It is much purer and more wholesome than the common graham flour, and none who try it are willing to return to the use of graham.

Vernon Centre union had Captain Van Ettan, the "Dakota cyclone," three evenings recently, and he succeeded in doing what no other temperance speaker has done in that place for some time, drawing out the people whom it was desired should hear him. He had large audiences after the first evening, and gave them unanswerable facts and logic, bountifully spiced with wit and humor. He speaks for collection and entertainment. The president of this union writes: "Our union numbers only fifteen members and one honorary, and we cannot see that we accomplish very much. We completed our one hundred dollar pledge to the Temple and have sent two dollars to the Temperance Hospital and one dollar and a half to our state paper fund." Probably the treasurers of these sums will wish all other unions were doing as much.

Waterville union had the pleasure of listening to an address from Rev. George F. Wells, of Hamline, not long since, which was excellent and from which they are hoping to see good results. A gospel temperance meeting was recently held also, with good program, including an original poem by one of their number. The union meets regularly every week, having interesting and helpful meetings and frequent accessions of new members.

Central union, of this city, has been holding its regular meetings in Westminster church, and is actively engaged in various lines. Once a month some topic relating to the work is taken up and discussed, such as the relation of food to temperance, to health; also social purity, legislative work and other topics. The old members have been stirred up to renewed efforts and many new and efficient members added. Among these is Mrs. Josephine Princell, a Swedish woman, who was at once appointed superintendent of work among the Scandinavians, of whom there are thousands in our city. Her success has already been gratifying, she having spoken in seven of the Scandinavian churches of the city and receiving marked attention. Mrs. Prinell has also been appointed state organizer among her own people, and will soon return from the east, whither she went to work during February and March, and will enter into a vigorous campaign here.

The L. T. L. of the Central union is held every Saturday in the Baptist Bethel Mission, with an average attendance of thirty-five. The principles of total abstinence, the effects of alcohol and tobacco on the human system and social purity are taught and an industrial school also carried on.

All the unions of the city united in a memorial service for Mrs. Lathrap on the afternoon of February 3, held at the Wesley M. E. church, presided over by Mrs. O. C. Gregg, president of the ninth district. After Scripture reading and prayer, Miss Willard's tribute to our departed sister was read, also Mrs. Barker's and Lady Henry Somerset's. A number of those present spoke, testifying to Mrs. Lathrap's ability as a speaker and worker and her deep spirituality. A sense of personal loss was apparent as well as the loss we feel as an organization.

Hamline union held their annual membership meeting in the home of Dr. Innis a little time ago. The business of the meeting was first transacted, and then a pleasant social time was enjoyed and refreshments served. A prize of a souvenir spoon had been offered to the member who would bring the largest number of new members, and about twenty new members were added to the union.

LEGISLATIVE WORK.

The principal legislative work which our women intended to take up this winter was to ask to have the age of consent raised from sixteen to eighteen years. Petitions have been circulated and largely signed, but as yet the bill has not come up in the legislature to be voted upon. However, public attention has again been directed to the important question, and the other side is seeking a hearing also through the papers. One would not suppose there could be another side for any fair-minded man or woman, yet someone, called "Fairness," has a letter in the Evening Journal of recent date, in which is set forth the old, worn and disgusting plea that to raise the age of consent from sixteen to eighteen is to "widen the avenue to blackmail by vicious girls, and prove a travesty on justice"! Ah! justice, 'tis well, perhaps, that thou art blind, and may not see the wrongs committed in thy name.

It was not the intention of our suffrage leader, Mrs. Julia B. Nelson, to seek the introduction of a suffrage bill this year; for, as she said: "To ask for an amendment striking out the word 'male' from the state constitution would be particularly unwise at this time, because it would throw the woman's suffrage question into the seething maelstrom of a presidential election campaign." It was intended, however, to secure the introduction of a bond suffrage bill, similar to Iowa's. But before this could be done, Hon. L. O. Brevig, of Sacred Heart, introduced a bill to submit an amendment to strike out the word "male" from the constitution. So it would seem that the conflict is on, and not likely to be settled until it is settled right.

OUR STATE PRESIDENT

has begun a tour of the state, intending to visit every union, and has already visited a number, besides attending at least one county convention; and other unions write that they are hoping to have Mrs. Fry with them soon. Nor is this all our leader is doing. In the current number of the White Ribboner, Mrs. Fry calls attention to the state law for scientific temperance instruction, and also to the fact that the state union has had this law printed on large cards suitable for hanging in schoolrooms. The cards will be sold for five cents each, and it is desired that the state unions supply every school-room with a copy. State Superintendent of Schools Pendergast has kindly offered to send the cards to the schools free of charge for postage, so that the unions have only to send the money and the cards will be sent direct to the school, and put up in the rooms by authority of the state. Money for the cards, and orders for them, should be sent to Mrs. D. R. Mandigo, 544 Selby avenue, St. Paul.

Mrs. Fry went to the sixteenth district early in February and met with nearly all the unions in parlor meetings, and also gave public addresses for all but one, besides several at points where there is not yet any organization. She was well received, and all feel the seed sowing was thoroughly done, and of course are hopeful for an abundant harvest. Mrs. Fry filled every appointment made for her, twenty-five in all.

NEW YORK STATE NEWS.

Just after sending my last letter I received a report from King's county. As it was too late for that letter, I will give it "first place" in this one.

The quarterly meeting was held in the Lewis avenue church, Brooklyn, Mrs. Louise Vanderhoef presiding. Mrs. Pettingill gave an inspiring Bible reading at the morning meeting, and early in the afternoon an hour was devoted to the Y's. Miss Ensign, National organizer, gave a very interesting address. Mrs. Cora E. Seberry read a paper of exceptional merit, and Miss Hawthorne sang a solo.

Miss Elizabeth W. Greenwood "dropped in" later on, and gave one of her unique ten-minute talks. Mrs. Annable spoke of the women of Jerusalem at the present time, as she saw them on her recent trip to the Holy Land, and Mrs. L. F. Lewis gave an excellent report of the National Convention at Cleveland.

Colonel Hadley made the principal address of the afternoon, in which he stated the object of the new organization, "The Men's Christian Union," saying he thought they could work most effectually in conjunction with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Mrs. Berger, superintendent of press work, writes me that Kings county is doing splendid work this winter, especially in their lodging house and general rescue work.

A parlor meeting and reception to Mrs. Annable was held at the beautiful home of Mrs. E. F. Pettingill, Brooklyn, a large and enthusiastic band of white-ribboners being present.

Rockland county held its annual convention at Haverstraw, every local union being represented. After the devotional exercises the regular routine business was taken up.

Mrs. Ellen Dayton Blair, of Nebraska, gave a chalk-talk to the children in the afternoon which was very interesting. This was followed by a question-box and several five-minute speeches.

At the evening session the pastor of the church in which the meeting was held spoke words of welcome, good music was furnished by Miss A. Penny and Mrs. E. Gardener, after which Mrs. Blair again interested all with a chalk-talk.

Dutchess county met at Dover Plains for its fifty-first quarterly convention. A good delegation, with representatives from two new unions, gladdened the heart of the presiding officer, Mrs. Homer A. Nelson. Several well prepared papers were read, and were of more than ordinary merit. Verbal reports from local unions were given.

Mrs. Mary T. Burt, our state president, was the speaker of the evening, and by her presence during the day sessions as well as by her address, was a help and inspiration to all present.

Mrs. P. J. Adams has recently gone through the county and her trip was productive of great good.

Old Niagara county comes next, its meeting being held at Somerset. The programs on this occasion deserve special mention, being handsome souvenirs prepared by our county corresponding secretary, Miss A. E. Hufstader, "our white-ribbon printer." They were exceedingly dainty affairs, and admired by all. The program was well carried out, many matters of interest coming up "between times." The address of the evening was given by the state vice-president, Mrs. Ella A. Boole. She also conducted a symposium on "How shall we work?" The annual meeting will be held in Lockport.

The twenty-first semi-annual convention of Cattaraugus county was held in the M. E. church at East Randolph. The union at Napoli united with East Randolph in entertaining the convention, and they "made the delegates very happy during their stay" according to the report sent me. Mrs. Boole was present during the meeting, and in the evening gave an address, "The new Republic." Several visitors were introduced, and spoke cheering words. In the evening a Bible reading was given by Rev. H. E. Gurney, who, with his wife, has given four solid weeks of work in the county, thereby adding to the membership very materially. Mrs. Boole also gave five addresses in the county in January. Plans are being perfected for the work of the coming six months.

Monroe county is stirring itself to prepare for the state convention this fall, and we who know the material of which Monroe county W. C. T. U. is composed feel certain that everything will be as it should be.

The executive committee met recently, and after discussing plans and transacting necessary business, the ladies listened with pleasure to the reading of letters from Lady Henry Somerset and Frances E. Willard, conveying their thanks and appreciation of the gavels presented at the Cleveland Convention, made from a piece of wood taken from the house in which Miss Willard was born. Miss Willard says: "I shall use mine to call together the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in Queen's Hall, London, June 14 to 20, 1895."

Brighton union, in this county, is the proud owner of handsome headquarters. A cut of the building is before me as I write, and I wish you might all see it. It was dedicated recently with proper ceremonies. An interesting historical sketch of the W. C. T. U. which will make the hall its home, was read by Mrs. H. J. Peck, Mrs. C. Du Puy offered a dedication prayer, and the act of dedication was read by Mrs. H. Beckwith. Several solos were well rendered, and brief addresses made by friends.

Sullivan county has not been mentioned in my letters for some time, but Sullivan county is nevertheless in a growing state. A report was sent me some time ago, but was lost and I did not know it in time to have another written up. The workers there, however, are aroused and making an effort to bring into line more workers. They mean to secure their share of the five hundred new members in the state. Rev. H. E. Gurney, of Clayton, has worked in the county for two months with most excellent results. Mrs. Blair has also made a tour of the county, interesting both old and young, and plans are being perfected for a trip by Mrs. P. J. Adams, state organizer and evangelist, who will organize in different parts of the county.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

Many of our unions have held memorial services for Mrs. Lathrap and Mrs. Woodbridge.

Evangelistic meetings under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. of Catherine, Schuyler county, have been held in the M. E. church for five weeks, both afternoon and evening, by Mrs. Lydia M. Allen, of Beaver Dam, N. Y. The pastor, Rev. Hughston, held meetings for a week previous to her coming, and also ably assisted her all through. God blessed the efforts by a large number of conversions.

The officers of Niagara county W. C. T. U. made the following appeal early in the year through the columns of our daily papers:

As a band of women working in the name of our Heavenly Master for the suppression of the evils that threaten the destruction of the homes of our beloved land, and especially for the dethronement and destruction of that most insidious foe, the rum power, we witnessed with utmost regret and sorrow the subtle entrance of this foe into the reception rooms of some of the beautiful homes of this city on the first day of the fair New Year, in the serving of claret punch and champagne to callers. In it we recognize a serious temptation placed before our young manhood, and we earnestly appeal to the hearts and consciences of mothers and sisters to refrain from this dangerous social custom and stand with us "For God and Home and Native Land."

This was signed by the county officers and the pastors of nearly all the churches in the city, including Roman Catholic. One pastor signed and afterward asked to have his name crossed off, while another refused to sign because according to his belief the "W. C. T. U. as an organization was not considered a leading society," or words to that effect.

Later on, however, at a mass-meeting held to protest against the bill which would legalize the open saloon on Sunday both of these pastors were present and spoke stirring words, giving no uncertain sound. Nearly every pastor in the city participated in this mass-meeting and a rousing sentiment against the bill was the result. Such meetings are educational in many ways. The protest has been circulated very generally throughout our state, hundreds of mass-meetings have been held and stirring addresses made. All this must have its effect upon our legislature.

Boonville, in this same county, held a Demorest medal contest not long since, which was a most enjoyable affair.

Our annual reports and histories are being sent promptly to all who desire, but we have a large supply on hand, and trust that all may be disposed of soon. The two will be sent to one address for fifty cents. The history is thirty cents, with five cents additional for postage, and will be of interest to white-ribboners of other states as well as New York.

Schenectady county held a successful school of methods January 24, 25, in I. O. G. T. Hall, Quaker street, ably conducted by Miss A. C. Delevan, of Duanesburgh.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt is in Albany, working for the interest of the department of scientific temperance instruction, and she is very hopeful of the result.

In my next letter I hope I may be able to say that a new law has been placed upon our statute books or a penalty affixed to the old law, and also that the bill for opening saloons on Sunday has been defeated.

BUGLE NOTES.

Since I sent my report in February, I have received the following items from the Berea W. C. T. U. The union there is not large, having only a membership of twenty-five, but they are zealous, enthusiastic workers. They have just gotten into operation a department of industrial work, where one afternoon a week is devoted to sewing.

Old clothing is mended or made over, and every woman is allowed a certain sum for each hour she sews. The work is done under the direction of some competent person, and no garment can be taken away until it is in good order.

In this way many of the women are able to earn a good garment, and at the same time learn a lesson in industry. The interest taken in the work is shown by the numbers who attend, fifty being present at the last meeting and some had to be turned away.

Some of the ladies of the Glade W. C. T. U., of which Mrs. S. M. Dodge is president, are kindly assisting in this work. They also conduct a Loyal Temperance Legion which meets once a month, and which has been a branch of their work for three years.

George W. Bain lectured for the Central W. C. T. U. of Louisville not long since. His subject was "The Sins of the Nation." He is always eloquent, and on that occasion he was quite up to his best. In spite of the cold weather he had a fairly good audience, and altogether the ladies were much pleased.

Mrs. Helen M. Barker, treasurer of the National W. C. T. U., will give two lectures in Louisville, March 16 and 17.

In January, Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, state organizer, went to Johnsville, where she organized a W. C. T. U., also a strong one of twenty-five members at Augusta. She held good meetings at Georgetown and Ripley, Ohio. On account of the very cold weather in February, she was unable to make engagements to organize. She is now conducting a school of methods at the Florida Chautauqua, De Funiak Springs.

The Lexington Y's are steadily growing in numbers and influence, having enrolled now thirty-five or forty members, a great number of these being honorary.

To them is due much of the success of this little band. They make quite a feature of social meetings, which are always well attended.

VIRGINIA.

SOWING MUCH.

The truth of the old adage, "Great bodies move slowly," is proven by the Old Dominion. We do not progress with very rapid strides, but by perseverance and a firm hold on God we shall accomplish more by and by. This is the seed time, and many of our unions are sowing much seed in the L. T. L's, the parlor meetings and by the distribution of temperance literature.

Our women work better than they report, so I cannot give you as accurate an account of the work over the state as I desire.

The severe cold and snow blockades have caused so much suffering among the poor that the Winchester union and many others have been devoting their energies chiefly to alleviating this distress. The Florence Crittenton Home in Norfolk is doing excellent work. Since its establishment, subsequent to the National Convention in Denver, over seventy women have been admitted and cared for; most of these have reformed, and are now leading pure lives. Some are married, and from happy homes of their own are reaching out to help others. The Norfolk Pilot speaks in glowing terms of this work, and appeals earnestly to the people of Norfolk to aid the W. C. T. U. in paying off the debt on this home.

Luray Y. W. C. T. U., organized last September by Miss Kearney, have held their first Demorest medal contest and felt much encouraged on hearing some gentlemen remark that they were never before so impressed with anything as with the addresses of those young ladies. At the request of the Y. M. C. A. this Y has taken charge of the gospel meeting every second Sunday. Several new Y's have been organized since the state convention.

The W. C. T. U. of Charlottesville gave a New Year's reception in the Y. M. C. A. rooms. A good literary program, including an address of welcome by the president, Mrs. William C. Payne, which was said to be "an able presentation of the work and deeds of woman," entertained the guests and refreshments were served.

One feature of the evening was the presentation of a handsome chair from the union to the president, as a token of love and appreciation of her services. This union held memorial services for Mrs. Woodbridge and Mrs. Lathrap. Mothers' meetings are held monthly.

Hillsboro W. C. T. U. recently held a literary and musical entertainment which was much enjoyed by all present, and netted them a nice little sum for their work.

Our state superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, Mrs. A. E. Wait, of Richmond, had a stirring letter in the last issue of our state paper, The Virginia Call, and had a marked copy sent to the president of every W and Y in the state. More copies of the state Minutes have been sold this year than ever before. That means progress.

Those of us who were permitted to partake of the feast of good things spread for us in Washington on the 15th, 16th and 17th inst., feel much strengthened thereby, and are more than ever impressed with the true worth of the advice given by the poet in the following lines:

"Be a woman! on to duty!
Raise the world from all that's low;
Place high in the social heaven
Virtue's fair and radiant bow.

"Lend thy influence to each effort
That shall raise our nature human,
Be not fashion's gilded lady—
Be a brave, whole-souled, true woman!"

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

MATTERS OF CURRENT INTEREST AT THE NATIONAL CAPITOL.

February 24 might have been called temperance Sunday in the capitol city, so many temperance meetings were held in the churches and so many temperance speeches made. None were distinctively W. C. T. U. meetings, but our rank and file gave aid in preparing for them and in securing speakers from the National women in the city in attendance on the Council.

In the afternoon the Anti-saloon League held a meeting in the Congregational church, the largest Protestant auditorium in the city. Among the speakers Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, of Indiana, and Mrs. Lillian Hollister, of Michigan, were preëminent. Dr. Anna H. Shaw addressed the congregation of the Central M. P. church, on the topic "Obedience to the Heavenly Vision." The house was packed to the doors, people standing through the entire service and clustering upon the pulpit steps. The Sunday before she spoke in Georgetown in the Dumbarton Avenue M. E. church, at the invitation of the Georgetown W. C. T. U. upon the topic "The Merchandise of Souls." (Rev. 18: 13). She denounced the liquor traffic in terms new to her hearers, for of all conservative places, Georgetown, with its ancient and honorable traditions and history, is most backward in the temperance reform. I suppose no local union in our country has more discouragements than the W. C. T. U. of Georgetown. Whether any one from that old city aside from the active members of the local W. C. T. U. attended the convocation just held in Washington I know not, but I do know that it is difficult to secure a hearing for our cause in the churches of historic Georgetown.

The Congressional Temperance Society held its

in the evening of February 24 at the Vermont Avenue Christian Church. The pastor of that church, Rev. F. D. Power, is the secretary of the society. Hon. Nelson Dingley, of Maine, is the president. Among the vice-presidents are William P. Frye, senator from Maine, James H. Kyle, senator from South Dakota, Elijah A. Morse, representative from Massachusetts, Hon. Martin N. Johnson, of North Dakota, and Hon. John M. Allen, of Mississippi. All of these gentlemen are friends of the W. C. T. U. To them we often go for assistance in our work.

The Congressional Temperance Society was organized February 26, 1833, with Lewis Cass, then Secretary of the Navy, for president, and has been in operation in Washington ever since. It has been under the leadership of such men as Daniel Webster, Edward Everett and Horatio Seymour. Its life covers the entire period of temperance agitation. It is the oldest temperance organization of modern times. In 1842 a new constitution was adopted which embodied total abstinence. This was a new departure displeasing to some. Now many of those who form this society believe firmly in Prohibition.

Although the Father of his Country owned a distillery, George Washington was in his day sneered at as a temperance man because he would not allow men at his table to drink so much liquor as to become beastly drunk and roll under it. The Sons of Temperance when they first started made no provision for women members. "Progress as seen from the surface," said Mr. Dingley, "may seem slight. But when we reflect upon the brief period, less than the lifetime of some before me, that temperance work has been carried on, we shall see that progress has been wonderful, indeed." The secretary said that if his report were confined to the temperance enactments of the Fifty-third Congress it would be brief. The withdrawal of $100,000,000 in gold caused dismay in Congress, but the consumption of $1,200,000,000 of rum in a year is scarcely named. The world, however, is not so indifferent. The temperance hosts have been busy. It does not matter so much whether the country is under a high or a low tariff, whether we have gold or silver, a single or a double standard, a Republican or a Democratic president, as that the liquor curse should be done away. Better to be still under the rule of Great Britain than under the liquor power. Ex-Governor Perham explained the absurd basis for the telegraphic report concerning resubmission in Maine. A thorough canvass of the Maine legislature disclosed only eight in the House in favor of it.

Mr. Morse said that within three weeks of each other two extraordinary events had occurred in Washington. First, a member of the House of Lords in London appeared before Congress with a memorial looking to arbitration between the two great English speaking powers which if carried out would prevent them forever from going to war with each other. Second, the presentation to President Cleveland of the immense Polyglot Petition signed by millions of human beings praying for the destruction of the liquor traffic. Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens and Mrs. Nichols both addressed the meeting.

THE FUNERAL OF FREDERICK DOUGLASS

took place Monday, February 25. He has been likened to Moses, both having been born in slavery; both having fled from native land and both leaders of a race out of servitude. The colored schools were closed and colored people ceased from their usual avocations to do honor to the dead. He died in the evening after having attended the Woman's Council and occupied a seat on the platform beside his old co-laborer for emancipation, Miss Susan B. Anthony. When he was introduced to the Council, the audience arose to greet him. This was his last experience in public life. A delegation from the Council attended his funeral, at which Miss Anthony made an address.

OREGON.

THE LEGISLATURE'S DOINGS.

I hoped such great things from our legislature in session, that I delayed my report, thinking there would be the passage of a very strenuous cigarette bill to speak of. It has been, however, I find, shunted off for want of time! Yet every day, and day by day, time was wasted in blocking the election of the United States senator on the silver question, until the last five minutes of adjournment!

Our state superintendent of narcotics, Mrs. Kern, of Portland, worked hard for the passage of this bill, circulating petitions all over the state. These petitions were numerously signed, and what is remarkable many signatures of cigarette fiends appearing amongst them. Hopeless with regard to their own power to help themselves, they seemed eager, as a drowning man to catch at a straw, to secure what help the state could give them in her laws.

Two useful bills were passed, one in the Senate, fixing the age of consent at sixteen years, and one in the House prohibiting minors from going into places of evil resort and fining corporations $100 for sending them there. A clause in the original bill "except by written consent of parents and guardians" was stricken out by amendment.

The heart of our state (and that of our National) superintendent would have been gladdened by the passage of the following: "Providing for the teaching of kindness to dumb animals in the public schools." And many a miserable home would be thankful for this one: "That the friends of a drunkard have power to place him at a drink cure establishment at a cost to the state of one hundred dollars." The women citizens of Coquille city would have gladly welcomed their charter giving them the right to vote. Ditto at McMinnville.

I do not see that the W. C. T. U. bill to prevent the sale of liquor within one mile of the Roseburg Soldiers' Home has become law—but it may be so, although not on the list.

I think the bill giving employment to the penitentiary convicts was a wise one, and certainly the prohibition of obscene pictures which was acted on, but not passed. Out of the five hundred and nineteen bills before the legislature, these seem to have been the only ones of a human-reformatory nature. Plenty enough with regard to game, fish, song-birds, tuberculosis in cattle, etc. So much for the disappointment in our solons, and now for our own work.

The semi-annual county convention of the W. C. T. U. of Yamhill county was held in Dayton, holding four sessions. The leading features were, a talk on the department of mercy, by Louisa P. Rounds, state superintendent, followed by Dr. Cady on franchise. The subjects were set forth in clear terms.

Mrs. Catherine Osborn presented the evangelistic work by reading an earnest appeal that we press on in our efforts in the name of Jesus, pointing out many lines of work in which we can and ought to engage.

"The Importance of Securing Honorary Members and giving them Equal Privileges," was urged by Mrs. Lumm; a lively discussion followed in which both sides were canvassed. The department of mothers' meetings was introduced by state superintendent Lucy S. P. Haworth, subject, "Mothers' Duties," which was ably defined. "Duties of Officers and Members," by Mary Allen, was very good if followed out, and would make a decided improvement. Literature and UNION SIGNAL were by Jennie K. Groff, with an appeal that our own homes be cleansed from impure literature; and the good seed scattered so thick that the tares find no room to grow.

Mrs. Buell presented the franchise in an interesting article followed by some good thoughts by Dr. Cady.

A song, "Do we Need Saloons in Yamhill County?" was composed and sung by Mrs. Docia Macy. Mrs. E. B. Miles spoke on her subject, "Peace," in her usual capable way.

Mrs. Louisa P. Rounds addressed a large number of school children on the subject of mercy which was interesting to all.

Coos county has met in annual convention since my last letter, when eight superintendents of departments were appointed. Mrs. Harford, of Newberg, gave the address of the evening, on "The Missionary Work of the W. C. T. U." This was followed by "Silver," by Miss Alice Beyes. Let us hope that silver accompanied it!

I have at hand a long letter written by Mrs. Harford en route on her organizing work. She has found it more useful to make it rather reviving and uplifting than turning fresh ground. She spoke at nine different points, refreshed at times by meeting old friends, while glad to make new ones, and then was joined by her husband at Drain. Here she had sought to interest the students in Normal school. After leaving the railroad they together rode thirty miles over the mountains, and then on by boat to the white city of Gardiner. "It makes," she says, "a beautiful picture, with its intersecting green lawns on the narrow bench of the mountains overlooking the Umpqua River, that here broadens into a lake." What is still better in her eyes Gardiner has a model union. From there a fisherman's boat carried them fourteen miles up Kitchen Slough to Sumner, where four women make up the W. C. T. U. These four are strong enough to keep any saloonist at bay who dares to show the tip of his nose. Six meetings at Myrtle Point, and on to Bandon in time for a county convention and for three evenings' work. At Bandon there is a flourishing Y, all the more flourishing because they give equal suffrage, and are equally officered by their honorary members; next Coquille city, where Mrs. Laura Boutelle leads well.

Returning over the mountains to Elkton for five more meetings, Douglas county convention was next taken in. It was held at Roseburg and was very successful. Wilbur, Yoncalla, Eugene, Irving and Junction City were visited on the return journey.

Newberg, as the banner local union, reports itself in our state paper as to how it won the honor. In one word, by the energy of its members.

From Mrs. Ada W. Unruh, state and National lecturer for the L. T. L., comes likewise a long, interesting letter. She was two months in Eastern Oregon, and traveled one thousand miles by railroad and six hundred and ten by wagon road. Of this Miss Maggie Eaton accompanied her five hundred miles, sacrificing all other interests to do it. They visited eighteen points besides two more in Washington. The Warren Springs union she found greatly expanded, with its forty members. They are about to organize an L. T. L. Dufur has a flourishing Legion of thirty-one. Prineville reorganized with mostly new material. At this place the Rev. Baker, of the M. E. church, was very helpful. At Mitchell, drunkenness so prevails that Mrs. Unruh says there were but few sober men at her meeting! At Antelope thirty-one new members were added. With Waldron and Condon six new unions were organized on the trip, and three L. T. L's as results therefrom. Eighty-six meetings were held besides four days' work in convention.

In speaking of the legislature I should not have omitted the repetition of the appropriation for our Refuge Home in Portland, which continues to be blessed in its good work.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

AFTER a winter's sojourn in Florida, Mrs. L. E. Bailey has returned to New York where she will spend the month of March in Queen's and Suffolk counties, L. I.

MRS. L. S. MOUNT, president of Mississippi W. C. T. U. will reside at 124 Adams St., Memphis, Tenn., until May 1. All communications should be addressed to her there.

THROUGH the earnest work of the Croton, O., W. C. T. U., a Law and Order League of eighty good citizens has been formed for the purpose of putting good officers in authority.

MRS. E. D. HARDY, Goodland, Ind., greatly desires a copy of the National Minutes of 1893. By sending her a postal card notice she will respond with twenty-five cents and thus save a duplication of copies.

MRS. MARION BAXTER, the well-known temperance lecturer, has been engaged by the Chicago Central W. C. T. U. for work in the department of social purity. Surely no city needs such a qualified worker more than Chicago.

AN appreciative and enthusiastic audience of twenty-five hundred people greeted Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset at the Temple, Philadelphia, February 21. The meeting was arranged by the First Y. W. C. T. U. of Philadelphia and was an unqualified success. Miss A. E. Thomas, president of the Y presided. Miss Willard struck the keynote, "Home Protection," and ran the gamut of all that is embraced in those two words for "the peaceful war." Lady Somerset gave an earnest plea for the suppressing of the liquor traffic and found a hearty response in the hearts of her hearers. Mrs. Anna Carse spoke for the Temple and Miss Gordon made a bright speech just fitted to the occasion.

KENT, O., a railroad center, has had a wonderful gospel temperance revival, the particulars of which are gleaned from a letter of Mrs. Dora Webb. The W. C. T. U. invited Miss Jennie Smith. The work at the first moved slowly. It was so cold that only two women ventured to accompany Miss Jennie to the shops for the first meeting. They found seventy men assembled—many of them curious to hear what a woman had to say to them, in that place at that hour. They heard her gladly and invited her to come again. The interest continued to increase until the largest churches were scarcely able to accommodate the crowds which attended. Over one thousand men, women and children signed the pledge. A large number professed conversion, the majority being men. Many of these have joined the church. Miss Jennie organized a railroad temperance association. The W. C. T. U. added to their union sixty new members. An L. T. L. was formed numbering about one hundred. There has been a general unheaval of indifference and a substitution of interest and activity on the part of Christians along the lines of temperance followed by an earnest effort to secure local option at the coming election.

DEPARTMENT OF COLORED WORK.

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye have done it unto me."

Dear sisters of the white ribbon army, I am glad to be able to bring to you the glad news that Dr. Kate C. Bushnell has consented to become my associate superintendent in this department. With her vast experience in serving every nation and kindred and tongue; with her consecrated life and her great faith in the power of God to do all things for us who have faith in Him and work in accordance to our faith, shall we not hope and pray and trust that the day has already dawned for this work? Miss Willard, who all her life has felt a deep interest in the colored race, and the general officers are doing all in their power to more fully open the way for the success of this work. It is well known that Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, of South Carolina, years ago started this work in the South, speaking in many of the leading colored churches. Miss Belle Kearney reports work that she herself has done among the colored people, and we know there are true hearts East, West, North and South that are true to every interest of women of every race.

My hope is to be able to secure a superintendent of this department in every state where there are colored churches, and to organize local unions of women, Loyal Temperance Legions and also Y unions. In my own public meetings I shall hold mothers' meetings. I know of no meetings that can be more helpful than such.

And may I ask you, my dear sister, as state presidents, and as district and county and local presidents, to help me open the way for more efficient work along this line? I will be glad for any suggestion you may have to give me.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

HOW TO REACH THE G. A. R.

This question is so frequently asked, that I take pleasure in making a few suggestions to the sincere inquirers.

Seek for personal acquaintance with the organization, by attendance at their Post meetings. Introductions may be found through the Women's Relief Corps and the ladies of the G. A. R. Frequently, affiliation with these bodies of women, through interchange of courtesies, or membership in their societies, will be a great advantage. Many of these friends of the veterans are already enrolled with the W. C. T. U. in local unions, and wherever this good fellowship exists, the facilities for reaching our old soldiers, by means of our own special agencies of literature and social entertainment are largely increased. A splendid opportunity is afforded on holidays, especially on Decoration Day, when, by the timely gifts of flowers, as well as personal attendance of local unions at the solemn ceremonials in the cemeteries, a bond of sympathetic interest is established.

In view of the serious realities which then face the patriots who are so near the eternal world, our kindly recognition will open the way to their consciences and hearts.

EN ROUTE IN NORTH CAROLINA.

In my last notes jotted down while waiting in a depot for a belated train, I said I would tell my readers of my visit to St. Helena, an island just across from Beaufort, S. C. This island has six thousand inhabitants, all colored save ten white families. Thirty-two years ago Miss Laura Towne and Miss Ellen Murray went there to teach these poor people, and all through the dangers of the Civil War they remained at their post. They have done a marvelous work. There is one church of nineteen hundred members, another with twenty-seven hundred members. A large brick church was filled in every part to listen to me. Welcome speeches were made in behalf of the temperance society numbering one thousand pledged members, really a grown-up Loyal Temperance Legion, by a colored man; in behalf of the schools, by another young colored man and by a bright young colored woman in behalf of the W. C. T. U. of thirty members who sat before me with their intelligent faces and their white ribbons. They were well dressed, well behaved and evidently understood and appreciated every point made. The singing was excellent and of a high order. After my address, and at my request, they sang some of their plantation songs in that plaintive minor key, that in spite of you brings tears and smiles. Miss Towne and Miss Murray are entitled to great praise for their labor of love, and if good fruit is a reward they have been abundantly rewarded, for I doubt if there is a community of white people, six thousand strong anywhere, that is more sober or law abiding than this people. In thirty years there have been but two criminal cases, and in both instances a fair trial, an honest conviction and prompt punishment were secured. The ladies of Beaufort have only words of praise for the work of these consecrated women, showing that the early prejudice against northern teachers is giving way to Christian sympathy.

I had always supposed that Charleston was the seat of the conservative of conservatives, but I was never more cordially welcomed in a Northern city than at Charleston. My train was late, and was met by two bright Y's, with an honorary as escort. We entered a carriage, and were driven directly to the beautiful Y. M. C. A. hall, where a large audience was already assembled. Mrs. Chapin was able to preside, though looking very frail and much broken by her recent illness. Rev. Dr. Cuthbert, pastor of the First Baptist church, introduced me in an eloquent but truly brotherly speech. Rev. Ramsey, another Baptist pastor, and Rev. Stokes, a young Methodist pastor, took part in the exercises, and one and all expressed the warmest interest in the W. C. T. U. Young men wearing white ribbons acted as ushers and furnished excellent music. A generous collection was taken for the National. The next day a conference of workers was held, and reports were read from many parts of the state showing that the W. C. T. U. in South Carolina was not dead, although their dues were not paid. Newberry reported excellent work among the children. Spartanburg and several other points were doing good work, and had sent dues to the state treasurer, but because they could not send as much as formerly or as much as other states they had unwisely decided to send nothing. They promised me they would never do it again. Mrs. Chapin read an able paper, giving facts as to the work and also her reason for advocating the dispensary law.

The Y's of Charleston are doing a noble work; they have eighteen splendid honoraries, that help them in every good work. They are sustaining a night school for young girls that are employed every day in the factories. They also hold every Sunday afternoon a gospel temperance service, with a young man as leader. I was entertained in the pleasant home of Dr. Cleckley, and here I found another bright young woman, the doctor's daughter, longing for work and a broader outlook. The girls are our hope.

Helen M. Barker

I left Ohio on March 8. After going to a part of that state with only one union in a county,—Portsmouth, Miss M. Peebles, district president, called me into her domain, and ere I reached her, I organized two good unions. I reached Portsmouth on March 2, and Miss Peebles' cheery face met me with a glad welcome. How delightful to us weary workers a welcome is, my comrades know who have to "roam about," as Mrs. Washington fitly calls it. We are doing this and have to do it if our organization advances and new life is put into our work. I hope the day is yet coming when the organizer who is out in the field will receive some substantial help from our National executive. Certainly we ought to receive at least our postage, which amounts to a great deal in the year and it ought to be made also very plain to every one that we get no pay from the National treasury. Organization is really a business which needs a great deal of practical study, and no one should undertake it who does not fully understand all the ins and out of it. No organizer should organize a union without giving a drill to the officers before she starts them out. Hence, no county, district or state president should arrange in new fields less than two days and two evenings, so the new-elected president can take her place to preside at the last public meeting with the organizer beside her as the speaker. She gets the necessary courage, besides people see who the president of the union is. I am glad for our new rule that unions must be reported through organizers' blanks, both to state and to National secretaries. No mistakes can be made now if all take pains.

I organized eight new unions in Ohio, where never unions were before, with a membership of one hundred and eighty-nine, also added sixty new members to old unions making a total of two hundred and forty-nine, so Ohio is a good way ahead on her five hundred. I have commenced a six weeks' tour in Kentucky; hope to add a large number to our ranks. After Kentucky comes Iowa ere I take a rest.

The ladies of the hospital board held their regular quarterly meeting at the hospital, March 11. Although the weather was very unfavorable, a goodly number of the members were present. Business was dispatched in the usual practical manner. The social factor in these meetings ought not to be overlooked. A dainty lunch is partaken of and the hour affords a fine opportunity for visiting, as the members come from all parts of the city. The ladies would be glad to welcome those interested in the work to meet with them and become acquainted. We were favored by having with us Miss Ida Clothier, National Organizer for Y. W. C. T. U. She gave encouraging reports of a marked advance in sentiment along the line of our work.

The superintendent of the training school, Mrs. J. E. Cleaves, reported that one of the nurses had undergone a serious surgical operation, made a good recovery and is at present with friends in Michigan, where she will remain till stronger. There are at present eight nurses in the school. A class of four will graduate this spring. One of our graduates of the last class has accepted a position as superintendent of a Temperance Hospital in Superior, Wis. She sends glowing accounts of her work and of the hospital. We know she will let her "light shine." Gifts of silver and china for the diet kitchen were received at Christmas from Mrs. Plumb, which were greatly appreciated.

"Ave! there's the rub!"

And that ought to be enough in itself to seal the doom of bar soap. This rubbing with soap may get clothes clean, if you work hard enough, but can't you see how it wears them out?

Follow the directions that come on every package of Pearline, and you'll find that you not only do away with the hard and ruinous work of rubbing—but that you save time, and actually get better results. At every point Pearline is better than soap. But the mere fact that Pearline saves the rubbing—that ought to settle it. 463

I am glad to have a chance to tell you that in April, 1877, I cured myself of a very bad cough with Piso's Cure for Consumption. My cough was so bad my friends were alarmed about me. I have kept Piso's Cure by me ever since, and never found anything to equal it for a cough and cold. I bought other things before buying that, but they did me no good. I keep it in the house all the time, and have ever since 1877. I would not think I could keep house without it. As soon as I empty one bottle I have another ready when I want it. I have recommended it to others, so they can be cured, as well as myself.— MRS. SARAH J. HALE, 39 Amherst St., Nashua, N. H., December 19, 1894.

THE notion that alcohol may do good, because, for a moment, it seems to do good, was well answered by a physician.

A man had said to the doctor, "What do you think of the influence of alcohol on the digestion, doctor?"

"I think its influence is bad," said the physican.

"But a little whisky taken just before a meal is the only key that will open my appetite, doctor."

"I don't believe in opening things with false keys," answered the other.

Our Library Table.

THE MOTHER'S FRIEND is a little monthly publication edited and published by Dr. Mary Wood Allen, superintendent of the purity department of the National W. C. T. U. This small periodical aims to be of suggestive and practical help to parents, and "all topics pertaining to the family welfare in the relations of marriage and parentage will come within its scope."

THE RED CROSS. Its Origin, International Character, Development and History. By Laura M. Doolittle. This is a pamphlet publication giving in brief the story of this organization whose spirit is peace and mercy and love. An address by Clara Barton, president of the American National Red Cross, is also included in its pages.
Issued by the American National Red Cross, Washington, D. C.

SKIPPED STITCHES. By Anna J. Grannis, Plainville, Conn. Price 50 cents.
This little volume of verse is attractive throughout. The reader thinks of Lucy Larcom while following the charming lead of her quaint verses, for like that celebrated writer, Miss Grannis works amid looms and shuttles in a New England mill, but their noise and dust have not frightened away her muse.

"Or whether the softest south winds blow,
Or the north grows dark with fears,
While the changing seasons come and go,
I'm stitching away the years.

"And so when the days and seams are long,
When the pulleys creak and moan,
I just skip a stitch and sing a song,
But the world has never known

"That it sooths the ache of hurt and wrongs,
That brighter the needle gleams
In threading life through the simple songs,
That go tucked away in the seams."

Thus the modest author introduces her unassuming book of verse which holds more real merit than many a volume heralded by press and pen.

THE TRUE SCIENCE OF LIVING, OR THE NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH. By Edward Hooker Dewey, M. D. Introduction by Rev. George F. Pentecost, D. D.
To the uninitiated reader, casually picking up Dr. Dewey's book, the thought will doubtless come, "What new fad is this?" but as he reads, he suspends judgment in commanded interest. The book is a remarkable one, in that it attacks bravely and frankly one of the oldest and most established customs of the day, viz., the eating of three meals every twenty-four hours. It would doubtless be the honest testimony of a large percentage of people that we often eat more from habit—and capacity—than from actual insistent hunger. We eat because we can, not because we really must.
Dr. Dewey's message to ordinarily well people is, eat but two meals per day, omitting breakfast; eat other meals only when hungry; drink nothing but cold water; eat what hunger calls for. To sick people the author says, no food until hunger—not fancy—calls for it, hunger meaning that the disease has succumbed to returning health.
The message sounds reasonable and the genial writer discourses so frankly upon "the evolution" of his own breakfast table that one is forced to attend. Dr. Dewey's work is an outgrowth of thirty years' experience, and he strengthens his theories by the testimony of many cases.
Certain it is, there are many good people who without thought, treat the stomach as they would treat no other muscle of the body. This "New Gospel of Health" proclaims a daily rest for the stomach, an opportunity for overworked glands to recuperate, and a resultant freedom from a thousand ills that arise from inconsiderate abuse of a good friend. To those who in middle life find themselves burdened by a slow but sure increase of flesh and corresponding sluggishness of temperament, this "skip-your-breakfast" plan affords a simple, and, they are assured, safe and sure relief.
The chapters of the book are arranged as a series of letters or lectures, the greater number addressed to the public in general and special chapters devoted to victims of alcoholism and the tobacco habit, an address to railroad men and school directors. The treatment of the topics of drinking and smoking is strong and worthy of reading in every home circle.

BIBLE READING FOR APRIL.
Doing As You Are Bid And Doing It Now.

BY REV. FRANCES TOWNSLEY.

This Reading is a vigorous setting forth of Christian obedience and of the splendid achievements which result from it, the writer emphasizing the special bearing of the subject upon the work of the W. C. T. U. as an organization and as individuals. It is a Bible study which will constrain to listen still more heedfully to the voice of their Supreme Leader.

RERPONSIVE READING FOR APRIL.

There comes to us so many inquires from all over the country concerning the Temperance Hospital that we feel sure this Reading will meet a "long felt want" in local unions. ### HOW TO MARK YOUR BIBLE.
By Mrs. Stephen Menzies.

For searchers of the Scriptures who feel the need of some systematic plan of Bible marking, this little volume will be found useful. Mr. Moody says of it: "The suggestions will not only interest young Christians, but will also help more advanced believers already engaged in Bible teaching, as this plan converts the margins of one's Bible into a notebook ready to hand at any moment."

PRIZES ON PATENTS.
How to get $100 and Perhaps Make a Fortune.

We secure patents and to induce people to keep track of their bright ideas we offer a prize of one hundred dollars to be paid on the first of every month to the person who submits to us the most meritorious invention during the preceding month. We will also advertise the invention free of charge in the National Register, a weekly newspaper, published in Washington, D. C., which has an extensive circulation throughout the United States and is devoted to the interests of inventors.

NOT SO HARD AS IT SEEMS.

The idea of being able to invent something strikes most people as being very difficult; this delusion the Company wishes to dispel. It is the simple things and small inventions that make the greatest amount of money, and the complex ones are seldom profitable. Almost everybody, at some time or another, conceives an idea, which, if patented, would probably be worth to him a fortune. Unfortunately such ideas are usually dismissed without thought. The simple inventions like the car window, which could be easily slid up and down without breaking the passenger's back, the sauce pan, the collar button, the nut lock, the bottle stopper, the snow shovel are things that almost every one sees some way of improving upon, and it is these kind of inventions that bring the greatest returns to the author.

The prize we offer will be paid at the end of each month, whether the app lication has been acted upon by the Patent office or not. Every competitor must apply for a patent on his invention through us, and whether he secures the prize or not, the inventor will have a valuable patent.

THE BIBLE READING FOR MARCH

is by Mrs. Mary Sparkes Wheeler, and the subject is Going Forward.

It will come as a word of encouragement to white-ribboners who imagine their work is not meeting with the success it ought. "Eternity alone will reveal the good you have accomplished," as an organization or as individuals.

The Responsive Reading for March

is Mrs. A. S. Benjamin's well known reading on which is reissued in response to a general demand. No union can be said to be "thoroughly furnished unto good works" unless it has adopted methods which are systematic and orderly. The aim of Mrs. Benjamin's reading is to emphasize this and to point the way to a "consummation devoutly to be wished."

Signal Notes.

The cost of liquor consumed throughout Great Britain last year was $693,689,140, or $17.17 per capita.

Niovza Hassan Shirazi, of Bagdad, the noted Persian clergyman who interdicted the use of tobacco in 1891 died recently.

Immigration bureau reports show a falling off in number of arrivals at United States ports for the last seven months of 76,207, or forty per cent.

An increase in the annual expenditures of the United States government, amounting to one hundred and twenty million dollars, or fifty per cent, is reported during the last ten years.

The average measure of women's waists is said now to be twenty-four inches in place of nineteen inches five years ago, an evidence that good sense and intelligence in fashion are permeating woman's world.

The new anti-lottery law just passed by Congress is expected to effectually prevent the conveyance of lottery matter between the states or its importation from other countries by express companies or common carriers.

The British army estimates for 1895 show a decrease of £221,000 from those of 1894. The total, however, still shows the enormous expenditure of nearly eighteen million pounds for the support of the armament of the united kingdom and British Empire in times of peace.

The new American University, the great post-graduate Methodist institution, has had its beginning by the final payment for the land, situated four miles northwest of the White House in the District of Columbia. Next September the corner-stone of the first structure, the Hall of History, will be laid.

The United States pension appropriation bill, which carried sixty million dollars in the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress, this year appropriated one hundred and forty million dollars, and has somewhat exceeded the latter sum in three preceding sessions. "Uncle Sam" cannot be accused of parsimony in dealing with its veterans and with the soldiers' widows and orphans.

Rev. C. Hartwell, missionary of the American board at Foochow, China, has issued in pamphlet form his article on "The Drink Offering," in its mode and design and the nature of the wine prescribed. In this article he gives abundant proof that "the Old Testament Scriptures refer to wines which were the unfermented juice of grapes and of other fruits which were sweet, nourishing and healthful drinks as well as to those which were fermented and hence intoxicating and harmful in their use as beverages. And the wines of the drink offerings manifestly must have been of the former class."

Over one thousand business firms in San Francisco subscribe annually to the support of its free kindergartens. Five of these are termed the Insurance Free Kindergarten; the Attorneys' Free Kindergarten; the Real Estate Free Kindergarten; the Merchants' Free Kindergarten; the Produce Exchange Free Kindergarten, for which $2,545 was expended by the varions business men indicated. The total amount subscribed by philanthropists for the thirty-seven free kindergartens of San Francisco last year was $32,195.28. Of the nine thousand children trained in the schools only one (and he a half-witted child) has ever come into the police court. This is a wonderful record for children born of vicious parents, and taken from cellars, alleys and saloons.

That purity work is as important among those of high social standing as for the humble, is the principle of the Bombay Midnight Mission. Mr. Malcolm Moss, the leading worker in this mission, has procured a tricycle and follows home the carriages of the aristocratic officials who frequent the great European vice-market at Bombay. He thus procures their names and addresses; then sends them purity literature, letters of religious advice and tracts. All this is done with the purpose of arresting the thought of the transgressors, and in the prayerful hope of causing them to repent and cease from evil doing. The fact, too, that the knowledge of their actions is in some one's possession has a salutary effect. Mr. Moss has suffered much during the prosecution of his purity labors and his life has been threatened many times in the attacks made upon him, but he goes bravely on, in the knowledge that his work is blessed.

A Wheel Within a Wheel
HOW I LEARNED TO RIDE THE BICYCLE...
BY
Frances E. Willard
In her inimitable style Miss Willard tells in this dainty little volume her experience in learning to master a "steel steed," and as she graphically portrays the various situations leading from many failures to ultimate success, she has interwoven in delightful "side-talks" some exceedingly helpful and practical suggestions as to how failures and discouragements may be turned to success in life, never losing opportunity, as is her wont, to say that which ennobles and uplifts. It is really a fascinating little volume, appealing strongly to all that is best in physical and moral development.

WOMAN IN THE PULPIT.
By Frances E. Willard.

More and more in these fin de siecle days do our workers find themselves confronted with the question of the "woman preacher." This question is most ably and forcibly presented and considered in Miss Willard's book, which is the outgrowth, as she explains, of an article prepared in compliance with the request of the Homiletic Review. It has introductory letters from Rev. Dr. Parker, Rev. Dr. Talmage and Joseph Cook, and contains, besides the author's own wise conclusions, the testimony of men and women preachers concerning women in the ministry — which, be it noted, is somewhat different from the ministry of women.

Price, paper, 15 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

MARCHING SONGS.
For Young Crusaders.

In two numbers. Compiled by Anna Gordon. The collection includes temperance songs for use in kindergarten and kitchen garden schools, songs which teach Sabbath observance, kindness to animals and other kindred principles which it is wise to instill early into the minds of the "Cold Water Army" if we would have them embodied in the laws of the land.

We have received numerous applications for the "red stickers," which are necessary to secure discounts for superintendents of literature, but in many instances they have not been accompanied by proper credentials. It will be readily seen that to avoid complications the notification must come from the secretary of unions, and not from the individual appointed. When this official indorsement is received, the name forwarded by the secretary will be placed on file and the "red stickers" sent to accredited superintendent of literature. In order to secure the discount, one of these must be used with each order sent.

Organizers who are constantly in the field and in touch with the work, by sending to us names of towns, dates, and addresses of responsible parties, may secure copies of THE UNION SIGNAL, Young Women and Young Crusader for free distribution, thus making these valuable helps "advance agents."

Any white-ribboner desiring sample copies of THE UNION SIGNAL, Young Women or Young Crusader for canvassing purposes, will receive the same by addressing

NEWS DEPARTMENT,
WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASS'N,

Superintendents of Departments:

We ask for your coöperation in bringing out the literature best adapted to the needs of your individual departments.

If with the "copy" there comes an order for one thousand leaflets, we consider that a practical indication of the need, and we are ready to assume the risk beyond that point of a lesser or greater demand. Are you weary of the same leaflets—the continuous orders for each number in the catalogue proves that somebody wants them—but if you will aid us we promise you just such helps as your departments can use to advantage.

HOW THEY DID IT.

"They" means two faithful workers of the Indiana state Normal Y. The regularly appointed solicitor for Young Women was discouraged by her non-success, the excuse of the students being that they could neither spare the money nor find time to read the paper. Then at the suggestion of a "never-say-fail" young woman the two put their heads together, got up a "Riley" entertainment, and this is the report: "It was a success. The selections recited were all from James Whitcomb Riley, and good music was furnished. After all expenses were paid we had just eight dollars in hand, which we send you." Appended was a list of twenty new subscribers to Young Women—members of the society. Would that all Y unions would go and do likewise! Is there not also a hint here for the W's?

If the secretary of each new union formed will forward to us a list of the members we will send sample copies of THE UNION SIGNAL one month free.

Miss Jane Addams, of the Hull House social settlement in Chicago, has put in a bid to clean the unsavory streets of the nineteenth ward.

The British government has demanded $75,000 penalty from the Republic of Nicaragua for the expulsion of the British consul from Bluefields last year.

The civil service reform bill has passed the Illinois legislature, and been signed by the governor. Chicago men citizens will vote on its adoption at the coming election.

A BRIEF note from Miss Willard, dated Steamship New York, March 12, says: "Here we are, only a few hundred miles off shore, sea calm and blue as a lake; less sea sickness than we ever had before; I cannot tell you how thankful we are. I intend to begin a series of 'Letters from the President'; will send one soon; also shall get at work as quickly as possible upon my manual for World's W. C. T. U." Through these President's letters our home constituency will be kept in close contact with our Chieftain until her return next autumn.

AMONG all the enterprises in which women have engaged this of the Woman's Temple is the largest, for when the building which cost over a million dollars is paid for, the net rentals amounting to one hundred thousand dollars a year or more will supply the sinews of war for our great society in carrying forward its propaganda of total abstinence and prohibition, scientific temperance instruction in the public schools, the better protection of women, the promotion of peace and various other ameliorations of our human lot that center in the temperance reform.

MADAME CHIKA SAKURAI made her farewell call at our editorial rooms last Monday. She left Chicago this week for San Francisco, intending to sail from that port April 13 for Yokohama, reaching Japan the 30th. She wishes it stated that exactly one hundred dollars has been sent her for the Mary Allen West memorial fund, and was forwarded to the proper persons in Japan. Madame Sakurai expresses herself highly pleased with her twenty months' residence in the United States, and promises THE UNION SIGNAL a letter soon after reaching her home in Tokyo.

No religious paper in Chicago or elsewhere has shown such warm support of the Temperance Temple and its promoter as The Interior, the leading Presbyterian journal of the West. After every attack upon the building and the motive of its founder, Dr. W. C. Gray, the editor, has not failed to defend Mrs. Carse in his own inimitable and eloquent way. On March 14 The Interior issued a remarkable number of seventy-six illustrated pages, to celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary. Having a practical appreciation of the enormous anxieties and expense of such a number, we congratulate not only the editors but the readers on this beautiful volume of literature, for such it is.

OUR National treasurer, Mrs. Helen M. Barker, returned last Friday from the Southland. She reports a delightful trip personally and a revival of temperance enthusiasm. The spirit of organization is in the air in the Carolinas and Kentucky, just as it is in Illinois, Iowa and Colorado. We know our courteous treasurer left behind her as genial an atmosphere as she has brought back with her. The Temple forces always rejoice in her cheery, helpful presence.

THE newest item concerning the white ribbon tour this summer comes from Mrs. Ella A. Boole, of New York, in the announcement of a farewell reception to the delegates to the World's W. C. T. U. convention in London. The reception will be given at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, on Tuesday, June 4. The reception will include afternoon and evening meetings, with a luncheon at the hotel at one p. m. The fare from New York to Prohibition Park is only fifteen cents and the ladies of the Park will provide entertainment for all state and National officers and as many others as possible, provided notice is sent at least ten days in advance to Mrs. Boole at West New Brighton, Staten Island, N. Y. With the large and competent committee of prominent W. C. T. U. and prohibition leaders, and the cordial invitation to all who are going to the World's Convention as well as to their friends who desire to bid them Godspeed, we are assured in advance of a delightful occasion.

THERE is ever a peculiar interest touching a beginning, whether it be the mystery of creation, the dawning of a new year or the birth of a soul from the bondage of sin into the liberty of righteousness. Twelve years ago, out of a life of opposition to His laws, God called a man whose first vow to his newly found Father was implicit obedience. One of his first acts was to accompany a Christian worker to the slums to preach Christ to erring girls. The new convert listened while his friend prayed, and then, obedient again, he in his turn confessed Christ, telling the recent experience of his own salvation. The girls' hearts were deeply touched. As the friends were leaving, the younger follower of the cross clasped one of the girls by the hand, saying earnestly and reverently, "My sister, God bless you! Go and sin no more." Then flashed through his mind this question: "Where can she go? Who will receive her? What door will open to her touch?" That man was Charles N. Crittenton. There was no answer to his question then, but a few months later there was opened in New York the Florence Crittenton Mission, so named for a little daughter "gone away," whose hushed voice had led her father to think of God and yield Him obedience. Into the Florence Crittenton Mission of New York straying feet are led, and from its doors hundreds have gone to serve the pure Christ, and in their turn lead others to Him. Mr. Crittenton had large business interests, but he arranged his worldly affairs so he could give his time to the saving of souls, especially the souls of those whose feet have "taken hold on hell." From city to city he has gone preaching the simple gospel of God's love for His children and His hatred of their sin. He establishes Florence Crittenton Missions wherever he can, and at present there are sixteen such soul-saving stations in America. The Chicago Central W. C. T. U. has under its care one of these rescue missions bearing the name known and loved by thousands who have stepped through their open doors into a new life of purity. Mr. Crittenton has been in Chicago for three weeks preaching the gospel and pleading for the cause closest to his heart—the rescue of girls who have been led astray. He is assisted by Mr. Greenwood, a "sweet singer in Israel," and an earnest tongued speaker. Both bear their own expenses, give time and service free, and when donations are asked for turn the proceeds intact into the treasury of the rescue mission of the town where they may be.

THE TEMPLE.

BY KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

A Dream in Brick and Marble." Lo! it stands
Hard by the crowded city's central mart,
Lifting its graceful turrets high aloft
Up to the arching heavens' eternal calm,
Above the streets where traffic's busy din
Deafens man's ears and stills the inner voice
Which calls him to things holiest and best.
There—like a Sabbath hush in week-day toil,
Or, like a glittering fragment broken off
From that white city which shall swift descend
From God's great heaven, for aye to dwell with man
In strength and grace it stands.

How came it there?
Ah, its foundations reach back, ages far;
Builded they are of broken lives, crushed hopes,
Soul-longings, which were doomed to die, unvoiced;
Mind-reachings, which were forced back on themselves;
The patient heart of anguished womanhood,
Wounded and stricken sore in life's great fray,
Laid itself down for these foundation stones.
But mark the beauty of the structure reared
On such foundation stones.

What stands it for—this building wrought of tears,
Of hopes and aspirations? Ah, it means
The voicing forth of every high ideal;
The living out of every hope inlived
By the All-brooding Mind. It means the sure
Opening of prison doors to all who 're bound;
The healing of sad eyes now blind in sin;
It means the reign of righteousness and truth—
Truth in the inner parts and outer forms;
Truth in the laws which govern; men who rule;
It means the laying down of selfish lives
In glad surrender for the life of all.

Oh, glorious building, wrought in faith and hope,
Our hearts turn to you in new courage now.
It must be true that "on this altar place"
Shall shine forth the great "glory of His face,
When Jesus comes."

THE EVOLUTION OF THE WHITE RIBBON MOVEMENT.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

From infancy to majority is the longest single period in the life of an individual and marks a grand division in the life of an organization. To a philosophic mind the uprising of the Woman's Temperance Crusade, in the winter of 1874, which involved processions and praying bands, could not fail to have a sequel at once historic and great; when an idea so full of ethical power as the protection of the home, by the home-makers, becomes contagious in so many heads and vital in so many hearts, its evolution is sure to make wide circles, and the widest circle of the globe is now the only line of demarkation of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. From the praying band that gathered in the Presbyterian church at Hillsboro, December 23, 1873, to the meeting seven thousand strong with the Polyglot Petition, seven and one-half million strong, embellishing the largest hall in the capital city at the great meeting of February 15, 1895, is a long march. Nothing less than honest, hard work, invested according to a plan could ever have furnished such a contrast to the eyes of the world. It is in accordance with poetic justice that the first headquarters established by a white ribbon group was the office in Chicago furnished me free of charge in the autumn of 1874, when I entered the ranks and was made president of the W. C. T. U. of the Electric City. From the small, plain room, with its little wooden table and half-dozen splint-bottom chairs, located in the top story of the old Y. M. C. A. building, to the House Beautiful that now rears its fair proportions on the opposite corner, with its delightful National and city headquarters, was a long march, and nothing but devoted zeal and heavenly inspiration could ever have carried us so fast and far.

During this period I was practically without an income and had declined a salary. Some months passed in this way; after a day's work in the city I went to some suburban evening engagement where I received the collection, and in this way precariously maintained my mother and myself. Mrs. Carse learned of the situation and determined to make it more promising. She went to Rev. Dr. J. O. Peck, pastor of the Centenary M. E. Church, Chicago, that man of great and generous heart, and asked him to sign a statement to the effect that he would be the last of one hundred men who should give ten dollars each to keep me in the temperance work. Many a time has that strong, graceful figure and radiant face lighted up the street corner as we casually met and stopped for a moment, Mrs. Carse always having some cheery word to say as she archly shook her little subscription book in my face and said,

NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS IN TEMPLE.

"Through cold and heat,
Through storm and frost
I follow; not a day is lost."

It was no small undertaking to see a hundred busy Chicago men in their various places of business and secure the ten dollars, but she did this and afterward made a second tour for the purpose of collecting the amount.

In the autumn of 1874 in Cleveland, O., the Crusade women were called together and founded the National W. C. T. U., the headquarters of which were "in the saddle" for several years. In July, 1875, Our Union, a small monthly paper, was printed as the organ of the society, and in 1877 at the Newark convention it had so few subscribers and was so largely in debt that only by the pluck and spirit of Mrs. Judge Geddes, of Michigan, and three or four like-minded with her, was the paper saved from going into bankruptcy. In 1880 it had less than four thousand subscribers and the leaders of the movement felt that if they had nothing but a monthly paper the society would move forward at a very slow and halting pace. In that year Mrs. Matilda B. Carse came to me at the camp-meeting at Old Orchard Beach and said she had not been able to sleep, so constantly was she haunted by the idea that we must have a weekly paper that should command public attention and carry our plans for organizing and developing the movement to the women fifty-two times i the year instead of twelve. It has always been a part o my "Call" to say to every good woman who had an idea "Beloved, go ahead; do the best you can and I will hel you so far as in me lies." But Mrs. Carse's plan include more than the paper; it was to have a publishing hous behind it, and this should be the gatling gun of our peace ful war, sending its ammunition into the homes of th nation, that a constituency intelligent as well as earnest and aggressive as well as loyal, might be built up to carr forward the temperance propaganda. Therefore in 188 the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association was in corporated with a capital stock of five thousand dollar and the first number of The Signal was published on Jan uary 10, 1880, with Mrs. Mary B. Willard, editor, and Prof George E. Foster, now for many years Minister of Financ of the Dominion of Canada, publisher. The paper was marked success, and in 1881 at Louisville, Ky., a committe was appointed to confer with the officers of the Nationa W. C. T. U. as to the desirability of removing the Head quarters of the National to Chicago and merging Ou Union, the little monthly paper, with The Signal. Thi was done and the first number of The Union Signal wa issued by the W. T. P. A. Jan. 4, 1884. The history of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association is wel known to all white-ribboners. It has a paid up capita stock of one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars

W. T. P. A. PRESS ROOM.

It has published as many as one hundred and thirty mil lions of pages of our literature in a single year, and The Union Signal has reached a circulation as its maximum of nearly one hundred thousand weekly subscribers. Be sides this it publishes Our Young Women, the organ of the Y, The Young Crusader, the organ of the L. T. L's, beside pamphlets, leaflets, responsive readings, Gospel Lights and many valuable books, the largest of which are Mary Allen West's "Childhood: Its Care and Culture," and my autobiography, entitled "Glimpses of Fifty Years."

In 1883 we had what we called "a round-up." It was now a decade since the organization was established, and in this year every state and territory of the fifty subdivisions of the nation was visited and conventions held in many, so that there has not been from that time a single state or territory in which we had not at least the outline of an organization, not only local but state or territorial. Up to that time there were several states in the South and territories beyond the Rockies and Sierras, that had not been "brought into the fold."

In 1883, at the ninth meeting of the National W. C. T. U. it was resolved to found the Woman's Temperance

Hospital, for the purpose of teaching scientific fact that it is not essential to use alcoholic liquors in medical practice. Mrs. M. M. Hobbs, a woman of wealth and public spirit, has "mothered" the enterprise from the beginning, and it is now an assured success, having won the respect of all reputable people and having on its corps of physicians leading names of all the different schools. Attached to this hospital there is a training-school for nurses, and it is expected, although the present building is well fitted up and most eligibly situated near Lincoln Park, on the North Side, Chicago, that a larger building will soon be erected and more ample facilities secured.

About the year 1883 Mrs. Carse began planning another enterprise, namely, the erection of a building that should serve, not only as the headquarters of the National society, but should furnish, by means of rentals, a large sum with which to carry on our work. The procuring cause of this determination on her part was the fact that our good brothers of the Y. M. C. A., who had from the beginning up to that time given us the free use of Farwell Hall for a Gospel Temperance meeting daily, dedecided that they could no longer harbor such a motley throng as gathered there, and so gave us notice to quit. Mrs. Carse then said, "We will have a home of our own to which we can bring any who will come, and we will have some settled means of securing money for the work." The crying need of our society was more financial ability to develop the different departments and build up the work in state and nation. Owing to the great value of ground in Chicago it was necessary, in order to make ours a paying investment, to put up a handsome fireproof building, the corner-stone of which was laid November 1, 1890, and completed May 1, 1892. When it is paid for, and all the offices that it contains are rented, it will give us a net income of not less than $100,000 a year. Every reader of this paper as well as every citizen of Chicago, is familiar with the magnificent Temperance Temple that stands at the corner of La Salle and Monroe streets, and the cut of which appears above and on our cover page.

But it must be remembered in order to bring about this result so greatly desired we must raise $300,000 by January 1, 1896. Mr. Marshall Field, Chicago's merchant prince, has started the ball rolling for this amount with a subscription of $25,000, as has been already stated, and many smaller sums are coming in. Mrs. Carse is constantly appealing to men and women of wealth, and I am confident that these columns will soon attest the success of her endeavors.

The local unions have done nobly. Without the money contributed by them there would have been no nucleus around which to gather, no foundation on which to build. It is entirely owing to their loyal response to the earnest call of their leaders that we have the Temple an assured fact in brick and mortar, the finest office building in the world, and that we are housed therein with all our appurtenances, and are steadily moving on with the routine work of a great and constantly growing society.

We have twelve years from the founding of the Temple in which to pay for it. Four of those years have now elapsed and within the next eight we must carry the enterprise to completion. The unequalled financial stress and calamity of the last two years have seriously hindered the work and diminished the total income for rents by tens of thousands of dollars; but we are beginning to see better times, and business men are confident that within another year there will be a demand for all the office accommodations that the Temple can furnish.

Our appeal therefore is specifically addressed to those good and true friends of the temperance reform, those intelligent enemies of the saloon, the gambling house, the haunt of infamy, who have seen in our society an engine of power for the pulling down of these strongholds of iniquity. We ask them to help us, we ask them to contribute of their substance, to put their shoulder to the wheel, to work into the warp and woof of this sacred enterprise some threads of gold and silver, remembering that what we give we have and what we save we lose, remembering that shrouds have no pockets, but that the glancing wings of spirits glorified may catch not a little of their supernal glory from the generous gifts that rich and beautiful souls made while on the earth to those causes that incarnate the gospel of Christ and the spirit of human brotherhood.

HISTORY OF THE TEMPLE ENTERPRISE.

Inception.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Great events do not spring to life in an hour,—nor do great enterprises culminate in a day—they are the product of somebody's best thoughts and earnest endeavor, though the circumstance that gave them birth may have been of the most simple character. The Temple, the World's and National's building of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which stands forth in such imperial beauty in the heart of Chicago's business center, is no exception to the rule.

In 1883 the final edict went forth from the executive committee of the Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago, that their building in future could only be used for the respectable class of young men, and that the Central W. C. T. U., of which I was president, could no longer hold its daily gospel temperance meetings in lower Farwell Hall, of which they had kindly given the free use for nine years, and which had become famous on account of the conversion of large numbers of intemperate men. I felt, and so declared, that God meant we should have a building and hall of our own where the rum-cursed victims of the legalized liquor traffic could find a refuge from the door of which none would be turned away because of their lack of respectability.

From that day God deepened this conviction upon my heart. I felt that Chicago was the place for a beautiful Temple, different from any the world had ever seen, fitted for the needs of the age, uniting beauty and utility; a great building, within whose ample walls a quiet, retired, holy place could be found where devout souls who mourn over the immorality and intemperance of the world could meet and supplicate God daily to save the nation's homes. Besides it must be a humming hive of business, from whose rentals should be realized a princely income to be expended in educating the land in temperance and righteousness.

Daily the plan unfolded and grew. I was conscious, as though a voice from heaven had announced it, that I was to undertake the erection of such a building. A wonderful baptism of faith seemed granted to me and I became possessed with the thought that death itself could not overtake me until the building was completed.

At the Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union at Nashville, Tenn., November, 1887, the plan was presented to that body for acceptance. It caused great enthusiasm and was heartily indorsed.

The Building.

To Burnham and Root, the most noted firm of architects for large office buildings in the United States, was intrusted the responsibility of designing an edifice which should be memorial in its character and yet eminently suitable for a fine office building. The designer was the late Mr. John W. Root, who afterwards became chief architect of the World's Columbian Exposition. He entered almost with a spirit of divination into the work intrusted to him, and produced what he and his associates called his masterpiece and what authorities on architecture concede is the handsomest architecturally of any office building in the world.

Financial Plan.

The Temple was erected from money secured by the sale of stock and bonds. The organization was incorporated under the name of the Woman's Temperance Building Association, "for the purpose of erecting a hall and offices for the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union." It was capitalized for $600,000, and bonded for an equal amount. The building cost $1,265,000, leaving a floating debt of $65,000, which will be entirely wiped out the present year. The stock was subscribed for by persons friendly to the temperance cause, with the agreement that it could be bought at par by the W. C. T. U. within twelve years by the payment of five per cent for the use of the money. This pledge, of course, only holds good with original stock purchasers.

The ground on which the Temple is built is owned by Marshall Field and is held by a leasehold title, which runs two hundred years, for which $40,000 a year is paid, and is not liable to further revaluation. The lot is considered worth $1,000,000. It has a frontage on La Salle street of 190 feet by 96 feet on Monroe street.

The Temple Trustees who receive and disburse the gift fund for the W. C. T. U. have purchased over $300,000 of the stock; this gives them the controlling interest in the building. When the entire stock is owned by them and the bonded debt liquidated the property will be deeded to the National W. C. T. U., and one-half the income will go to the National society, the other half to the states pro rata the amount each state has paid towards the building fund. When the offices are all let the building will bring in a rental of over $200,000.

Appeal.

The Temple at Chicago is known the world over as the National building of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Carved on the stone portals on each side of the grand entrance on La Salle street are the now well known initials, W. C. T. U., the same letters are engraved on two sides of the huge granite corner-stone. The seal of the National society in bronze is imbeded in the stone over the arched entrance to Willard Hall. The spacious marble corridors leading to the auditorium has tablets engraved with the name of almost every state in the Union, following which are the same legendary letters. Again we see them not only on the marble tablets which line the auditorium, but find them emblazoned amid the clusters of soft incandescent lights which glow like stars on the beautiful ceiling. It can be seen, therefore, from all outward semblance, that the building is ours.

The time has now come to make it ours in very fact. So far we have only had a start in this direction, and this year we ought to raise as much money as we have done in all the years since the enterprise was begun. We must secure at least $300,000 of this amount. Mr. Marshall Field has subscribed $25,000, conditioned on our securing $275,000 more by the first of January, 1896. Mrs. C. H. McCormick, of Chicago, has subscribed $10,000, besides some smaller sums have been secured which will be given later.

In regard to raising the above amount I ask that women of faith be much in prayer. Let those who doubt remember that "every great deed has seemed impossible until it was done." In our white ribbon army, from the richest to the poorest, from the youngest to the oldest, there is a part for each to do in this work. He who gave us the command to "arise and build" is reviewing His troops. He is sifting us. Are those who have money and to spare hoarding and holding it back, when it would give us that which would smite the smiter who is slaughtering by tens of thousands the very flower of the youth of our land?

In one of the last letters written by Miss Willard before she sailed, this passage occurs: "In all the wills, bequests and gifts of the rich, I see everything remembered except our holy cause of home protection and saloon destruction, and at this I often grieve and wonder." I appeal to Christian temperance men and women everywhere who are in independent circumstances to come forward at this crucial time and help us to pay for our "House Beautiful." Let it be no longer said that bequests are made for everything except the promotion of temperance. As I have already stated, those who have no money themselves to give can send for a Temple Wheel and get it filled and thus start a chain of silver Wheels Templeward that will help to materially swell the three hundred thousand dollars. Remember that if every president of a local union to whom Miss Willard's letter has been sent, requesting her to secure the filling of a hundred Wheels would respond favorably, it would bring into our treasury over seven hundred thousand dollars. Children as well as adults can aid in this work. Another way, dear sisters, you can help, is by sending me at once the name and address of persons of wealth who you think would likely be interested in temperance.

Let us go forward strong in the Lord and the power of His might, to the attainment of that which He has set us to do—the entire ownership of the Temple; remembering that this means the opening of blind eyes, the unstopping of deaf ears, the setting of the prisoner free, and the binding up of the broken hearts.

"To serve with lofty gifts the lowly needs
Of the poor race for which the God-man died,
And do it all for love—oh, this is great!"

Chicago, Ill.

NOTHING MORE IMPORTANT.

BY NEAL DOW.

IF only we could inspire the W. C. T. U. with a little enthusiasm, the object for which the Wheels are intended would be speedily accomplished. There is no little bright girl of eight or ten years who could not be an active, earnest and successful worker with the Wheels. I think of nothing now, more important for the temperance cause than obtaining the whole property of the Temple in fee, for the National W. C. T. U. May God bless you in this great enterprise.

A CENTER OF STRATEGIC IMPORTANCE.

BY JOSEPH COOK.

THE Woman's Temple in Chicago is the crowning architectural glory of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

It is a center of immense, strategic importance to the work of that great organization and to the whole enlarging sphere of woman's influence in moral and political reform. Great financial ability has been exhibited in the erection of the building and is now being exhibited in the attempt to clear it from debt. The whole body of temperance people in the nation ought to rise in defense of an enterprise so vital to the highest interests of our whole population.

"WHAT SHALL WE DO ABOUT THE TEMPLE?"

BY MARY A. LIVERMORE.

I WAS not one of those who favored the Temple project, and I never advised it. I thought it too vast an enterprise for the body of women who make up the constituency of the W. C. T. U., few of whom are good business women or very wealthy, intelligent and excellent as they are in other respects. A plainer building and less expensive would have pleased me better, one suited to the business needs of the National W. C. T. U., and not a colossal structure as a business investment, as we had nothing to invest.

But Mrs. Carse and her hosts of friends thought differently, and we have the Temple. I forwarded my gift of money, although I had not favored the erection of such a building, and when the bonds were put on the market I bought them and persuaded members of my family to do the same. Many others all over the country took the same course. We would help Mrs. Carse in her plans, even if they were not ours. That she has accomplished so much with so little material aid is astonishing. And I never see the beautiful Temple, perfectly built, full of business conveniences and teeming with life and business activities, without feeling sure that the active brain and indomitable will which has created this poem in stone will yet redeem the full promise its owner has made and transfor it, free of incumbrance, to the W. C. T. U.

I have had my times of doubting the possibility of this, but the skill of Mrs. Carse in weathering the prolonged financial storm of the last two or three years when she has met her obligations and increased her resources, has quickened public confidence in her. Faith in her financiering has been demonstrated by the gifts she has received from various sources, which have ranged from five thousand to twenty-five thousand dollars, and which are likely to be repeated as the times improve—for the W. C. T. U. is rich in friends outside its organization, and the noble ambition of Mrs. Carse to endow it with a valuable property from which it will receive a large and assured income for its multiform work has hosts of admirers and sympathizers.

If Mrs. Carse should fail in her enterprise through our indifference or hostility, the harm resulting would be very serious. The Temple would pass hopelessly into the hands of other owners than the W. C. T. U. It would not only humiliate and hinder the W. C. T. U., but all women. The old taunt, "They began to build, but were not able to finish!" would be hurled in our teeth with great force and bitterness. It would be sure to divide the W. C. T. U. into two hostile camps, one of which would accuse the other—and with some justice—of having caused the irreparable disaster. And it would paralyze faith in the ability of women to coöperate in business enterprises for years to come.

But if Mrs. Carse succeeds! And if she lives and retains her mental and physical vigor, I think she is sure to succeed, especially if the W. C. T. U. stands solidly by her with help and sympathy. What if we should all compel ourselves to stop grumbling and begin to work for the Temple, all over the country, in every state and territory of the Union! To systematize a plan of monthly or quarterly contributions, which, if small, would aggregate a mighty sum, because of our large numbers! To present a united front to the world, and so demonstrate that the cause of Mrs. Carse is also ours! To stifle all criticism of her and her methods, only as we utter it to her personally! Do you not believe she would soon feel the tide of success swelling around her feet despite the continued business stagnation? It will make us stronger to redeem the Temple from its incumbrances, and unite us in a solidarity that will defy disintegration. There are two hundred thousand of us, adult women, and half that number could do it. For to a resolute soul there are no impossibilities.

HOW WE RAISED IT.

BY PROF. SAMUEL IVES CURTISS.

MISS WILLARD in a recent letter has asked me to indicate "how to raise money for the Woman's Temple by subscription." In the presence of the queen of money raisers it behooves me simply to tell how we raised it for the Chicago Theological Seminary.

Inspired by past experiences, our directors were a unit in the belief that we could secure $400,000 to meet a conditional gift of Dr. Pearsons in two years. Much to my surprise, they asked me to take entire charge of the campaign, pledging themselves to stand by me shoulder to shoulder.

We struck the words "impossible" and "defeat" from our vocabulary, for were we not working in His service who had said, "All things are possible to him that believeth," and, "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

We heard everywhere that the field was preoccupied by local causes that could not be postponed, and that the present was not a good time to set forth our cause. But by patient endeavor, once, twice, thrice, we usually got a hearing, always with good results.

We found the press most helpful in producing an atmosphere favorable to giving. Early in our efforts we secured the coöperation of the Advance, which through the generosity of its manager did its utmost and its best, greatly to its own advantage, for in helping us it helped itself.

Our students, one hundred and forty in number, subscribed $6,250 out of their poverty. This was a most inspiring fact. It showed what the poorest could bring to pass by combination. Two or three of their representatives accomplished wonders among the churches. They secured two or three thousand dollars where one hundred dollars would ordinarily have been considered a very handsome offering.

While men and women of means gave liberally, success would have been impossible without the contributions of those in humble circumstances. It was their prayers and their gifts which carried us through.

We were compelled by the stress of circumstances to raise the last $150,000 needed in the most unpropitious times. We would have heeded the advice of friends and have stopped, if such a delay had not meant financial ruin. As it was, God honored the prayer and faith of His servants, and on the appointed day the entire sum had been raised with the exception of about $3,000, which was guaranteed.

We were delighted to find that struggling colleges and churches instead of being paralyzed, were strengthened and inspired by our effort to go and do likewise.

It would seem that there should be no difficulty in the National W. C. T. U. raising the sum of $275,000 by the first of January, 1896, under the generalship of Mrs. Carse provided there is general coöperation in her plans. If the National machinery could be turned in this direction the much larger sum needed to put the women in full possession of their Temple might doubtless be raised in a year, with infinite advantage to every cause which for the time might suffer loss.

It is difficult to conceive of a more eloquent appeal than the years of devotion which are embodied in the Woman's Temple. Such a miracle of faith and business enterprise in brick and mortar, cannot fail to rouse the enthusiastic and united support of the great constituency of the W. C. T. U., when there is a reasonable hope of entering into full possession.

THE PULSE OF THE MOVEMENT.

BY WILLIAM R. HARPER.
(President University of Chicago.)

IN my opinion the difficulty in raising money for the Temple debt lies in the fact that the great constituency of the W. C. T. U. are scattered over almost every square mile of the civilized world, therefore a building located in Chicago seems an unreal and intangible good to the large majority of the members of the organization.

If this vast membership can once be made to realize the fact that the pulse of the movement in which they are so deeply interested beats here in this building, that the money which is contributed to this building is contributed to the general cause and not to a distant local center, then money will come from every hand.

In a cause of such universal interest many small subscriptions should be easy to secure, and these would aggregate a large sum, but too much time is required in such a method of collection. There are surely men and women of wealth who appreciate the debt that civilization owes to the temperance movement, and the duty of every citizen to uphold it with purse and influence. Could they do this more effectually than by starting a subscription with a large sum?

BUSINESS MEN'S SENTIMENTS.

To the Board of Temple Trustees:

We have, in compliance with your request, and for the express purpose of reassuring the friends of temperance throughout the world, made a personal examination into the financial affairs of the Woman's Temperance Building Association, and the Temple building at Chicago, Ill.

Our primary object has been to determine whether the interests of the members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the friends of temperance have been conserved, and, whether it can be expected that by judicious financiering, the great Temple building at Chicago will ultimately be owned by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

In our judgment the action of Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, and the others, members of the Temperance Building Association and the Board of Temple Trustees, in the management of this entire enterprise, has been eminently wise and prudent. A continuance of such management, with the hearty coöperation of the friends of the enterprise and of temperance, ought in due time, to secure the absolute ownership of the property to the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Respectfully submitted,

WHAT THE TEMPLE WOULD DO FOR OUR WORK.

BY HELEN M. BARKER.
(Temple Trustee.)

ONE of the crying needs of our National work has been more money with which to carry it on. Many plans have been abandoned from time to time because of the lack of funds. How often we hear the cry, "O, if we had one hundred or three hundred dollars how easily we could help this state, or send an organizer to some destitute field."

It long ago became apparent that the dues alone would never afford means to push the work in different directions, and some plan must be devised that would guarantee a revenue. The Temple, centrally located and filled with occupants, gives promise of this revenue in the near future. The floating debt has been already paid off or nearly so, and we should this year secure $300,000 of the stock not yet in our possession. If the friends of the W. C. T. U. could realize our great need I feel sure this amount would be forthcoming. Then the National W. C. T. U. would not only control the beautiful building but would be able in time to buy up the bonds from the profits of rentals and gifts until it absolutely owned the Temple.

What would this mean? Headquarters for the National free of charge; thousands of dollars of income for our growing work and an independent position that would command the respect of the world.

Chicago, Ill.

OUR TEMPLE.

BY CLARA C. HOFFMAN.
(Temple Trustee.)

THE National Woman's Christian Temperance Union ought to own its own headquarters. If in addition to its local habitation it could derive a revenue from the building to go back into the work so much the better. This has been the thought underlying the Temple project from the first. And why should it not carry? There is abundance of wealth. There are rich men giving the million and half million to enterprises not more worthy nor more useful than this. Then why not to this?

First, it should and will receive the endorsement and support of monied men, because the need for temperance work cries unto the heavens. Second, it should and will receive the endorsement and support of rich and chivalric men, because women have undertaken so great and important a work with a faith and enthusiasm beyond all praise. Heroism stirs the best and noblest in man, and constrains him to give his meed of praise and reach forth the helping hand.

It was impossible for any to foretell the financial storm that would sweep over our land, leaving its track of loss and ruin, and it was equally impossible to foretell the wicked and venemous attacks that should be made again and again upon a legitimate business enterprise. We have great reason to thank God and take courage that in spite of all these things we have been able to preserve our financial integrity so well.

Every effort should be made to secure the controlling interest in the Temple for the W. C. T. U. White-ribboners everywhere should present this enterprise to rich men and women, remembering always that all hearts are in God's hands and can be turned whithersoever He will. We should use all agencies ourselves, for it is ever true that God helps those who help themselves. If there be unanimity of effort among ourselves we shall become a magnet that will draw others to us. Let us make this strong, united effort.

ITS RELATION TO NATIONAL ECONOMICS.

BY MARION H. DUNHAM.
(Temple Trustee.)

A PHASE of the temperance question has not been emphasized as it should be, and that is the economic. The more than $1,130,000,000 spent each year for liquor, is of much less benefit to the general industries of the country, when concentrated in the hands of the dealers and paid out by them, than it would be were it paid out for articles of general use by the hundreds of thousands who pay for liquor over the bar.

The man who buys one or more glasses of liquor lessens his purchases of other articles by just that amount, and while the purchasing power of the seller is increased, it is not increased to the extent of that by which that of the buyer is diminished. With the increase of the drinking habit the productive and consuming power of the drinker decreases and he not only ceases to add to the wealth of the country but becomes, and often his family as well, a burden upon it.

In no other way can the wealth of the country be so certainly, quickly and steadily increased as by our becoming a nation of total abstainers. No other organization is doing so much to bring the reasonableness of this before the people as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, but it is constantly hampered by lack of funds. The ownership of the Temple by the rentals received from it will obviate this difficulty, and by giving the cause a central point for its work will greatly increase its usefulness, influence and prestige. I believe that the ownership of the Temple will, more than any other one thing, hasten the day when the people guided by intelligence and conscience will cease to use intoxicants, and this will be of immeasurable benefit not only to morality, but to the financial interests of the country as well.

IT STANDS FOR PURITY.

BY MRS. A. A. MUNNELL.
(Temple Trustee.)

FOR one who desires to aid the cause of temperance there is no better way, no way which will be more enduring and far-reaching in its results than giving toward the Temple fund. It is aiding the W. C. T. U. in a most practical and substantial form, for as soon as the National owns the building, the states will in return receive aid from the mother society in proportion to the amount contributed.

That our great organization should have such a building seems eminently proper. Its very magnificence only makes it more suitable a possession. It stands a silent protest against the giant iniquity of the nation. Its beautiful and symmetrical proportions, the idealized thought of a woman, stand for a world's cleansing. It stands forth as a monument of woman's faith in a just cause. It speaks in eloquent language of the purpose for which it was erected. It speaks of the solid basis of truth which underlies our efforts in the cause we have espoused, and shows to the world that as one in purpose the W. C. T. U. is a power to be respected.

It behooves us "not to weary in well doing," but to go on making determined effort to secure this prize for our own and never to cease our efforts till we see the answer to our prayers and have a "local habitation," of which the National W. C. T. U. may be justly proud.

OUR HOME.

BY SUSAN S. FESSENDEN.
(Temple Trustee.)

HOME is an English and American institution. To have a centripetal point toward which one's thoughts and affections and interests converge is to strengthen the interest. "That belongs to me," has created an enthusiasm in hearts for home that has saved many a person from temptation and wreckage.

What is true of an individual is, to a certain extent, true of an organization. To have one central point that is home to the workers inspires not a pride only, but a vital interest in everything that concerns that central spot; a sense of ownership that makes every individual member of our organization feel richer. To make sacrifices for one's home is a part of the pleasure in it. These very sacrifices bind one closer to it.

I believe that every state and national W. C. T. U. should have headquarters. I believe every member should visit these headquarters often enough, if possible, to feel at home there. The pictures on the wall, the carpet on the floor should be familiar objects. The sight of the faces of co-workers should endear the spot, so that when any place is vacant there shall be a sense of loss. Those who are not privileged thus to meet should seek to learn all that art and pen can bring to them of the spot which each is individually doing something to build and to support. This is true of the women over the states who are so interested in owning the Temple in Chicago, for which our friend and sister, Matilda B. Carse, has been making such heroic efforts and braving so much misunderstanding. It has been my hope that we might each and all give one strong pull altogether this year and pay for this magnificent building. At first this seems impossible, but could we realize that if each member would fill a mite-box this year the work would be accomplished, and we should never hear again that withering exclamation, "It can't be done!"

If a few who are blessed with larger means than the rest could and would hand to Mrs. Carse one or two thousand dollars it would pay the share of many who really cannot give the three and a half dollars. I, for one, wish we might report at our Baltimore Convention the Temple paid for, and so place a quietus on the prophecies that it never will be. Whether it ever will be depends upon you and me. Will we do it?

WHAT ONE LETTER DID.

The Appeal.

Boston, Mass, Jan. 28, 1895.

To Marshall Field, Esq.

Dear Mr. Field:—I had much desired to see you on a matter that is greatly in my thoughts, and which I know commands your sympathy—the ownership of the Temple in Chicago by the W. C. T. U.

. . . I do not think there is anything now that affects the welfare of the work the world over more than the success of an enterprise on which there has been so much comment, and any failure in Chicago at this time will be disastrous to the work, not of America only, but will much injure us in England, in India, in Australia, in Africa, and in all the many countries where we are struggling to cope with the awful evils of intemperance brought too often with civilization. There exists, therefore, a vital necessity that Mrs. Carse should at once undertake securing large sums from sympathizers outside the ranks of the women who have so little at their command. I have promised to help her in all ways in my power.

It has occurred to me that the generous interest you have shown in the undertaking makes it possible for me to appeal to you to help the women, not of America only, but of the world, in this manner, and that if your name could head such a list the struggles and the difficulties that Mrs. Carse must endure in such a campaign would be much lightened. Miss Willard has, to a large extent, recovered her usual health, but she is not able to undertake the fatigue of constant journeys as heretofore, nor is she able to speak night after night at great public meetings, and cannot therefore assist Mrs. Carse as she could have done a few years ago.

. . . The great opportunity that occurs for a noble-hearted man to render a service to humanity that will live and last long after we have passed away, gives me courage to place the matter before you. I think that the success of the Temple would be ensured if you could give a conditional pledge to the Temple Trustees, stating that you would give $50,000 toward either the purchase of stock or the Temple Trust Bonds, provided that by the first of January, 1896, $250,000 had been subscribed by friends of the movement. I believe that such a pledge as this would secure the success of the enterprise beyond a peradventure. Mrs. Carse has wrestled so nobly with the difficulties that she has had to encounter, not only outside the cause but, alas, inside the ranks of those who should have been her warm supporters; her health has suffered so much from the strain and anxiety that I feel I dare ask much for the sake of this self-denying and devoted woman.

Whatever your response is to this letter, at any rate I am sure you will forgive me for thus addressing you, and believe with that justice which I have always heard characterizes your dealings with others that I have only done so because I feel that a responsibility is upon all who enjoy the privileges of being able to help the world, and that to fulfill this obligation is a happiness to those who, like yourself, sympathize with the best efforts to uplift humanity.

I am yours sincerely,

Isabel Somerset.

The Reply.

Chicago, Feb. 6, 1895.

Dear Lady Somerset:—I received your favor of 28th ult., and after duly considering the matter I gave Mrs. Carse yesterday, a subscription for $25,000 conditioned on the total sum of $300,000 being raised by January 1, 1896. While I did not fully accede to your request, I trust you will take into consideration the many demands that are made upon me, and understand in a measure why I felt obliged to decline making it the amount you suggested. Hoping the total amount will be raised, and with my best wishes for you all in your efforts in that direction, I am

Sincerely yours.

Marshall Field.

THE LOST CAUSE.

Dear Union Signal:—Whatever the fate of the so-called Norwegian bill in the Massachusetts legislature of 1895, it represents a lost cause. The "exploded system," as Sir William Harcourt styles it, is not likely to be adopted in the old Bay state. The temperance workers, with one or two exceptions, are a unit against it. The descendants of the Puritans take their advanced civilization from Old England and not from Old England's antecedents far away up North. Sweden and Norway send us some very excellent citizens and workers, but the dwellers in a republic do not take kindly to system and methods that are the outgrowth of life in those countries.

For four days, March 11, 12, 13, 14, a hearing on the subject has been in progress at the state house before the Liquor Law committee. I say "so-called" Norwegian system, for even its advocates object to this nomenclature. It is a revised edition from which objectionable features of the original system have been removed, so they say. No one denies, however, that it is a system for the regulation and sale of liquor,—a kind of moral code for a business which from its very nature is outside the realm of morals.

The Gothenburg or Norwegian system, with Massachusetts improvements, briefly rehearsed is as follows: "It is permissive and only applicable to cities and towns which have voted license; a corporation is substituted for the individual licensed liquor dealer; one license is permitted to every three thousand of the population; the hours for selling are from 8 a. m. to 10 p. m.; shareholders are not to receive over five per cent dividends; the profits, after all expenses are paid, are to be used for the public benefit; if adopted, it is for three years." The advantages claimed are that "it, the liquor business, would be in the hands of the best men, disinterested men, that it would remove the liquor influence from politics; the number of the drink places would be reduced; questionable methods would be prevented, also the immoral accessories of the saloon; the consumption of liquor would be checked; private profits illiminated; the profits may antidote the ills; the bill is a powerful means of education."

Mr. J. G. Thorpe, of Cambridge, presented and explained the bill for the petitioners—the third time that he has performed that duty. He was followed by Rev. John G. Brooks, and these two, with Rev. D. N. Beach, may be said to father the bill. They brought to their aid in endorsing it before the committee, Hon. S. B. Copen, Prof. Peabody, of Harvard, Prof. Woodbridge, of Williams, representing President Carter [but not the spirit of the Williams College of grand old Mark Hopkins] Dr. Alexander Mackenzie, Rev. P. S. Moxom, Bishop Lawrence, Rev. Lyman Abbott, etc. Mr. Abbott is willing the experiment be tried—in Massachusetts, and added that if he were a believer in statutory or constitutional prohibition, he doubted if he should vote for it. The above are names of more or less note, but it is probably not amiss to say that they are not notable in the temperance reform. The order of the white ribbon would make an exception in favor of Mary A. Livermore, who appeared for the bill—the exception that proves the rule. Editor Dennison, of the Springfield Republican, did not claim to advocate it as a temperance man. He was the only one who signified a willingness to go into the business himself.

It is quite true of Rev. Mr. Beach, Rev. Mr. Brooks, and Mr. J. G. Thorpe, that they are experts on the Norwegian system. This happens to be a specialty of theirs, as the temperance reform is that of Frances E. Willard, John G. Woolley and others. But while they are experts they are also Americans, and it is a fact that "one must be born and bred in a country to understand it." A few summer days in a land where the language, the civilization, the politics are unfamiliar, scarcely suffice to reach the depths of a grave national problem.

It must be admitted by all who have attended the hearing this week that there is no epecial enthusiasm in Massachusetts for the Norwegian system. The attendance averaged perhaps one-third of the seating capacity of the old house of representatives, and the majority were evidently opposed to the measure. It is not legislative etiquette to applaud or show signs of feeling. All through the first part, as the bill was being advocated, such etiquette was truly observed. There was a change, however, when the opponents took the floor; the same punctiliousness was not adhered to.

Mr. F. C. Nash conducted the hearing in reply. When Rev. A. A. Miner brought down his sledge-hammer there was a recoil. In his creed there is no toleration for "the most infamous business on the face of the earth." Mr. F. Peterson and one or two others represented the Scandinavian protest against the introduction of the system into this country. Rev. Mr. Warfield brought the artillery of statistics, the sum of which was that "the consumption of liquor has decreased ten per cent more in the United States than they have been able to decrease it in Sweden with the company system." Rev. C. E. Jefferson, of Chelsea; Rev. I. J. Lansing, Boston; Rev. Dr. Plumb, Mrs. S. S. Fessenden, president Massachusetts W. C. T. U.; Mrs. E. L. McLaughlin, president Boston W. C. T. U.; Dr. Howard Gibbs and others, foremost temperance workers, unalterably opposed to the liquor traffic, also addressed the committee in reply.

The last hour and a half Thursday was given to the petitioners, and the time was occupied by the sponsors of the bill. Each side had presented statistics questionable to the other side; authorities were questioned, and there were the usual courtesies (?) of debate. After Mr. Brooks and Mr. Thorpe had spoken, Mr. Beach was introduced to present the closing argument on the side of morals. This being the heart of the question, so far as the opponents are concerned, the audience listened eagerly for words which should establish the ethics of the saloon. But in vain. There was no heavenly word to show that such business as is contemplated in the Norwegian or Gothenburg system has the divine sanction. With all due appreciation of the candor and sincerity of these gentlemen, the effort to change the status of the saloon, to make it reputable, to give it the sanction of the state, of ministers, of law-loving and law-abiding people, the effort must fail.

NEWS FROM ENGLAND.

Dear Union Signal:—Two campaigns in which you will feel an interest have been going forward in this country during the past few months, and both of them afford striking testimony to the forethought and devotion of our white-ribbon chief, Lady Henry Somerset. One has comprised a series of most successful missions held by Mrs. J. K. Barney. Arranged by the Speakers' Bureau, B. W. T. A., the meetings have been productive of the best results, and England is indebted in no small degree to America for the sweet presence and forceful service of your prison evangelist. Some details of this effort shall form the subject of a further letter; and yet another may profitably be devoted to the second campaign mentioned, with which in the capacity of an organizer I have myself had the privilege of close association. This has had relation to the evils of opium in the far East, and has comprised no less than twenty great meetings in as many of the principal cities throughout the United Kingdom. Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate C. Bushnell have been the chief figures at these meetings, and on the average fifteen hundred people have on each occasion assembled to hear them discourse on "Social Questions in the Orient"—the leading theme being, of course, the horrors of opium and the close connection of the habit with vice and immorality. More may be said of this in another early letter, for the campaign is drawing to a successful close, and is to have a brilliant finish at a great mass-meeting in Queen's Hall, London, the scene of Miss Willard's great farewell meeting last May. At this gathering Lady Henry Somerset will be welcomed home after her stay in America, and no doubt this fact will add to the size as to the interest of the meeting.

Another element of the winter's work here of special interest to your readers is the advent of a new lantern lecture which will have been given by the end of the season fully fifty times in nearly as many different localities throughout the country. Its theme is the "Origin and History of the Women's Temperance Movement," but "The Women's Whisky War" is sometimes prefixed in the title, and that gives an added interest to it. Mrs. Osborn, who is superintendent of the Speakers' Bureau, compiled the lecture, which has met with the fullest appreciation wherever she has given it, and in some cases has been assured by those who for years past have been members of the Association, that they have learned from this lecture much they never knew before. In it the now world-wide woman's temperance work is traced back beyond the days of the Crusade to Mrs. Judge Thompson's first attendance at a temperance convention in Saratoga; then through the fiery days of the whisky war to the "sober second thought," out of which came the W. C. T. U., touching on the most prominent results accomplished in America, and so by natural steps to the beginning in England on the first visit of Mother Stewart, sketching the steady progress under the presidency of Mrs. Margaret Bright Lucas, the leaps and bounds of progress since the accession of Lady Henry Somerset, and the aims and present methods of the B. W. T. A. for a sober fatherland. The lecture is illustrated by nearly a hundred lantern slides—portraits of American and English leaders; views of places associated with them or with their work; and pictures of buildings or of documents which teach of great things done. Numbers added to the branches, quickened interest in the work, fuller appreciation of the tie to the National and international bodies, and in some cases increased local funds have been found to result; fitting reward for the work and anxiety involved in selection and preparation both of pictures and of matter and in the repeated delivery of the lecture.

London, Eng. Henry S. Osborn.

Dear Co-workers:—If many questions prove interest in the work and faith in the ability of the person questioned, then the work is going forward with growing zeal, and this corner of The Union Signal has the full confidence of the readers!

SPECIAL DIFFICULTIES

are more numerous than any other style of communication, and we only hope their discussion is broadly helpful.

---

Question.—In cities is it best to have many small unions or a few large ones?

Answer.—Many small unions can do more toward honeycombing the city with our principles than a few large ones. If the small ones hold monthly meetings a federation of unions should be formed, holding bi-monthly meetings, that the plans to take the city for temperance may be in unison.

Q.—There has been a discussion as to who should be called members of the W. C. T. U. There are some who will give money, but will not sign the pledge; these are called by some of our members "sustaining members." What do you think about it?

A.—I do not think—we all know. Only those are members of the W. C. T. U. who "sign the pledge and pay the annual membership dues." A woman who will not sign the pledge does not "sustain." One who sustains a movement supports it "adequately as true or just." The giving of money might make the person a contributor, but the refusal to sign the pledge is direct opposition to first principles.

I want to take up right here, a matter that was not sent me as a Special Difficulty, but is very special and has surely proven a "snag" to the good sister who writes so mistakenly but so unsuspiciously. She says:

Before I became a W. C. T. U. woman I always used brandy in mince-meat and as some one remarks, it "tasted flat" when I discontinued the use of it. But by some providential accident, shall I say, I made a larger quantity so that some was kept for a year. The flavor was so excellent that it was infinitely superior to that seasoned with liquor. I strongly advise my friends to make their mince-meat now and there will be no complaint of flatness.

Of course not! Our friend did not recognize the demon in disguise. During the year fermentation had set in and the "excellent flavor" was due to the presence of alcohol. Some housewives misunderstand the meaning of the word "ferment." The mince-meat did not seem "bad"—on the contrary, to an uneducated nose, smelled "good," but decay had set in and the spirit of the still had begun to work. Our comrade had much better have thrown her mince-meat away than have used it in its "excellent" condition.

Our editor-in-chief, Miss Willard, honors our corner by an occasional communication most welcome. She has sent me the following in regard to a reference made in a past letter to the Somerset union:

"You have given a correct account of the Somerset W. C. T. U., but I wish you had added to it the following facts concerning the Somerset Y for colleges. We desire to organize in every woman's college, seminary, high school and co-educational institution in the United States and the world at large, a Somerset Y,—that is a club of young women who shall be banded together for the study of the current reform and philanthropic questions of the day; who shall be organized along our white ribbon lines of work so far as this is practicable in the crowded life of a young woman at school, and who shall send a delegate whenever practicable to the state W. C. T. U. convention. This is a general outline of the plan which has already been introduced, either as here stated or in a modified form, into Wellesley, Holyoke, Smith and Vassar, besides scores of other institutions less well known. Pray give us all the help you can in working up this admirable plan. Will not the W. C. T. U. in any and every city, town and village, wherever there is such an institution as we have described, 'lend its influence' to the utmost to the organization of a Somerset Y?"

If any union is wondering what to "do next," our chieftain's suggestion awaits enlargement.

Yours in our good bonds,

HOW PLYMOUTH'S WHEEL WENT ROUND.

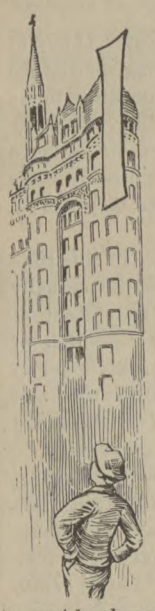
BY ADA M. MELVILLE.



IT was one of Chicago's most beautiful days. Above the tall buildings the sky was as blue as if the last gray cloud had been blown away by the March winds never to come back.

Down on one of the business streets a boy was standing on the curb. He was dressed like a boy who has no mother to look after wears and tears. His boots had not been "shined" for a long time. His pants were too short and his jacket "skimpy." His hat was shapeless, or of whatever shape his strong little fist knocked it into after the wind had chased it around the corners, or a hurrying passerby had knocked it off.

This particular morning he was standing on the curb gazing up at a great building on the opposite side of the street. As he stretched his neck to see to the very top of the building he stepped back and was caught gently by a lady.

"Trying to see the top of the Temple?" she said, kindly.

"Yes'm," answered the boy. And then looking up into her face he asked, "Would they let me in, do you think?"

"In where? Into the Temple?"

"Yes'm. I want to see it."

The lady looked at him curiously a minute, then said, "You shall! See—I wear a white ribbon and the people in the Temple let white ribbon folks go over it all they please. Will you go with me?"

The boy nodded eagerly and the two crossed the street.

"What is your name?"

"Plymouth—Plym, for short."

"Were you named for a rock—Plymouth Rock?"

"Yes'm. I'm a pilgrim, too, only it's Chicago instead of New England." This with a bright smile.

The lady laughed too, but had only time to say, "My name is Mrs. Day," for they were at the entrance of Willard Hall. Plymouth took off his hat and trod on tip toes, for the marble walls, the great paintings, the shining lights in the beautiful ceiling, made him feel as if he were in church. Mrs. Day told him many interesting things about the Hall, to which he listened attentively.

Leaving Willard Hall they entered the swinging doors and stood in the rotunda of the Temple. Plymouth whirled about slowly on his heels. He looked at the marble stairways with the great lamps beside each one; the tall marble pillars with Uncle Sam's letter-boxes into which letters were continually dropping through the "chutes" that went up through the whole building; the stone floor with its designs in Florentine mosaic; and the elevators, that like big cages were dropping down or flying up out of sight.

"Do you like it?" asked Mrs. Day.

"Sure! It's just as mother said."

"When did mother see it?"

"Just before she was sick. She's dead. She wore a white ribbon, too."

Mrs Day laid her hand on the rough little coat sleeve and stooping down kissed Plymouth before all the people who were coming and going. Then she took his hand and they went into one of the elevators and in a minute were on the eleventh floor.

"This is where the W. C. T. U. folks are," said Mrs. Day, "and where the W. T. P. A. keeps house. Do you know what the W. T. P. A. is?"

"Yes'm; mother took THE UNION SIGNAL and I had The Young Crusader until she died."

"Were you an L. T. L. boy, too?"

"Yes'm. I am now. At least I'll never 'buy, drink, sell or give alcoholic liquors while I live.'"

Mrs. Day's blue eyes smiled understandingly. They went into the W. T. P. A. office and Mrs. Day bought him some Crusaders and a bright L. T. L. pin. They visited Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner where he was enrolled as one of Aunt Jane's nephews. Then they called at the Temple Trustees' office where Mrs. Day had said mysteriously that they would "see the Wheels go round."

He listened with great interest as they showed him the Temple Wheels and told him how these Wheels were going out into thousands of homes; how the boys and girls as well as the older people were filling the Wheels with dimes and sending them back "to help buy the Temple for the white-ribboners and for the temperance cause."

The room in which Plymouth was standing was filled with young women all busy doing "Wheel work," some putting the new empty Wheels into envelopes, others addressing the envelopes; and still others counting the dimes that had come in. While they were there the postman came and put down a little pile of twenty envelopes, in each one of which was a filled Wheel. Plymouth was evidently thinking.

"I'd like to take one, and I'll try to fill it. I haven't done any work for temperance since mother died," he said.

"Whom will you ask for dimes?" said Mrs. Day.

"Oh, I know lots of boys—newsboys and messenger boys and other fellows. It won't cost anything to ask them, anyway," he said, brightly.

"No, Plymouth, only a little courage, and I think you will be as firm as the rock you are named for," said Mrs. Day. "And now I must go, and will give you my address and you give me yours. You may bring your Wheel to me when it is full. I want you to call on me. I want to talk with you. I have two little boys at home."

A week later, as Mrs. Day sat sewing alone on one of her own boy's jackets, who should call but Plymouth, looking very neat and trim. He held out a package saying, "There's five wheels, and I think I can fill more."

"Five! Well, you have been busy.

"Tell me how you did it. But first have some of Katie's nice gingerbread."

The gingerbread was good "like mother used to make," and it soon disappeared. Then Plymouth told his story, Mrs. Day questioning him now and then to help him along.

"No'm, I don't go to school. Father's been out of work for a long time, but now he has a job and works all day, and we have a little room where we sleep. We eat at a restaurant. I have earned quite a little one way and another to help father. But now he says I shall go to school when I get some better clothes. Father's prouder'n I am. Mother said if the boy was clean and whole God would look after the clothes. Father was glad I came to the Temple. I told him about Willard Hall and the meetings and he has gone in every day at noon since. He says we'll go to church, too, when I get some clothes. We used to always go to church. He gave me my first dime for my Wheel and I guess it brought me luck. No one has said 'no' yet, except one fellow who only had one dime and was saving it to buy a doll for his sister. Father took one to the shop. And the boss gave him his first dime and said—oh, wasn't father glad?—said a temperance man deserved to have his wages raised, so they will be next month. And, Mrs. Day—do you think you could take a Legion?"

"Take what?"

"A Legion—an L. T. L. I know lots of boys would join, only there's nowhere to join and no one to help. Won't you?"

Mrs. Day was a busy woman, but as she looked at the trusting brown eyes raised to hers, she stooped over, and hugging the lad up close, said:

"Surely, I will, when such a little rock stands out so bravely against the waves of sin, how can I help but do my part?"

Plymouth did not speak but looked very happy as his new friend repeated softly the words he had often heard his mother say, "And a little child shall lead them."

Tremble, King Alcohol,

NETTIE B. JORDAN.

Correct answers: C. Edwards Snell; Chas. Smith; Mildred Ireland; Ruth Allison.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—It is a long time since we have heard from our "Uncle Isaac," whom you know we admitted into our Cozy Corner because, although he is over seventy years of age, he has earned his admission by his interest in us. A letter has just come, in which he says:

I am practically a "shut-in" this winter. I seldom get out even to church. I find my three score and nearly fifteen years unfavorable for exposure to the cold; but I can still think, and my thoughts are often of the Temple and its earnest workers. How I should like to do much more for them.

For some time past my sympathies have been with Mrs. Matilda B. Carse in her herculean effort to clear the Temple of debt. I had thought of different plans, one of which seemed to me quite feasible, but while I was hesitating along came Cozy Cornerer Frankey Willard and rolled a Wheel containing twelve spokes at me. So here goes for a trial of the Wheel.

How to manage the Wheel to accomplish the most is the question. Well, there is a family of seven, father, mother and five children, living near us too poor to fill a Wheel, but they will gladly do what they are able to. My idea is to order three Wheels and fill one partly with the names Edith, Maud, Estelle, Frank and Baby, paying the money myself for them on condition that the two older girls will solicit and fill the two remaining Wheels and the third girl the unfinished Wheel. The parents will most likely pay a dime each and add their names.

If the above plan strikes you favorably it might be well to give the Cozy Cornerers a hint, and if a number should try it it may work like leaven and cheer the hearts of our anxious burden-bearers.

What do you say, Cozy Cornerers? This Wheel plan is especially nice, for it is an easy way for the children to help in paying for the Temple.

You will find two two-cent stamps, and I would like you to send me two Temple Wheels. My sister is seven years old, and wants to fill one. I am eleven years old, and live four and one-half miles from town and three-quarters of a mile from school. This is a prohibition state. I would like to open correspondence with some of the cousins.

Thus writes N. Cameron Beathune, of Hamilton, North Dakota. The Temple secretary, Miss Sara Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple, has sent Cameron's Wheels, and soon we hope to hear that they have rolled back loaded.

"I wonder if any of the Cozy Cornerers are going to order Temperance Temple Wheels?" asks Florence Wells, a Cozy Cornerer of Hamline, Minn. Then she adds: "When I grow up I will vote for prohibition, because, of course, women will be allowed to vote before I am of age."

Eddie Rawson, of West Toledo, O., says: "I have just sent for a Temple Wheel, which I expect to fill." He is a member of the Michigan L. T. L., and means to do all he can for temperance.

These are a few instances of Cozy Corner helpers. Let us hear from others.

Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

How the dimes will help! Why not send for a Wheel, Lena, and get others to follow your example?

I am a boy fourteen years old, and would like to join the Cozy Corner. I have four brothers, and one is named Willard, after our leader. We are going to fill a Temple Wheel. We would all gladly sign a petition prohibiting the use of the pictures of ladies and children on boxes of cigarettes. Mabel asked if any of the boys and girls have read "Grandfather's Chair," or "The Story of Columbus." I have read both of them, and liked them very much.

Will you let a little ten-year-old girl way off in South Dakota come in the Cozy Corner? I am a member of the L. T. L. I am going to see how many Temple Wheels I can fill this year. I have one filled now, and have sent for more. My little brother has filled one, too. My mamma could not live without THE UNION SIGNAL. I just got your picture last night in the Art Portfolio. We all were so glad to find it. I have a little sister named after Frances E. Willard. I like the Cozy Corner very much.

OUR TEMPLE NUMBER.

It is a long time since we have issued as attractive and interesting a paper as this one. Our Temple is not a new topic, but this number will testify that there are many new things to be said about it and many new people to write them. For seven years Mrs. Carse has had her own column of "Temple Items," and each year and each week they have grown more interesting and important, as the precious gifts came in, and the expressions of faith and hope multiplied.

We have gathered into this number many valuable data of our work not hitherto presented in so concise a form. Mrs. Stevenson, our National corresponding secretary, sings in heroic measure of the typical meaning of our beautiful Temple; Miss Willard narrates, as she only can, the evolution of the white ribbon movement; Mrs. Carse gives the history of the Temple enterprise, closing with an appeal that must soften many a heart and open many a purse string; Neal Dow, Joseph Cook, Mary A. Livermore, Dr. Harper and Professor Curtiss each contribute an article of sterling worth and wise suggestion; five of the Temple trustees tell in their own strong way why we need a National home and how to pay for it; a dozen noted divines speak their good will in a single terse sentence, and a group of well-known business men testify to the practicability of the enterprise, while Lady Henry Somerset's eloquent letter to Mr. Field and his reply show how the ball was started rolling. The numerous illustrations of the "evolutions" in our work will interest equally those who have and those who have not seen our National Headquarters, Temperance Hospital and Publishing House. Aside from the first four pages, into which we have condensed a large amount of Temple matter, the remainder of the paper is devoted, as usual, to the diversified interests of our local work. Mother Experience and the correspondence will be found on page 6 instead of pages 4 and 5.

We send this number out with hopeful anticipations of large returns, for Mrs. Carse intends using it as a sort of campaign document in soliciting donations from benevolent and great-hearted men and women. Let us all speed her on her mission.

A SERMON IN STONE.

The Temple is fitly called a "poem in stone." It may also be justly called a sermon in stone. As such it is impressively eloquent—as all sermons are which combine the poetic with the practical. For Truth itself, rightly understood, is one grand poem, and the sermon which is keyed to be exquisite harmonies of absolute truth naturally partakes of the form and attributes of poetry.

To the white-ribboner who believes that the Temple is the outgrowth of Divine leadings, and that it is fraught with meanings of which perhaps none of us, not even the founder herself, clear-visioned though she be, has yet grasped the full significance—to such a one this beautiful building, fitly framed together, preaches a sermon both wonderful and wise. We might point out its fitness in whole and in part to stand as the symbol of our many-sided work; first in its general combination of beauty, strength and utility; second, in its rounded corners suggestive of the attitude of the W.C. T. U. toward the world—that of Christian aggressiveness, "with malice toward none and charity for all"; third, in its heavenward pointing turrets, typical of the aspiration of the W. C. T. U., not only for itself but for the whole human race; and so on to the thirteenthly if we were minded to roam so far into the mystic realm of correspondences.

But as the Temple is "not only a fulfillment but a prophecy," it would be presumptuous for us at this time to attempt a translation into language of this sermon in stone. Its full interpretation time only may reveal. For the Temple, it must be remembered, stands for a cause, and all that it means in the "enlarging sphere of woman"; all that it means for humanity is to be read only in the unfoldment of the idea which lies back of it. The better we comprehend the beauty and nobility of the idea the more does the grandeur and far-reachingness of the Temple plan grow upon us.

The one feature of the Temple which stands out as distinctively W. C. T. U. in character is Willard Hall. The name comes as a benediction not only to numerous Chicago men and women, but also to many a stranger within her gates who has found peace within its walls.

Willard Hall, situated as it is in the heart of a great city throbbing with commercial activity, and too often, alas! with ignoble strife, is to the care-worn man, dropping in at noontide to breathe its restful atmosphere, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. Seeking its shelter depressed by the "cares of the world and the deceitfulness of riches," discouraged, perhaps by the revelation of "wickedness in high places," he returns to his office with soul refreshed and heart lightened, feeling confident once more that "God's in His heaven, all's well with the world."

Miss Willard thus beautifully expresses this thought: "It is consoling to me whenever I recall the fact, and that is more often than the sunrise, that we have once more a center of Christian prayer, song and testimony in the heart of the world's most progressive city, and that the earnest white-ribboners who conduct that meeting are women whom we can trust to 'keep a light in the window for thee' and to 'throw out the life-line' for the tempted and distressed."

As the gospel underlies all W. C. T. U. effort, so Willard Hall underlies the material structure which represents it. Its marble pillars fitly smybolize the gospel principles upon which Christian temperance work is founded and sustained, and its daily noon meetings, in charge of the Chicago Central W. C. T. U., indicate the source of the inspiration which elaborated the whole Temple scheme.

Willard Hall may be called the soul of the Temple, the innermost which receives the very breath of God—the place of the mercy seat. The rest of the building, like the more external faculties of that "living temple," the human organism, is devoted to business affairs, to the interests of the material world; but in Willard Hall, as in the deep recesses of his own being, man may withdraw from the busy, restless outer life, and come in touch with God. Here the spiritual predominates and the higher atmosphere of Willard Hall radiates an influence which makes the Temple unique among business buildings as the W. C. T. U. is unique among organizations.

The Mecca of white-ribboners! So is this center of gospel temperance appropriately called. Entering, we readily see why the Temple is "ours." First of all its name unites it now and forever, one and inseparably, with the W. C. T. U. Then all around in corridor and in auditorium are inscribed on its marble walls the names of W. C. T. U. builders; the familiar monogram is traced with more or less prominence on panel and ceiling; the sculptured busts of our chieftain and the Temple's founder confront us from the platform; while the Crusade Psalm, the Magna Charta of white-ribboners, inlaid with letters of gold, occupies the ivory panel behind the speaker's desk. Here, too, are kept the W. C. T. U. archives, and, as mementoes of our work and workers multiply in the coming years, Willard Hall is destined to become more and more a shrine to be held in sacred veneration by all loyal white-ribboners.

Not only this, but it is also the "Westminster Abbey of the temperance reform." Here in the enduring marble are the names of our honored dead; here name after name will be added to the roll to be called up yonder, as one by one our beloved leaders are called to a larger life, a more extended sphere, where perhaps—who knows?—their power to aid us here will be greater because they "go to the Father."

The supreme effort of W. C. T. U. women at this time should be directed toward making the Temple actually their own from foundation to turret—the fixed intention of the founder from the beginning. A few months of concentrated and consecrated energy upon the part of unions and of individuals would accomplish this and bring renown to the Temple as the climax of the many grand achievements of the nineteenth century woman.

And it is important that we not only concentrate external effort but that we bring our thought into line with this fulfillment as well. For "thoughts are things" and possess more power than most of us dream of to make or to mar the successful materialization of our ideals. Let us create such a strong wave of thought Temple-ward as shall forcibly strike at the consciousness and conscience of the "poor rich" and impel them to "help those women," and finally culminate in a tidal wave which shall engulf all opposition, all prejudice, and give to the National W. C. T. U. its own beautiful home in fee simple.

WHY SHOULD THE BENEVOLENT CONTRIBUTE?

We venture to ask from outside friends of the temperance cause, because the Woman's Temperance Temple has never proposed to make a farthing for any individual, hence it cannot as a business enterprise be placed in the common category of selfish financial interests. It has always been stated that after the building was paid for, the proceeds were to go for the work of the temperance reform through the local, state and National unions in proportion to the amount contributed by them. This is in a nutshell the understanding we have concerning the great enterprise in the midst of which we are, and we have always understood that even if we never owned the Temple entire we should realize an income to be used in our work on the basis just named from the amounts we had contributed, all of which have been officially acknowledged in THE UNION SIGNAL week by week from the beginning.

It is known to most of us that there has been a difference of opinion among our leaders as to the practicability of the plan, but the great majority of the white ribbon women have always heartily supported Mrs. Carse, and have coöperated in every practical way by resolutions passed in local, state and National conventions; by innumerable encouraging letters and articles; by the contribution of large and small sums of money, and by that common public sentiment, which is the surest indication of the opinion of a great society.

The calamitous financial condition of the country for the last two years crippled every enterprise, and the wonder is that our interests have not suffered more severely. That we have been able to keep our heads above water is owing to the blessing of God upon the loyalty of the bravest and most faithful army of women ever yet enlisted for the protection of their homes.

It is well understood that no legal responsibility for the Temple enterprise rests upon the National W. C. T. U. Mrs. Carse is its founder and its pillar of strength and hope. If she lives and succeeds, as we have faith to believe she will, the enterprise will come off victorious. She has still eight years in which to secure the needed amount, and if it should not all be gained within that period, we shall undoubtedly hold a controlling interest in the Temple, and meanwhile since 1892 we have been housed in the noblest business block in the world, and our gospel temperance meeting for the tempted has been resumed and carried forward uninterruptedly. Our great publishing house is in this Temple, and it is the central point of the temperance movement on the world. Let us then sustain Mrs. Carse by our prayers, our confidence, our sympathy. Much depends on the unbroken unity of faith and purpose by which she is upheld. The local unions have done magnificent work in furnishing already over $100,000.

The bulk of what remains to be paid must be secured from wealthy men and women through the efforts of Mrs. Carse and those associated with her, and doubtless will be.

The Temple is a light set upon a hill; only those unfriendly to our work will claim that the enterprise has been a misfortune. Its real success has already come. The local unions are not being drained for funds, and are none the poorer but much the richer for what they have wrought. The hopes of our Temple builder, that each state would realize a pro rata from the rentals, cannot, as a matter of course, be realized until the country shall recover from the financial distress that threatened to overwhelm us all, and if this should never come about we still maintain that what we have accomplished in providing a National headquarters for our many interests, and a beautiful and helpful center for our temperance work, amply justifies all the effort that has been put forth.

MODERN HEROISM AND MODERN COWARDICE.

There is no need to search the ancient classics or the history of feudal days for the most thrilling incidents of heroism, nor shall we find the greatest deeds of bravery only in the tumults of war. Not a week passes but we find in our modern newspapers accounts of deeds which excel any narrated in "The Lays of Ancient Rome." Daily it is proved that peace has greater tests of courage than has war.

It is less than two months since a long over-due and storm-tossed ship came into New York harbor, and the newspapers were full of accounts of Captain Cameron, who for seventy hours had stood at his post facing the terrible tempest, with hands and nose frostbitten, and his left eye so badly frozen that the probabilities were he would lose the sight of it. Last summer the world rang with the praises of the brave engineer who remained in his engine until he had taken his train through the dreadful forest fires of Wisconsin, though he was burned almost to death.

Nor are these exceptional cases; rare indeed is the railroad accident which does not produce a hero in the form of engineer or fireman who stands at his post at the risk of his own life to save the passengers and train. In almost every great fire, one or many firemen risk their lives to save others, in many cases die in unavailing efforts to rescue some other human being.

What is noteworthy in all this is that the bravery is incident to the profession itself. The sea captain accepts his position with the full understanding that he may at any time be called upon to save other lives at the expense of his own. It is the unwritten code of railway engineers "In case of disaster save everything else that you can before you think of saving yourself." The fireman responds to the fire alarm knowing well that it may summon him to death. These are not the only professions in which, in the last emergency, men are expected to sacrifice themselves for others, and which by that fact are proved to be based upon unselfish devotion to mankind. Indeed, it is rather the general rule.

But there is one point concerning which men are to-day all but universal cowards, and that by the tacit approval of public sentiment. It is on the subject of "making money." The "sensitiveness of capital" is a euphemism which would far better be called by its right name, "the cowardice of capital." Society condemns, with unsparing severity, the ship's crew that takes to the lifeboats and leaves the helpless passengers to their fate. It visits unmeasured scorn upon the railway engineer who saves his own life by deserting his engine when his presence might have mitigated the ruin of his train. It expects the fireman to save others even though "himself he cannot save." Yet that same society has nothing worse than doubtful censure for the man who in his regular business refuses to risk a dollar to save—it matters not how many or how dear human interests.

John Ruskin long ago diagnosed the case when he said that the world esteems the trades of the soldier, the lawyer, the physician and the clergyman above that of the merchant, because representatives of the first four professions are supposed to act in the last analysis from unselfish devotion to the state, the fifth from self-interest merely. We honor the soldier because "he holds his life at the service of the state." However unworthy may have been his previous history, or his motives in becoming a soldier, we know "that, put him in a fortress breach, with all the pleasures of the world behind him, and only death and his duty in front of him, he will keep his face to the front." So with the lawyer, "our chief respect for him depends on our belief that, set in a judge's seat, he will strive to judge justly, come of it what may." We understand that, however false individuals may be to their duty, it is yet the acknowledged duty of the lawyer, the underlying principle of his profession, "that in all important acts of his life justice is first with him, his own interest second." The case is similar with the physician and the clergyman. The merchant, on the contrary, however necessary his work may be, and undoubtedly is to the community, is assumed to engage in it merely from the desire of self-aggrandizement. Nor is he chiefly to blame if he act in accordance with this theory. As a rule, men will not live up to a higher code of honor than is expected of them, and political statutes and political economy alike are based upon the assumption that selfish "competition is the life of trade."

The actual introduction of these principles into commercial life would speedily solve our labor problem and clear-headed investigators into our labor troubles are in fact urging this very thing. Hon. Carrol D. Wright, the chairman of the government commission on the Pullman strike, has an article in a recent number of the Forum which bears upon this view. It is entitled, "Shall Men be allowed to Conduct Their Business to Suit Themselves?" In it he takes the ground that if men cannot so conduct their business as to avoid conflicts with their employés which disturb the whole business and financial interests of the country, society can and must interfere. He takes also the very significant position that it is neither just nor right that in times of financial calamity, capital should expect to preserve its accumulations intact while labor is forced to use up all of its savings. The recent decision of Judge Gaynor in the case of the Brooklyn street railways is in entire harmony with Mr. Wright's view and shows the growing sentiment that every business should be conducted for the benefit of society as a whole.

The truth is, general public opinion has done the merchant class the greatest possible wrong by expecting nothing from its members but selfishness by ascribing to them no nobility of motive. As a rule, men will be what they are expected to be. Consequently, it is the rare exception to find men, not merely strictly honest, but noble and self-sacrificing in business. They may be generous enough with their money after it is made, but they have little conception that in the making of it duty may require them to sustain loss for the sake of others. The Christian may recognize in actual deed that his money is held in trust, but he is too generally bound by the prevailing public sentiment and has no idea that he should hold himself equally the servant of his race in the process of acquiring his wealth. In case of business depression, the first thing the capitalist does is to cut down wages. He does not feel the obligation of sharing the loss by a reduction of his own profits except as a last resort and when laborers are living up all their hard earned savings, he steps forward with thousands of dollars for charity, but would consider it preposterous that any one should expect him, in the running of his business to touch his own sacred accumulations.

Society does not expect him, like the steamship captain, to face the financial storm with frost bitten hands and feet until the ship and its precious cargo are safe in harbor. No esprit de corps among his class lifts him to the high position of the locomotive engineer and bids him "save everything else that he can before he thinks of saving himself." And yet, had the great capitalists acted upon this principle, much of the present financial distress would have been averted. The disastrous strikes which have so intensified the evils would never have occurred and confidence would be more easily restored.

When a machine is made to run by electricity, attempts to apply steam power are likely to prove disastrous. By the hardest lessons mankind are learning that this world was not constructed with a view to making selfishness its motive power. We have counted a "hard saying" the words of the Master: "Whosoever would become great among you shall be your minister; and whosoever would be first among you shall be servant of all," but until we make it the basis of our civilization and bring all of our institutions into harmony with it, we shall obtain only partial and temporary relief from our increasing social troubles.

The first Sabbath in April, the 7th this year, is one of our National Red Letter days, to be observed by all unions. By formal action of the National executive, we have united with the American Sabbath Union to observe the entire week following the first Sabbath for special prayer and work, such as distributing leaflets for the observance of the day. Mrs. J. C. Bateham, Williamsburg, Ky., has a large supply of leaflets, most of which sell at the low price of fifteen cents a hundred. The encroachments upon Sabbath observance are growing every year, hence ministers are requested to preach upon the dangers of relinquishing restraint in this regard, either upon April 7 or 14, as suits their convenience. The following topics for prayer are suggested:

1. That Christians may love and reverence the sacred day in the home and in business, and forego the Sunday newspaper, Sunday train and Sunday post-office.

2. That God will crown with success the vigorous efforts now being made in Pennsylvania to save and strengthen the state Sabbath laws, in New York to secure the Sunday closing of saloons, in California to secure a Sabbath law, and that He will bless the work and workers everywhere.

3. That Sabbath rest may not be withheld from the toilers, and that they may see the true value of the day.

4. That legislators may guard the fence of civil law for the Sabbath, and the way be opened for a national Sunday rest law.

The highest duties oft are found
Living on the lowest ground,
In hidden and unnoticed ways,
In household works, on common days;
Whate'er is done for God alone,
Thy God acceptable will own.

Another of the genuine nobility is the Dowager Countess of Airlie, whose residence, "The Bonnie Hoose o' Airlie," is famed in Scottish ballad. She has practical total abstinence principles of such intensity that a public house is not tolerated on her estate. As each license expired under her reign its renewal was forbidden, and now peace, plenty and sobriety are the prevailing rules over her broad domains. The Earl of Airlie, although trained to military honors, sets his disapproval upon the wanton sport of game-shooting, in which he never indulges.

A certain church was holding revival meetings the other week, and the women who were most zealous in the work all wore the white ribbon. Among the converts was an intelligent but unlearned woman, who, after a hard struggle, gave up all for Christ. The next evening she came to the meeting wearing a white ribbon. "Does that mean that you belong to the W. C. T. U.?" was asked her. "I don't know what the W. C. T. U. is," she replied, "but so many of you Christians wear a white ribbon I thought it must mean 'we are for Christ.' I just put it on to be like you." How beautiful it would be if the white ribbon seemed to mean to all the lost and sin-sick ones to whom we go that "we are for Christ."

One of the attractions (!) at a bazaar held not long ago in connection with a certain church in Edinburgh, according to the Christian Commonwealth, was a smoking competition, the competitors being "ladies!" It is stated that three "ladies" competed, and that the palm was awarded to the "lady" who smoked two and a half cigarettes in a quarter of an hour.

Compromise with evil always brings disaster; it has builded the tombs and written the epitaphs of the nations, and will while truth is truth. Well may this republic pause amid her starving and unemployed millions, and ask for diviner reasons than administrations, tariffs and silver bills for her confused councils, financial panics and industrial disaster. Back of them all God reigns, and when mischief is framed into statutes and thrones of iniquity built by law, but one of two results can follow: "Repentance unto righteousness," or "Wrath unto retribution."—Mary T. Lathrap.

The latest and most amusing instance of "class legislation" has been perpetrated in the Illinois assembly. This is a proposal to tax old bachelors twenty-five dollars a year for the support of a spinsters' home! Had you not better wait, brother legislators, till the "girls" petition for such a retreat.

Dr. Parkhurst's new book entitled, "Our Fight with Tammany," is having an immense sale. It is a plain narrative of events by a man who had no sect to serve, no party to help, no personal ambition to gratify; who did simply what every good citizen who loves his city and has a normal horror of unfathomable rottenness ought to do. He pays a tribute to the power of the pulpit, which every clergyman in America should read. It is pretty plain talk—Dr. Parkhurst is always a plain speaker—but I quote a paragraph:

"I uttered only thirty minutes of indictment against the blood-sucking scoundrels that are drawing the veins of our body municipal, and they were all set wiggling like a lot of muck-worms in a hot shovel. I am not such a fool as to suppose that it was the man that said it that did the work; not that it was what was said that did the work, for it had been said a hundred times before with more thoroughness and detail. It was the pulpit that did the work. Journalistic roasting these vagabonds will enjoy and grow cool over. But when it is clear that the man who speaks it is speaking it, not for the purpose of putting money into his pocket or power into his power, but is speaking it because it is true, and, in speaking it, appreciates its oracular authority as one commissioned of God to speak it, there is a suggestion of the judgment day about it, there is a presentiment of the invisible God back of it that knots the stringy conscience of these fellows into contortions of terror."

On Duty.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

NEBRASKA.

"HOPE SPRINGS ETERNAL."

As the bright spring days begin to appear, the people of Nebraska take courage and face the coming year with hopeful hearts.

Everything depends upon a crop this year, but the hope for a crop is strengthened since the fine rain of recent days, which was quite general throughout the state. But with a crop assured, there are yet months in which help will be needed, food especially being now most generally asked for. An especial need will be grain for the horses who must do the spring work of plowing and planting. Many of these have wintered upon hay—some have had only the dry grass of the prairie range, and are in no condition for work without strengthening food.

One of the blessings of this dark year has been the strengthening of "the tie that binds" all hearts in a common brotherhood. The kindness of those in other states who have so generously sent relief to the needy has been fully appreciated. So efficient has been the work of the W. C. T. U. in the suffering districts that it has won for itself a warm place in many hearts not especially friendly before. In places the union has been requested to attend to the distribution of supplies because of its reliability.

Our state president, Mrs. Walker, has made several trips to the suffering districts. While in Dundy county she wrote: "It seems delightful to be in a place where the people do not have to ask, 'What is the W. C. T. U. doing anyway?' but are daily realizing some of its work for humanity. Our relief superintendents have done a wonderful work in looking out needy cases that would sooner suffer than ask for charity. Our help has been done in such a quiet, kindly manner, it has saved much embarrassment to the sensitive ones. Our work is so acceptable—I meet such intelligent, capable workers—if there is any thing like a crop this year we shall have increased membership and dues from these districts." In the midst of these discouraging circumstances fifty members were added during her visit to the eleventh district, an L. T. L. organized and additions made to the Y's. All dues except to the National are remitted to the unions in these districts this year, so we hope to at least hold our membership until better days.

Mrs. Walker's visit was a great blessing to the unions and an encouragement in their time of trial. One sister writes "her visit was like a ray of sunshine."

While speaking of the relief work I want to give some hints from recent letters to guide those who desire to send aid. Food is now most generally needed—and such things as vegetables and dried or canned fruit would be most acceptable as the diet has had to be principally bread and meat. As hens and cows have not had adequate feed, farmer's wives have had little income to buy necessities. Thread, pins, needles, buttons, darning yarn, etc., will be very acceptable. Soap is often needed and no money to buy. A call is also made for any good literature. Bands of Mercy and Humane societies are asked to remember the poor cattle and horses.

The Diller union, in sending out 2,350 pounds of flour, sent one package of yeast for every fifty pounds of flour. Pawnee city union sent thread and buttons with a large quantity of cotton flannel. One man in this place recommended the W. C. T. U. as the best channel through which to send aid, as women know better than men what a family needs.

The work of the unions is being carried on as well as possible under existing circumstances. Omaha union, ever active, is about setting up in the city fifteen automatic "penny in the slot" fountains, at a cost of one thousand dollars. Their railroad eating house is now in running order, and a regular noonday prayer service is held at the railroad shops.

The Lincoln union is at work with renewed energy. The ladies have a candy stand and automatic fountain in the capitol building for the refreshment of the legislators while they keep a watchful eye upon their proceedings in the legislative hall.

Mrs. Nellie Richardson, state superintendent of legislation and petitions, is ever alert. At present a bill is pending which requires any one prosecuting a saloon-keeper under the Slocum law to give bonds for three hundred dollars before suit can be begun. Other attempts to destroy the restrictive features of that law have been made, also to permit the establishment of saloons in the suburbs of cities, which in the case of Lincoln are all educational points.

The Sunday law has been threatened, and the bill for raising the age of protection is still pending. None of the threatened evils are an assured fact, and we rejoice in the passage of a bill prohibiting the sale of cigarettes.

It was thought best to make no attempt to get a suffrage bill before the legislature this year. Suffrage sentiment, however, is alive and growing. The state equal suffrage convention was entertained by the W. C. T. U. of Beatrice, having for its speakers Miss Susan B. Anthony and Clara B. Colby, editor of the Woman's Tribune.

Diller union held a very interesting suffrage meeting in February, at which the equality of man and woman from a Bible standpoint was presented by Mrs. Eick, also their inequality before the law, by Mrs. Miller. Reasons for equal suffrage were given by the president, Mrs. Jeffreys, and the work of the W. C. T. U. for suffrage was presented by Mrs. Bixby. Mrs. Johnson exhorted to "give the women a chance," and several select recitations were rendered. The song, "When the women all shall vote in Nebraska" was sung by a quartette of ladies. The county president, Mrs. C. E. Welton, of Fairbury, was present and gave valuable assistance.

The second district held its ninth annual convention at Nehawka. The fine address of the president, Mrs. S. K. Daily, was ordered printed in the New Republic and State Journal. A Demorest gold medal contest was given with six contestants, Master Ray Ryan, of Havelock, winning the medal. Each of the other members of the class was presented with a handsome bound volume. Reports showed twenty unions in the district. Mrs. Wakelin, former president of the state was present, and spoke very acceptably. Mrs. Woodward conducted a parliamentary drill and on one evening delivered her eloquent address on suffrage. Twenty departments of work are organized in this district and the plan of work calls for special effort in the line of franchise and social purity and the election of qualified women on school boards. A strong resolution in support of the Temple and Mrs. Carse was passed. and a Temple Baby Band was formed with twenty-five names enrolled on the spot. The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. S. K. Daily; corresponding secretary, Mrs. D. S. Evans; recording secretary, Mrs. Persis F. Bently; treasurer, Mrs. E. M. Exley.

The Pawnee county convention was entertained by the Summit union, a country union organized last July. They were ably assisted by the ladies of Violet. The president, Mrs. Nesbett, gave an address the first evening, and the L. T. L. held a medal contest the second evening. Although none of the contestants nor those who arranged it had ever attended a contest, everything went well, and the only boy in the class, Emmett McCreary, won the medal. This union held a relief meeting in the church at Violet, charging a small admission, receiving donations of food and clothing, and presented the World's Petition, for signers. Mrs. Hattie M. Wolfe is president, and they are showing what a country union may do.

Fremont union has held two series of helpful meetings, the first conducted by Mr. Lem J. Smith and the second by Mrs. Woodward. The latter meetings were given under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. and the W. C. T. U. Upon both occasions great pleasure was given by the unique and delightful singing of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Beveridge, who are well known throughout the United States, and whose home is in Fremont.

ITEMS.

Mrs. S. C. O. Upton, president of Lincoln union, has been compelled to resign on account of ill-health, greatly to the regret of the union.

Mrs. Allen, of Valparaiso, takes THE UNION SIGNAL, the Union Worker and the Minutes and reads them all. That is the kind of timber of which to make officers.

Liberty union has gained thirteen members since state convention, has six departments and is in "splendid working order."

Our Y superintendent, Miss Anna Goudy, has just returned from a trip to Mississippi.

Executive meeting will be held in Hastings, April 24.

The plan adopted by the state for the success of the Union Worker, works well. The paper has now a bona fide subscription list of three thousand five hundred.

Miss Berenice Kerney, state L. T. L. superintendent, has returned from a trip through the Black Hills and Montana.

Additional names to whom relief may be sent for distribution are, Mrs. Nellie Owens, Bloomington, Mrs. Truman, Red Cloud, care The Nation; Mrs. Amanda Lafferty, Alma, Mrs. Ida Kellogg, Indianola.

Mrs. Pugh, state superintendent of parlor meetings, has gotten out two helpful leaflets relating to her work.

Our president is urging organization and has started a fund for this work. May we be able to gain the five hundred members asked for.

COLORADO.

LATHRAP MEMORIALS.

Glancing backward over the month just closed, tender thoughts cluster around the third day—appointed by our National president as memorial day for Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap.

Leonard union of this city met in Christ M. E. church (from which pulpit Mrs. Lathrap preached at the time of the National Convention here) and many loving tributes were offered, a sketch of the life, now silent, was read, and all present must have felt an intense desire to emulate the strong Christian character which was tenderly pictured, and whose influence will continue to be felt as the years roll by.

At Grand Junction, Mesa county, a similar service was held, when Mrs. M. J. Telford gave a personal remembrance of Mrs. Lathrap, and their associated work. So vividly did she picture the "life beautiful" that for the moment, the real speaker seemed forgotten; and the words seemed those of the departed. These services have a significance beyond the mere form of a memorial; and methinks, we who remain should bestir ourselves to renewed activity, and more entire consecration, that at last it may be said of each wearer of the white ribbon—"She hath done what she could." Going forth to the work—under the benediction of all those who have so nobly labored and died—truly our aim must be pure and holy.

ARAPAHOE COUNTY.

At a meeting of Arapahoe county executive it was decided that the different unions should assist in sustaining a gospel purity meeting which is held every Thursday evening in a part of the city adjacent to the neighborhood where sin abounds openly and undisguised. At the same meeting the social purity committee reported courteous attention from the chief of police and his officers in recent visits of investigation concerning "living pictures." Said visits revealed modification, and in one instance suppression of questionable theatricals; hence, with these hopeful indications the work will continue until finally extermination shall reward that eternal vigilance which is the price of liberty.

Some time ago I noticed a request in THE UNION SIGNAL that inquiry should be made concerning the sale of liquor at the state capitols.

The Central union in this city, with an almost limitless department work, which, at this writing, I have neither knowledge nor time to touch upon in detail, have one branch of which I desire to make special mention: The Woman's Exchange, which is so ably managed and where such homelike meals are served that they were requested, by the proper authorities, to open a café at the capitol; this, too, in view of the fact that another party was willing to pay for the same privilege providing a bar was admitted. Upon careful inquiry I fail to find that any sale of liquor is permitted in our beautiful state house; while the café, being under the management of our largest union is surely a very strong evidence of popular sentiment in behalf of temperance.

Leonard union conducted a very interesting medal contest on February 14, also celebrated its third anniversary the 25th, when a delightful social was held at the home of one of its members. The Highlands and Colfax unions' socials tend to promote both companionable and financial relations. So in the use of varied means the work is increasing, while the workers gather fresh courage to extend their efforts into the boundless possibilities of the future.

Yesterday I was present at a meeting of the state board of pardons, and while listening to the plea why commutation or pardon should be granted to those applying for the same, this one fact impressed me very deeply—drink was the primary cause of nearly every fall; and it was, I think, universally admitted that temporary insanity will most certainly follow the excessive use of intoxicants. I would that from this day until that glad time when prohibition shall become an enforced law Paul's words to the Colossians (Chapter 2:21) might ring from every mountain, valley and plain throughout the land—"Touch not, taste not, handle not."

PITKIN COUNTY.

From Aspen comes a very cheering report of work done by the local union in ridding the town of a dance hall, also in the rescue of two erring women. May the time speedily come when in no corner of our fair state or land shall these evils exist, because loyal unions shall everywhere abound.

MONTROSE COUNTY.

The union at Brown reports somewhat interrupted work owing to scattered membership, yet hopefully anticipates the return of spring with its fine weather, which will materially aid in the matter of attendance. During these cold months literature has been distributed, words spoken in public (at every possible time), while a Saturday night "literary" has been sustained with appropriate recitations and song by the young people. Added to these timely doings comes the earnest desire that all may be enabled to "vote as they pray," which surely indicates efficient and earnest membership.

LOGAN COUNTY.

Sterling, with a union numbering fourteen, have carried to a successful issue the opening of a free reading-room, which promises to be very beneficial to the town. It is at present supported by voluntary pledges from business men and others, who undoubtedly realize that such a room may prove a safe retreat from the deceitful charms of the ever-present saloon.

Canon City union has been active in circulating petitions. One against saloon license in that beautiful nest among the mountains, another against the manufacture or sale of liquor throughout the state, while the third was the one so dear to us all—the Polyglot Petition. Several departments are receiving careful attention, mothers, miners and medal contest work. A very successful medal contest was held February 21, it being the fifth since January, 1894.

The ministers are coöperating with the W. C. T. U. in sustaining a gospel temperance service once in three months. At this meeting suitable literature is scattered to extend prohibition sentiment ere the spring elections take place.

In some of the mountain towns the scarcity of money produces unavoidable delay in the payment of dues, especially where scrip payments are given, negotiable at the stores in lieu of money.

Let us all take courage and press forward, as we are following no uncertain call.

ETCHINGS.

When the snow covered all promise of a resurrection, to me, from one of sixth district's county presidents, Mrs. Bowerman, came this text, tied with flowers and a white ribbon, "The Lord thy God in the midst of thee is mighty; He will save; He will rejoice over thee with joy; He will rest in His love, He will joy over thee with singing." In the letter accompanying, was this grand tribute to our fallen leader: "She has been called the Daniel Webster of the rostrum; to my mind she was the John the Baptist of the W. C. T. U., woman's suffrage and Prohibition party of the state of Michigan, in her brave condemnation of evils of every kind and the "preparing the way" for future success.

Our district convention is to be held at Howell. Mrs. Shepherd, our wise president, says, "Make careful record of work done in all departments and send full delegations. Let us further enlarge our borders and strengthen our stakes until we, His commissioned servants, make our gospel felt."

At Flint memorial services for Mrs. Lathrap, were held by both unions—each in a Methodist church. Hon. Wm. Newton told of her work in the Red Ribbon movement at the North Side service. Mrs. Carrie Faxon, president of the tenth district, spoke for Flint Central upon her W. C. T. U. work.

At Flint, North Side, we had a suffrage tea recently, a unique affair, teaching by colors, flowers and sentiment. As favors we had yellow cards tied with white ribbon bow, on which were pasted telling sentiments of noted suffragists.

The one I drew had this: "The woman who stays in the house week after week becomes after a time, a captive in spirit as well as in body. She narrows in thought and weakens in mind. All work and no play is as bad for Jack's wife as it is for Jack himself." Our superintendent of lumberman's work always has a list of addresses of camps to which to send literature, and one missionary when last heard from was holding four services on Sunday.

The letter of instruction in regard to annual meeting from our state president, Mrs. Benjamin, would be helpful if obeyed by every union in the nation. "There is one thing we can do: Be on time. Let us resolve to make our reports as nearly perfect as possible and certainly on time. Let us all at least go on toward perfection, and in all things remember the Golden Rule. That alone would save us from procrastination, and all inefficiency to say nothing of failure."

Our corresponding secretary speaks of the tablet to our fallen leader—already a certainty. Lapeer in seventh district, donates twenty-five dollars. Also that in the near future we, as state union, shall compile and publish sketches and poems from the gifted pen silent.

Mrs. Kinney, on legislation and petitions, is now at the capital interested in a bill for police matrons and raising age of consent. We are also circulating petitions for the prohibition of the liquor traffic within five miles of the State University and State Normal.

Professor Pattengill has had a bill introduced to prohibit the state or any district in the state from employing any teacher who uses tobacco in any of its forms. Our secretary adds, "We protest against classics through tobacco smoke." Mr. C. C. Lathrap has stood manfully in his place at the state prohibition convention at Lansing—surely a time of painful memories. May God comfort him day by day!

First District—The Christian Endeavorers and the civic federation in Detroit will cooperate in watching the saloons to discover violations of the liquor law. State organizer, Mrs. Law, has addressed five meetings in Detroit full of unanswerable arguments and wise practical suggestion. The subject of one masterly lecture was "Rebuilding the Nation's Walls."

Mrs. Andrews, district president, writes that they are planning for a big temperance revival. Twenty-five churches have been secured in which to hold meetings and the best ministerial talent is promised for the work.

Mrs. Belle Rowley, at Denton, reported National Convention; two other unions joined. A way was opened for organizing an L. T. L., and friends were gained to the cause.

Second district—Mrs. Law, as organizer, visited Monroe county. Result, seventy-four new members. Lambertville union is working on charity lines and recently held a successful L. T. L. meeting. London recently held a silver medal contest.

One new union, Rea, is organized. Mrs. Stannard writes that district is doing well and the convention will be held in May with a varied program. This president believes in connectional lines—an all important part of her baggage when she goes out in the work, is five copies state minutes. The result of intelligent seed-sowing comes back in a heavy reward often.

Third district, whose honored president is Mrs. Irene Ceizbe, are doing aggressive temperance work upon Sabbath observance lines; also mothers' meetings are most effective. Tekonsha union is about to open a reading room. Battle Creek unions are making preparations for the state convention.

A reception was recently held by the Bay View Reading Club, Woman's Club and Chautauqua Circle W. C. T. U. It was a delightful affair. About three hundred were present and the white ribbon held its own. The Jackson union had a medal contest, collection twenty-five dollars.

Fifth district held their convention in Iowa last of April. Each union at the first April meeting is called to special prayer for the success of this their twenty-first annual meeting.

Seventh district—The W. C. T. U's of Port Huron have presented Rev. Horton with three pulpit chairs, in appreciation of the free use of the church. The fourth ward union has sent two boxes of clothing to South Dakota.

The New Haven union have earned the name of "Inasmuch" by their labors of love towards two aged saints. They also have had lectures; circulation of Polyglot Petition and an increase of membership. Then a restful sleighride and a good dinner at a country home. A Temple tea was held at Lapeer, and Mrs. C. H. Johnson gave report of National and four new members were gained. This union has been burned out, bought, furnished, occupied and paid for a one thousand dollar brick building in less than two years—and to-day owe only two hundred on it. Who dare say in the light of one such record—and there are many— we women shall fail of the goal of ultimate prohibition for the world.

Eighth district—A new union is formed at Lake View. Laingsburg has had two weeks' gospel temperance meetings; 175 signed the pledge. Citizens have fitted up a reading room, where boys and men who formerly visited saloons may find a refuge.

Ninth district—At Shelby five new members were added as a result of memorial service; a gospel temperance revival is now under way in conjunction with Good Templars. Manton union has held an elocutionary contest. Their superintendent of flower mission sends to the city for rare flowers for the sick, paying for them herself.

Big Prairie union has an L. T. L. making a scrapbook for the inmates of their poorhouse. Carse union sent Petition to ten churches at Muskegon, securing 237 names. Lake City mourn an efficient worker; report 94 public meetings; have held several medal contests. Stetson had a purity sermon. Hart is busy sending literature.

The sudden death of Mrs. Maria Phelps is an illustration of God's care for His own. Her last letter, written on Friday, had words of Christian counsel to a young friend. Her best loved paper in a rack full of them was THE UNION SIGNAL. The white ribbon above the still heart had ever been above the beating one, and to the last her fine mind, clear, convincing and forcible, was seen both in the written word and the spoken one. Bay City holds monthly evening parlor meetings. Onekama gave a supper for Evelyn Industrial Institute. Bear Lake held another silver medal contest. This union sends THE UNION SIGNAL to three pastors.

Tenth district—Mrs. Faxon has been busy lately in her district; two new unions were organized within the month. She spoke at several places, holding memorial services at others. West Branch has been circulating literature, have printed the tobacco law and distributed among merchants.

Eleventh District.—Mrs. Parmenter has zeal, knowledge and grit. She, with two others rode six miles, the thermometer at zero, but they organized a union at Bismarck. The district president is away with a sick son at the South. They are favored in this district with a clergyman, Rev. Thompson, a brilliant orator, who believes in us and has a lecture, "Why I Believe in the W. C. T. U."

Allen W. C. T. U. has employed the state organizer, Mrs. Law, who gave a lecture, subject, "Who is to Blame?" Enrollment cards secured eleven names. This union also held a parlor meeting at which the superintendent of narcotics was present. She distributed questions; the answers brought out discussion. A tea followed and the meeting was indeed a success social, financial and educational. The above union is in second district.

At our state Prohibition convention the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That in the death of Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, the Prohibitionists of the nation and the forces of righteousness everywhere, have lost a wise worker and master builder, and we record our grateful appreciation of her work and her devotion to God's cause, and tender to Dr. C. C. Lathrap a hearty expression of condolence.

GEORGIA.

PETITION WORK.

For the last few weeks the circulation of a petition has engaged some of the time and energies of Georgia's white-ribboners. The petition was addressed to the Board of Directors of the Cotton States and International Exposition, and read thus: "In view of the great evils that always attend the sale and use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, we, the undersigned, respectfully petition your honorable body not to permit the sale of any kind of intoxicating drinks upon the grounds of the Cotton States and International Exposition." This petition had its origin with the Atlanta unions, and a copy of it was sent to each one of the unions of the state with request that it be circulated and returned as soon as possible. Our busy women responded nobly to this new call upon their time. From all over the state came back the petitions with many signatures. Some had two hundred names, and several of the senders wrote, "We will get more names if there is time." In all, sixteen hundred names were obtained which might have been multiplied by ten had we not felt the necessity of presenting the petition before definite action had been taken by the Board with regard to the sale of liquors on the ground.

Thursday, March 7, was the time for the regular monthly meeting of the Board of Directors; it was also the day of the regular conference meeting of the three unions of Atlanta. Accordingly, the latter meeting adjourned promptly, and four of its members proceeded, through a pouring rain, to where meeting number one was in session, a few blocks away. The Board of Directors was notified that a committee from the Woman's Christian Temperance Union desired an audience. That august body kindly suspended its rules, and within ten minutes the ladies were admitted. They stated their object briefly and withdrew. The Constitution the next morning gave an excellent account of this visit of our women, calling attention to it with conspicuous head lines. Indeed, it was the only thing mentioned concerning the work of the Board. The report spoke very kindly of the short speeches of the women.

We shall now wait with much interest the fate of the Petition. If we have accomplished nothing else, we have reminded the public of the existence of the W. C. T. U. which is a standing protest to the legalized liquor traffic. We have also forced these men to choose whether they will in this thing at this time, serve God or mammon. We have, too, had some experience and learned some things, as circulators of petitions are sure to do. One of our ladies who is well acquainted with the merchants of Atlanta, took a petition, feeling confident that she could fill it with the names of this influential body of citizens. She reported that to her utter surprise and great disappointment she could scarcely get a signature from this class of people. One shoe man, who had been a prohibition leader in the previous prohibition struggles of Atlanta, said: "I wouldn't sign that for anything. My work for temperance heretofore lost me entirely the trade of Mr. P. (a liquor-dealer), and I have had to almost give him his shoes to win him back again." Alas, alas, for the "cowardice of capital!" Yet most of the very men who will not sacrifice a dollar for their principles, for the good of the community, for the safety of their own boys, would, should a foreign foe attack us, be ready to take up arms and lay down their lives in defence of home and country. Oh, for a revival of patriotism in times of peace! For a courage that dares to live for one's country as well as to die for it!

The Southern Chautauqua Journal, organ of the Southern Chautauquas, offered our Georgia W. C. T. U. space in its pages at the rate of one dollar per column per month. The Demorest union promptly subscribed one dollar for the first month and a subscription of another dollar holds the necessary space until the state convention when it is expected that the state union will make arrangements for a permanent place in the columns of this Journal. Mrs. H. E. Smith, of Demorest, is editor of the W. C. T. U. column.

News in a Nutshell.

ORTING, WASH., W. C. T. U., has had a very successful medal contest.

THERE is a W. C. T. U. in Mahaska county, Iowa, composed entirely of white women, which has a colored woman for its president. She is a deeply consecrated, intelligent woman, and the work of the little union, under her leadership, is going steadily on.

MRS. O. C. DUNN, of Franklin, Ind., very handsomely entertained the "Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of the Presbyterian Church," of which Miss Alice Palmer is a member, in honor of the return home of our sixth round-the-world missionary. There were nearly a hundred ladies present, to whom Miss Palmer spoke, telling them of the W. C. T. U., the leading woman's society in South Africa.

Mrs. Elizabeth G. Hibben, former National superintendent of the department of unfermented wine, writes that Miss Mary Moore, of Attica, N. Y., is the newly elected National superintendent of that department, and asks workers to address all communications to her. Mrs. Hibben was obliged to decline reëlection because her time was so fully occupied in other lines of temperance and Christian work.

Under the title of "Ladies' Oratorical Contest" the Michigan W. C. T. U. has devised a bright plan for awakening interest in temperance work among the young ladies in colleges. The young women of each educational institution in the state are requested to select seven of their number who shall prepare original papers and hold local contests subject to certain conditions. The successful local contestant will then participate in an intercollegiate contest to be held at the annual state W. C. T. U. convention. A prize of twenty-five dollars will be given by the state organization for the best original production, judgment being based upon manner, style and delivery. The work is in charge of Mrs. Mary B. Dickie, state superintendent, Albion, Mich., who has issued circulars with the rules for the contests and a list of sixteen subjects for the orations. This is a specially adaptable work for Somerset Y's in every state.

The W. C. T. U. boundaries have been enlarged recently in Bloomington, by the addition of sixty-two members, for which Major George A. Hilton, the evangelist, is thanked. He was called there to hold union revival services, by the Presbyterian and Congregational churches, from which good results followed. The ladies of the W. C. T. U. perceiving that Major Hilton had not studied God's word in vain, arranged for him to hold a woman's meeting in the afternoon in the Presbyterian church, and also to give a lecture on "Delusions" in the evening at the same place. The large church was nearly full in the afternoon. At Major Hilton's suggestion, convenient enrolling cards were circulated through the audience after his address, and in a few minutes the W. C. T. U. membership "grew and grew." In the evening, the church was packed by representative people who were delighted with a most excellent lecture. They heard about some of the "strong delusions" that afflict our nation to-day. Major Hilton is to be in Illinois again this spring, and probably could fill a few engagements. "I am told that he added several thousand names to the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U., the year it took the banner. Why not have that banner in Illinois this year?" writes Mrs. G. H. Read. Major Hilton's postoffice address is Asbury Park, N. J.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

THE NATIONAL OUTLOOK.

The date for the Baltimore Convention has been pushed ahead one week, and will begin October 18. The cause of this is purely local, since our Baltimore sisters could not arrange to secure the hall for the last week in October, or the first in November, and, on account of the trip to India, it was felt that the meeting could not be held later than the first week in November. This early date will necessitate active, energetic work on the part of county, district and state officers, in arranging for their conventions.

We have placed the date at which the five hundred new members may be reported for September 20, instead of August 15. It cannot possibly be later than that, and allow time for arranging for the program and fixing Miss Willard's dates. Please do not forget that the two states securing the largest number in excess of the five hundred are to have our chieftain at their state conventions, free of expense, and that the states securing five hundred are to have a benefit night at the National Convention. Already most encouraging reports are coming in, both from state officers and National organizers. We have aimed at not less than a grand round-up of two hundred and fifty thousand, in this our majority year.

The first Sabbath in April has been set aside as one of the red-letter days of the National, to be observed, so far as possible, by all the unions, in the interests of Sabbath observance. Mrs. Bateham, the efficient superintendent of this department, is ready to lend her help in practical suggestion, or will send literature for distribution, at very reasonable rates. It is requested that all pastors will, if possible, preach on this subject, on either the 7th or the 14th of the month. Local unions will do well to bring this matter to the attention of their pastors.

Before this reaches your eyes we are hoping to have the phonograph in working order at National Headquarters. The proceeds from it are to be devoted to the Lathrap fund for the work among colored people, not, as previously stated, to the Woodbridge free literature fund. Other plans are in process of evolution for the literature fund. We hope to make it possible for visitors at Headquarters to hear the words of all our great leaders including the words spoken by Madam Willard, herself, previous to her departure for the other life. We are especially glad to link this gift of Miss Willard's with the fund for the work among colored people, since no one more than she feels the importance of this work. Mrs. Thurman, the National superintendent for this department, is doing grand things in Chicago. She has already organized two unions; one on the South side of about 130 members and one on the West side of about forty-seven. She is working day and night, meeting often not less than three engagements, and, in one instance, five in one day. The local unions of the city are backing her most energetically, and we are hoping to come up to Baltimore with a magnificent addition to the Chicago membership, through the colored unions of the city.

Texas is rejoicing over the successful legislative work of the past year, whereby the age of consent was raised to fifteen. Mrs. Stoddard, the efficient president, was the central power in this work. Her address before the senate judiciary committee was published in most of the daily papers throughout the state. Its arguments were pronounced unanswerable, and the subject was said to have been "delicately though strongly handled." She received the congratulations of the senators again and again. They have also strong hopes of passing a bill forbidding the selling of tobacco to minors.

I could fill The Union Signal, instead of this fraction of a column, with the words of cheer which came to me all along the line. The work seems to be on the advance everywhere. To God be all the glory.

Treasurer's Corner.

ORGANIZING IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

At Denmark I formed a union with twelve members, with Mrs. Faust as president, Mrs. Georgie Center, secretary, and Mrs. Rice, treasurer. These women are all well acquainted with our work, and readers of The Union Signal, and will, I am sure, push the work to success.

At Leesville I found the college full of wide awake young men and women who had caught some of the temperance enthusiasm of Professor Haynes, the president. A flourishing Y exists here and I had the pleasure of adding five new members and also organized a good W. There are many earnest, progressive men and women here. Mrs. Watson and her daughters gave me a pleasant home.

At Columbia eleven new members were added. Mrs. C. D. Stanley, the energetic president, who had worked so hard to arrange the meetings, was greatly encouraged; she is a lovely, consecrated woman and is greatly helped by her good husband. Mrs. Brayton, Lady Manager from South Carolina, entertained me delightfully in her quaint old home, which is quite a museum of antiques. She also tendered me a reception which gave me an opportunity to meet many very pleasant people, and at their request I gave a parlor talk upon "Woman's Work in the World's Fair." An Episcopal clergyman present moved a vote of thanks for the address. This was liberal. Sunday I gave three public addresses to large audiences, and one old South Carolinian said to me after the evening address, "Madam, you have captured Columbia for woman's work."

Monday morning I went out to the Benedict Seminary, a Baptist colored school. Dr. Becker, a genial but dignified gentleman from Pennsylvania, is president, and Rev. Mr. Topping, formerly of South Dakota, with his accomplished wife are enthusiastic in their work as teachers. Mrs. Topping will organize a Y in school very soon. Four of the white teachers wear the white ribbon.

At Winnsboro, my last point in South Carolina, I had a delightful meeting; spoke in the Baptist church and was introduced by the pastor, Rev. Ferris, in a strong prohibition speech, indorsing our woman's work as enthusiastically as Brother Delano would do. The Methodist minister also was in full sympathy. At a ladies' meeting the next day a number of new names were added and the president, Mrs. Kitchen, was cheered. Mr. and Mrs. Rion entertained so kindly I regretted to say good-bye.

My work in South Carolina has been pleasant and I trust profitable to the cause. A goodly number of new members were added and two new unions set to work. May the good women be greatly strengthened and encouraged.

SEED SOWING.

"Only waiting for my name to be called." Indeed it seems scarcely more, the record is so small—eight societies, four W's, four Y's, three states visited. Ere this goes to press, however, I hope many more may be "born into the kingdom" of our own blessed work.

Believing that this space should be utilized to tell how things are done, as well as what has been accomplished, I want to speak of the methods of some good women of Fayette county, Illinois, hoping that many discouraged county and district workers may see in the plan a way to reach the goal of their ambition—a thoroughly organized territory.

A few years ago, Mrs. M. C. Collins, of Vandalia, then county president, wishing to lay the foundation for substantial organizing work in the future, formed what she called a county union (the present Somerset plan). This was composed of women in the rural districts and smaller towns—sometimes only one woman in a place, and to these she constantly sent our literature, quietly sowing all the while, thinking of the reaping that was so sure to come. Years passed by. Mrs. Collins' duties multiplied, and others took her place who continued the good work. The last of these was Mrs. Hortense Dean, who soon discovered that the fields were already "white unto the harvest." How did she proceed? It was necessary to act, now. She secured a helper, and went to see the women at the different points and told them that on a certain day she would send them Miss B.,—they to take no financial obligation, just fully to "prepare the way." A complete route was arranged, and at the end of five days, seven unions were added to her list, and nearly two hundred had donned the white ribbon! This sowing had been done so carefully, I predict that none of the reaping was from "stony ground."

Cannot the same be done everywhere? Perhaps not such systematic preparation has been going on in all places, but our time has come, and just such a wave may sweep over your county if only you have the faith. You can make the white ribbon as popular in your community as it was in Fayette county, Illinois, at the close of this campaign. Miss Willard has urged organization. We all remember that it was to be the keynote this year. What would it mean to our society if the news of such a victory as this were to go up from every county? May we see our opportunity, and seeing, strike!

Yours for the awakening of young women, and a largely increased membership.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

LOST AND RESCUED. By A. L. Morse. W. J. Shuey, publisher, Dayton, O.

An earnest appeal in the interests of gospel temperance, the drink traffic being portrayed as the "seventh plague" which has fastened itself upon this "free" America.

THE COMMON USE OF TOBACCO CONDEMNED. By Rev. A. Sims, Uxbridge, Ontario, Canada. Price 50 cents.

A very plain discourse against the use of tobacco. The author, aside from his own vigorous denunciation calls to his aid the testimonies of many prominent writers. The tobacco habit is treated from all standpoints—its effects on the moral, mental and physical man mercilessly emphasized.

THE LAND OF THE SUN. By Christian Reid. A novel, whose heroine is not "Dorothea," the Lady Disdain of the plot, nor Violet Graham, the heartless beauty, but fair, dreamy Mexico herself. A party consisting of a genial general, his two daughters and two gentlemen friends take a leisurely tour through this land of history, poetry and romance. One of the friends acts as guide, being familiar with Mexican ground and Mexican ways. He is an enthusiast and infuses the party with his own forgivable fervor. A pretty love story threads itself through the narrative, but even love's light is not allowed to dim the brilliancy of that glow of admiration which the author kindles at the shrine of Mexico. Mr. Reid's powers of description are taxed to their utmost but he is equal to the emergency, whether it be the dark awsomeness of a silver mine, the hour of the Angelus at Zcatécas, a burro ride down steep hills or the mystical charm of chapel or monastery. Mexico ought surely to win friends from Mr. Reid's warm advocacy.

D. Appleton & Co., New York. Price $1.75.

AS OTHERS SAW HIM. A. D., 54.

No author's name is given to this enticing volume. It purports to be the report of an eye witness to scenes in which Jesus is the central figure. This eye witness is "Meshullam ben Zadok, a scribe of the Jews at Alexandria." His communications are addressed to "Aglaophonos, Physician of the Greeks at Corinth." He writes: "As for that man Jesus of Nazara, I can tell thee much if not all. For I was at Jerusalem all the time He passed for a leader of men up to His shameful death, . . . though unwillingly I was of those who voted for His death in the Council of Twenty-three." The recital is of especial interest because of the standpoint from which written—that of an unbeliever in Jesus as the Christ. Meshullam ben Zadok saw Him not with the eye of faith and love and could not understand Him. Yet, at the Crucifixion he stretched his arms toward Golgotha and cried, "What wert thou, Jesus?" In the epilogue, the narrator explains that since closing the recital he has met Rufus ben Simon, whom he knew in the Holy City and who had become a follower of the Nazarene though but a child when Jesus died. "Upon my inquiry how he could know aught of Jesus but from the common talk, he put in my hand some memorabilia of Him written down in Hebrew by one of His chief followers, Matathias." This casts a new light upon his thoughts of Jesus and he closes his volume with these words: "But Israel is greater than any of His sons, and the day will come when he will know thee as his greatest. And in that day he will say unto thee, 'My sons have slain thee, O, my son, and thou hast shared our guilt.'"

WOMAN IN THE PULPIT.

By Frances E. Willard.

More and more in these fin de siecle days do our workers find themselves confronted with the question of the "woman preacher." This question is most ably and forcibly presented and considered in Miss Willard's book, which is the outgrowth, as she explains, of an article prepared in compliance with the request of the Homiletic Review. It has introductory letters from Rev. Dr. Parker, Rev. Dr. Talmage and Joseph Cook, and contains, besides the author's own wise conclusions, the testimony of men and women preachers concerning women in the ministry — which, be it noted, is somewhat different from the ministry of women.

A Wheel Within a Wheel

HOW I LEARNED TO RIDE THE BICYCLE

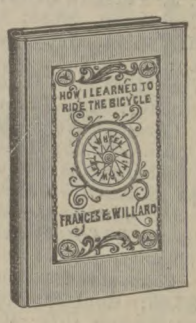
BY



Frances E. Willard

In her inimitable style Miss Willard tells in this dainty little volume her experience in learning to master a "steel steed," and as she graphically portrays the various situations leading from many failures to ultimate success, she has interwoven in delightful "side-talks" some exceedingly helpful and practical suggestions as to how failures and discouragements may be turned to success in life, never losing opportunity, as is her wont, to say that which ennobles and uplifts. It is really a fascinating little volume, appealing strongly to all that is best in physical and moral development.

Kernels.

SIDNEY SMITH characterized the following as the most perfect pun he knew: In Mrs. Hamilton's "Lectures on Education," a story is told of a schoolgirl who, during her examination, insisted on miscalling the word patriarchs—partridges. "Oh," was the comment of an auditor, "she makes game of the patriarchs."

MISTRESS.—"What in the world is the matter with the twins?" NURSE.—"Sure I don't know; but from the way they've been frettin' and cryin' all day, it's my opinion that they've mixed themselves up and can't tell which is which."

A CERTAIN young minister was preaching one morning on the subject of man praising his Creator, using the thought that all creation, even the birds, seemed to be sending up a daily hymn of praise, and why should not man do so also? Outside of the church was a grove, and it being a bright June day, the air was filled with the songs of the birds. The minister having finished his talk about the song of creation and intending to make a climax, turned toward an open window, and, with an appropriate gesture, exclaimed: "Let us pause a moment, and listen to the song of praise that nature is sending up, at this moment, to the throne of the Creator," Everybody listened, but just then an old ass outside of the church rent the air with its "???????!" The minister made the pause very short.

"I'M so sorry supper isn't ready," said Mrs. Dinsmore to her husband when he came in. "I attended the meeting of the sewing circle this afternoon, and I couldn't get away." "Hemmed in, were you?" asked her husband.

A TEACHER of a Virginia district school recently asked one of her little colored pupils to go to the blackboard and write a sentence thereon containing the word "delight." George Washington Jackson went pompously to the front of the room and wrote in a large, sprawling hand these words: "De wind blowed so hard dat it put out de light."

STEWART'S mother was making sandwiches of deviled ham. The little fellow came along and, seeing the can with the picture of the imp on it, regarded it earnestly for a while and then said, "Mamma, what is that stuff?" "This? O, this is deviled ham." He looked seriously at the mixture and in an awed voice inquired, "Why, mother, have they killed him?"

TEACHER—Now, Johnnie, you may tell us this: Suppose your mother had told you to come home at five o'clock, and you did not go; what would you be doing?

JOHNNIE—I don't know whether it would be swimmin' or playin' base ball.

"I DIDN'T know yo' could read, Bre'r Downey." DOWNEY (apparently much interested in his paper)—"Oh, yes, I'se read ebber since I wuz er boy." "Den how comes it you'se readin' dat paper upside down?" "I always read dat way, den I'se gets at de bottom ob de fac's widout habing ter read down de whole column."

WHEN you write a merry jest,
Cut it short;
It will be too long at best—
Cut it short;
Life is brief and full of care;
Editors don't like to swear;
Treat your poem like your hair—
Cut it short.

THE teacher was instructing the arithmetic class in history. "On what day is Washington's birthday?" she inquired. "Twenty-second of February," answered the class. "And Independence Day?" "The Fourth of July." "What is the difference between the two days?" This seemed to be a poser, and no reply was forthcoming. Finally a youngster who had been scribbling on a piece of paper held up his hand. "Good for you, Johnny," said the teacher, encouragingly, "now tell us what the difference is between these two of the greatest days in our national history." "Four months and twelve days, ma'am."

"WE won't print any such stuff as that!" said the editor loftily, as he handed back the manuscript. "Well, you needn't be so haughty about it!" retorted the irregular contributor, "you're not the only one who won't print it."

"TOMMY," said Mr. Figg, sternly, "I hung a motto in your room to the effect that little boys should be seen and not heard." "Yes, sir." "I find that it has disappeared." "Yes, sir." "What did you do with it?" "I—I took it down to the deaf an' dumb orphan asylum."

"WHEN I look into your eyes, Jennie, dear," he said, "it surprises me to remember that you are a teacher of a primary class." "Why, George?" she asked. "Because, dear, your pupils are so large."

Signal Notes.

Of the 2,304 newspapers in Great Britain, 570 are distinctively temperance journals, a fact which shows the rapid rate at which the total abstinence sentiment is being sown.

"Are there any white men who do not drink?" is the question which is generally asked by the native South African, who has abundant reason for his query.

According to the report of the state assessor, the valuation of property in Maine has increased since 1892 by over ten million dollars. A large proportion of this growth in value can be directly traced to the salutary effect of the prohibitory law.

The Scottish Temperance League has sustained a great loss in the death of its president, Sir William Collins, who had reached the ripe age of seventy-eight. He had been for forty-two years a member of the League and its president since 1873. He was the first total abstainer who was elected to the high office of Lord Provost of Glasgow.

The latest report of an English life insurance company is another evidence in favor of total abstinence. Comparing the general section with the temperance section it is found that in the former the percentage of actual deaths during the past year as compared with the expected deaths, was 79.34 per cent, while in the temperance section the same comparison showed a per cent of 54.67.

At a recent social and public gathering under the auspices of the Glasgow Abstainers' Union, Mrs. Ormiston Chant, who, by reason of her crusade against the questionable music halls of London, has been accused of wanting to put a stop to all amusements, in a stirring speech declared herself in favor of all proper amusements. They should be "the handmaidens of the workaday world, and something to look forward to after toil." She wants only to make places of amusements respectable and wholesome and such that young people can go to them in safety.

The Girls' Guild of Good Life, with headquarters at Hoxton Hall, London, has for its object the teaching of temperance, cleanliness and thrift as well as of those spiritual lessons which guard young women from temptation. In the nine years of its existence 2,852 girls have profited by the institution and a large proportion of these have signed the total abstinence pledge. Dressmaking and plain sewing, wool work, knitting, in addition to drawing, painting, elocution, music, embroidery and millinery are taught, preparing the inmates for a practical and useful life.

The temperance reform is like a mighty banyan tree, that from one parent-stem sends forth branches, which in turn become deeply rooted, the growth extending until an impenetrable forest is the result. The principles of temperance are penetrating not only to every country, but to the various institutions of the nations, taking root here and there and not to be exterminated. The American Temperance University, located at Harriman, Tenn., has a chair of Political Economy and National Prohibition, filled by Professor A. A. Hopkins, vice-chancellor, a prominent speaker and writer in the prohibition field. College prohibition clubs will be glad to avail themselves of this opportunity to push the battle forward within college walls. There is fresh reason for hope when the gates of the great halls of learning swing back at the touch of clean-handed temperance.

Special cars have been erected for the propagation of the gospel in sparsely settled regions of the United States. Boston Smith, a Baptist evangelist, operates such an one over the entire line of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and its expenses are met by John D. Rockefeller. A movement is on foot to construct a car for missionary service among the colored people of the South. The "Cathedral Car" of North Dakota, however, is especially noteworthy and differs from the other in that it is not only a missionary enterprise but a "moveable church" as well—the cathedral of the diocese in which it operates. It was built at a cost of $3,000, and started on its journeys in 1891. Nearly every Episcopal church in America contributed its mite toward its erection. Bishop Walker, who occupies the car, sends placards ten days' ahead to the railroad stations he intends to visit, thus preparing ranchmen and farmers for his services, which comprise the administration of the communion, marriages, baptism, ordinations, etc. The attendance is always good, the congregation often coming fifty miles to attend services. The car is on the road fully nine months in the year.

The Dr. J. H. McLean Medicine Co.,
St. Louis, Mo.

Gentlemen: About three years ago, while working at my trade as blacksmith, I was taken down with Kidney disease. I suffered severely with pain in my back and general weakness, and was compelled to quit work. I was treated by several different doctors, who filled me full of drugs and medicines, but without benefit. I had begun to get discouraged when I received one of your almanacs and read of a case in it that was similar to mine, cured through the use of Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm. I concluded to try it. The result was entirely satisfactory as I began to improve immediately. I used, in all, three bottles, and was able to go to work once more, and ever since have enjoyed the best of health. I would be doing less than my duty if I failed to give you these facts, so that others may hear of the wonderful powers of your Liver and Kidney Balm.

Yours truly,

H. J. BRECHT,

DO YOU LIVE IN GREASE?

As a true patriot and citizen you should naturalize yourself by using the best inventions of the day for removing such a charge. To live in Grease is utterly unnecessary when SAPOLIO is sold in all the stores, and abolishes grease and dirt.

PRIZES ON PATENTS.

How to get $100 and Perhaps Make a Fortune.

We secure patents and to induce people to keep track of their bright ideas we offer a prize of one hundred dollars to be paid on the first of every month to the person who submits to us the most meritorious invention during the preceding month. We will also advertise the invention free of charge in the National Register, a weekly newspaper, published in Washington, D. C., which has an extensive circulation throughout the United States and is devoted to the interests of inventors.

NOT SO HARD AS IT SEEMS.

The idea of being able to invent something strikes most people as being very difficult; this delusion the Company wishes to dispel. It is the simple things and small inventions that make the greatest amount of money, and the complex ones are seldom profitable. Almost everybody, at some time or another, conceives an idea, which, if patented, would probably be worth to him a fortune. Unfortunately such ideas are usually dismissed without thought. The simple inventions like the car window, which could be easily slid up and down without breaking the passenger's back, the sauce pan, the collar button, the nut lock, the bottle stopper, the snow shovel are things that almost every one sees some way of improving upon, and it is these kind of inventions that bring the greatest returns to the author.

The prize we offer will be paid at the end of each month, whether the app lication has been acted upon by the Patent office or not. Every competitor must apply for a patent on his invention through us, and whether he secures the prize or not, the inventor will have a valuable patent.

THE PRESS CLAIMS COMPANY,
JOHN WEDDERBURN, Gen'l Manager,
618 F St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

P. S. The responsibility of this company may be judged from the fact that its stock is held by about seventeen hundred of the leading newspapers of the United States.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS

Of Mary A. Woodbridge.

There are throughout the country, doubtless in every state in the union, "Woodbridge" unions and "Woodbridge" Y's, for many a local W. C. T. U. in the long list which Mrs. Woodbridge helped to bring into existence is proud to call itself by her name. Doubtless most of these already possess portraits of this beloved leader, and it goes without saying that those who do not are desirous of supplying this lack immediately. Hence we call attention to the cabinet photographs we have on sale. They are excellent likenesses and we commend them not only to "Woodbridge" unions but to all unions and to all friends of Mrs. Woodbridge.

Real estate firms, national banks and private individuals are placing loans and discounting commercial paper at seven per cent interest, though upon gilt edge securities negotiations are sometimes made at lower rates. It is, however, conceded in business circles that increased interest means invariably increased risk, and we caution white-ribboners against dealing with any firms who have a "bonanza" to offer in these times of financial depression.

In response to recent inquiries we reply: Seven per cent is a fair rate of interest in Chicago.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Dun's Review of Trade for last week reports a decided revival in all branches of trade.

The prohibition of plural marriage has been inserted in Utah's proposed constitution.

Wisconsin's senate has favored raising the age of consent from fourteen to sixteen years.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen have removed from Ottawa to Dublin, the former having been appointed viceroy of Ireland.

A resolution in favor of home rule for England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales was adopted by the British House of Commons, March 29.

Emperor William presented Prince Bismarck with a sword of honor on behalf of the army in recognition of his eightieth birthday.

Koyama Rokunseki, the Japanese assailant of Li Hung Chang, the Chinese peace envoy, has been sentenced to penal servitude for life.

To forbid the employment of married women in the Chicago public schools, excepting divorced wives, is the object of a bill in the Illinois legislature.

The anti-fusion act which prevents a nominee from appearing on more than one party ticket has been declared constitutional by Michigan's supreme court.

By act of the Privy Council, the Governor General of Canada has issued an order to Manitoba commanding the restoration of Catholic parochial schools. This decision was not well received in the province.

A commendable decree has been issued in the German principality of Waldeck, forbidding that a marriage license shall be issued to an habitual drunkard, unless satisfactory proof of reformation be produced.

A TELEGRAM from Mrs. Mary T. Burt, president of New York state unions, conveys this good news: "Both branches of the New York legislature have passed bills raising the age of consent to eighteen years; bill passed by the senate was introduced by the state W. C. T. U." This makes five states that have raised the age within a few months. Kansas, Colorado (twenty-one years, and introduced by a woman legislator), Delaware, New Hampshire and New York. The record of white-ribboners on this one point alone is sufficient raison d' etre, if no other legislation had ever been accomplished.

AN unusually important educational conference was that held in Evanston, Ill., March 29. The object was to consider uniformity in the requirements for admission to colleges and in the collegiate courses. The admirable results accomplished by the establishment of a similar association in New England, under the guidance of President Eliot, of Harvard, led to the present convention of the presidents of western colleges. Thirty-five presidents of leading colleges and principals of high-grade public schools were present. It is with a keen interest we note that all but two of these institutions are co-educational.

BY an inadvertence we have failed to state previously that in the Maine legislature the senate defeated the municipal suffrage bill by a majority of four. The majority in its favor in the house was twenty-five, making a majority of twenty-one in the two branches. Suffragists are not at all disheartened, as the question has been raised to a point never reached in Maine before, and they expect to win in 1897. The year 1894–95 has been a memorable one in legislation, favorable to women and to temperance. We hope soon to furnish our readers a tabular presentation of the victories for our cause in the various state legislatures.

JUST as we go to press comes the sad intelligence of the death of Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, president of the W. C. T. U. of Canada, and treasurer of the World's union. Our readers have known of Mrs. Williams' long illness this winter and have doubtless thought with us that "no news was good news." The last letter received in our office from Mrs. Williams was dated March 28, speaking of improved health, and on March 30 occurred her demise. Fuller particulars, with a sketch and portrait, will be given next week. We are profoundly grieved at this unexpected news, and offer our warmest sympathy to the Dominion white-ribboners, to whom Mrs. Williams was in very truth a "tower of strength."

THE gratifying announcement comes by wire from Philadelphia that the three prizefighters in the winter circus, whose arrest is mentioned in another column, have been convicted and fined. The district attorney's remarks especially emphasized the accountability of "the people who hire and lease the establishment" in which such an exhibition is conducted, the director of public safety appearing in open court, gave expression to his gratification as to the result, while Judge Gordon, in holding each of the convicts in the sum of one thousand dollars to appear when required for sentence, took occasion to hold up the brutal business to the detestation of the community: "From this day out all those who violate the law, the participants and those who promote these exhibitions, will have their offences brought to the bar of criminal justice."

THE emperor of Japan has declared an unconditional armistice. Just what the "unconditional" means is a little doubtful, but probably infers that because of the shooting of Li Hung Chang, the terms of peace will be a secondary consideration. Even war people hold that the shooting of the Chinese peace envoy by a Japanese subject should be sufficient indemnity for China, without any concession of territory or payment of cash tribute. The crucial test just at this point is the questioned power of the Japanese government to execute the armistice. In other words the shocking state has been reached of the military power outstripping the civil power during the war. The war spirit has so grown among the generals and the people that it is decidedly uncertain that the military element will submit to an armistice even if the civil authorities order one. There could never be a clearer illustration of the wickedness of war than this—that the victorious army, inflamed by its bloody successes, refuses to obey the behests of its government!

ANOTHER veteran in white-ribbon work has joined the hosts above—Mrs. Jane Stapler, of Tahlequah, I. T. Her death occurred at her home, Sunday, March 23. We have not yet learned the particulars of her home-going, but our readers will be gladly reminded of the almost romantic career of this noble Indian woman. She came of a long line of Cherokee chiefs, was born in Georgia, from which state she was forced to emigrate with her parents and her tribe when a little child, because white men had discovered gold upon the red men's territory. The only National W. C. T. U. Convention Mrs. Stapler was ever able to attend, she being quite aged, was the one held in Atlanta, Ga., 1889, and none of the delegates present will ever forget the meaningful words which she spoke there: "You do not know, my sisters, what it means to me to come back after an interval of generations to the state where I was born and be welcomed so tenderly by my comrades of the white ribbon, who are fighting with me against the 'fire water,' that has been the curse of my race as well as of your own." Mrs. Stapler has long been the Lady Bountiful in her territory, and an intelligent, thoughtful Christian woman who has dignified the whole Indian race.

COMETH A ROBIN?

BY E. H. CHASE.

I stood at the window at morn
And looked on the spring new born.
Bare were the branches
And black the mould.
The crocus e'en yet
Shrank back at the cold,
But the willow at edge of the woods
Showed pussies in furry hoods.

Thus at the window at morn
I studied the spring new born.
Waxen the branches,
Purpling the mould,
Unfolding the snowdrop
Showing its gold.
Blesséd faith looking out of the spring!
List! Cometh a robin to sing?

A VOLUNTEER CROP.

BY EMMA HARRIMAN.

The warm March sunshine fell upon the moist earth which looked up with her lap full of flowers. The distant mountains rose snow-capped at their highest points and stretched on around the fertile valley in a wall of royal purple, or deep blue. The green foothills lay in billowy masses at their feet. The blue, cloudless sky arched over it all.

Barefooted Chinamen, in loose, flapping cotton trousers and mandarin hats, worked among their long, straight lines of weedless vegetables. Blue lupines and yellow poppies grew along the roadside and mocking-birds sang in the tops of the eucalyptus trees.

Several carriages holding a family party passed leisurely along the road. In the first were two men who it was plain to see were brothers; one a resident, the other a visitor, judged by their conversation.

"It's glorious, Dick, that's a fact," said the visitor, "all and more than all you claimed for it."

"You ought to come out here and spend the rest of your days in comfort."

"Oh, I don't know. It's pretty comfortable at home, some of the time."

"'Some of the time,' yes; now look at that. Did you ever see anything finer than that, George?"

He had stopped his horse on the brow of the hill. At one side lay the green barley fields, on the other, the orange groves and orchards, with their dividing rows of eucalyptus and pepper trees. Behind them the city with its beautiful homes and in the far away haze a hint of the peaceful ocean.

"It's all very beautiful. I don't wonder you love it."

"Love it? Yes; more and more when we read of the blizzards in the East, and we with never a bit of frost. Now look at this crop of barley, and it's a volunteer crop."

"A volunteer crop?"

"Yes; comes up of itself; you see, the seed drops, and as there is no frost—"

"Yes—dear me, how the fellow frightened me."

A buggy containing a young man and several young ladies dashed past them, the young man firing his pistol into the air over his head as they passed. The girls screamed. The horses danced, the one in the buggy in which were the two brothers nearly upsetting them.

"I hope you won't be hurt or offended, George," said the elder of the two, "if I say what I have been thinking about Howard." He looked anxiously after the rapidly retreating buggy as he endeavored to quiet his own horse.

"Oh, he'll manage the horse all right," said the other, answering his look; "he's used to driving. The girls are safe."

"I wish he was," said the elder man, earnestly. "It pains me more than I can tell to see that he is inclined to be so wild."

"What's the use of making so much of every little caper, Dick?" said the other somewhat warmly. "Have you forgotten your own pranks?"

"No; would to God I could forget some; but it isn't simply mischief I am thinking of. I saw him come out of a saloon last night. And from what he said to me the other day he must be familiar with the workings of gambling dens."

"No doubt he is somewhat," said the other man a little uneasily, "but what can you expect? A young fellow must have his little fling, must sow his wild oats."

"'Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap.' Have you forgotten that, George?"

"Forgotten it, no, indeed; I never have a chance to. Howard's mother never gives me the opportunity to forget any of those things."

"Howard's mother is a good Christian woman and a good wife, no—"

"Indeed she is. I spoke irritably. You know how I love her, a thousand times more than when she was a girl. But I don't see the use in making such a fuss over a boy's capers. Howard will settle down. He's going to marry Alice Clark, as nice a girl as ever lived. You remember Ben Clark married Nellie White. She's their daughter."

"Is she a Christian?"

"Yes."

"Does she know of these habits of Howard's?"

"Well, yes; I suppose so. Not perhaps as we do, but she must know something. But what can you expect? How many young men are there who have no bad habits?"

"That's the pity of it. But I hope my girls may remain unmarried, or die, rather than marry a man with bad habits. We've one grave in the cemetery now and—"

He looked down and grew silent.

"Yes, that was very sad about Ruth. Arthur seemed to be such a good young man, too; of course we knew he took a glass now and then, but—"

"I tell you, George, it isn't safe to plant the seed you don't want to grow," said the other looking up. "You see this mustard?" He struck lightly with his whip at the feathery yellow bloom higher than his horse's head. "In some parts of this state I know of men who planted mustard for the seed—they thresh it out with machines as you do wheat and now they want to raise another sort of crop and they can't. The mustard volunteers each year and kills out the other crop."

It was during the next winter that the Los Angeles man received a letter from his eastern brother who had returned home, telling him of the conversion of his son Howard.

"Howard has turned out all right, just as I told you he would," he wrote. "He was converted last week in a series of revival meetings here. Alice is perfectly happy. You know they were married just two months ago and she says it is the best celebration of their wedding day that is possible. We all think the same, for really even I had begun to feel pretty anxious about Howard. He is as enthusiastic and active as even his mother could wish, and we are in a happy and thoughtful frame of mind all around."

"I couldn't have heard better news," said the brother, as he finished reading the letter to his wife. "I hope he may stand firm. He is a gifted young man and capable of doing much good in the world."

It was two years later that the brothers met again in the depot in Los Angeles. It was raining. A steady drizzle fell on the impatient horse and beat on the buggy-top as they drove to the house.

"Oh, Dick," said the visiting brother, "I can't believe it. I can't even now and I couldn't stay there another day. I knew you and Laura would take me in."

"We're only too glad to, my dear brother," and he laid his hand lovingly on the other's arm. There were tears in his eyes as he looked at the pale, thin, rapidly aging face of the other. "We are glad to have you come to us."

"When they lowered Mary in the grave I couldn't stand it; I fainted, I guess. Oh, it was dreadful; I can't tell you, and yet I can't keep still. I think sometimes I shall go crazy. I can think of nothing else. Howard did do well for a time, as I wrote you, and he meant to, I am sure he meant to, poor boy. I am sure it killed his mother; Mary never was very strong, you know, and he was all the boy we had."

"Don't talk of it now, George," said the brother tenderly, "wait till Laura gives you some warm dinner, you'll feel stronger. We'll be there in a minute and she'll have it all ready."

"Yes, I know. You see the old companions kept trying to win him back. If they'd let him alone he'd have done all right, but they wouldn't. And he went back. It was like what you told me when I was out here before; a volunteer crop. I've been thinking of it all day."

"Don't think of it now, George, there's the house, see," wiping the tears slyly from his eyes, "doesn't it look natural?"

"The house, oh, yes. No, I won't talk about it. But you see—what is a man to do with his only son—I couldn't believe they'd send him up for life, but they say they had hard work to do that. You know the law allows capital punishment in our state. Oh, he'd never have done it if he hadn't been tipsy. Ben Redding's son—they'd been friends ever since they were children—you remember Ben. Well, he and Howard were at a game of cards in Overmeyer's saloon—something came up, they quarreled and Howard—oh, I never wanted him to carry a revolver. This the house, oh, yes. Well, I won't talk about it, but you can see it was a volunteer crop—a volunteer crop."

IS THE W. C. T. U. WORTHY OF CITIZENSHIP?

BY MARGARET B. PLATT.

The W. C. T. U. has attained her majority. Is she worthy of citizenship? Let us see.

Twenty-one years she has been on trial. Never a child of the Republic has exhibited such invincible vigor or in a few brief years ripened into such superb and sweet maturity. From the day of her birth she walked and talked. She had no weak-kneed infancy. No sooner did she realize her God-given existence than she stood upon her feet and began her endless march of reformation "around the world, around the world."

Full long had God been vexed and earth been burdened with the sickening iniquities and horrors, the ever-increasing and widening encroachments of the rum traffic. Man seemed powerless. Unheeding the tears of broken-hearted women, the cries of suffering children, the wail of lost souls, again and again he had procrastinated, temporized and yielded. But the tender Christ had listened and heard with infinite sympathy the cries and prayers of His handmaidens. He looked upon the earth, and beheld with pitying eye the sufferings of His children, and He knew that the hour was ripe when the hand of Omnipotence should launch into the conflicting forces of the universe a new factor which should seek above all things else to do His will, whether it be in home, in church, in social, business or political life—divested of all elements of temporary expediency, selfish pleasure or sordid profit, simply and surely to do His will—and like the breath of prophecy came the message to His handmaidens, "Cry aloud; spare not; lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgressions and the house of Jacob their sins."

And from that hour, realizing her heaven-born commission, the W. C. T. U. went forth preaching the gospel of total abstinence from all that is hurtful and the eternal abolition of the rum traffic. In the moment that she heard her call from God she answered it with swift decision, "Here am I; use me!" She was endued with power from on high; she met and vanquished the tempter when in the guise of an angel of light he demanded that she temporize with her convictions in order that she might find favor with many; she suffered her baptism of fire when in the wilderness of political confusion amidst a hissing storm of odium, reproach and hatred, she turned neither to the right hand nor the left, but kept straight on in the middle of the King's highway of prohibition.

Her ranks were sifted but not decimated. Her courage was undaunted, her devotion sublime. In spite of the murmuring of the fearful or the boasts of the enemy, her Joshua declared that she "is fully able to go up and possess the land;" and after twenty-one years of history unrivaled and unsullied, she stands to-day a splendid heaven-born creation, and a magnificent object lesson to future generations of what the consecrated womanhood of the nineteenth century could do and dare.

The development of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, from the Woman's Crusade, was the marshalling upon earth's great arena of a host of fresh batallions of God's army. It was the arrival of a mighty reserve corps upon a hard fought field, and her fearless attack upon the organized, legalized liquor traffic was the hurling forward of a well disciplined, splendidly officered, courageous army into sure defeat. But the only reason why she has not driven her enemy at every point, and planted her pure, white banner upon every field is because she was hurried into action unequipped, and compelled from an open field to fight the cruelest of foes intrenched in law, fortified by custom, flanked by revenue, protected by the strong arm of government, backed by greed and lust and avarice and all the baser passions of mankind, and the whole dread array of forces armed with the one deadly weapon which was denied the attacking army and by which alone could she hope to conquer—that weapon the ballot.

Some one has said that "courage is fighting with the scabbard after the sword is broken and thrown away." If that be true then woman possesses the sublimest courage; for she entered upon her great fight for home protection without a weapon save prayer and faith, hoping to conquer by these alone. As she grew in years she grew in wisdom, and long before her majority was reached she realized that if she would win she must be armed with the same weapon which her foe so successfully wielded.

For while woman knelt in prayer before the saloon door or wept bitter tears in the solitude of her own chamber the saloon-keeper and his coadjutor, the Christian voter, went to the ballot box, and each with the same tiny slip of paper—mighty as the scepter of a king—declared it to be his sovereign will that the saloon should live and be protected. It appears to me that to the mind which loves justice and equity the question is not, "is she worthy of citizenship?" but, is he worthy of the name of man who would deny her admission thereto?

When the red-handed nihilist lands upon our shores his worthiness is not questioned, but after complying with a few formalities of the nature of which he knows little and cares less, he is invested with the rights of citizenship, and at the next election he with his unsavory comrades are marshalled to the polls by the ward boss and voted like puppets, in blocks of five, at the dictation of the rum power, and they decide who shall represent—or misrepresent—the homes in state and national legislature, and legislate as to the taxes women of education and property shall pay, by what laws they shall be governed, what the age of consent shall be, and whether woman shall or shall not own her own clothing, her own body, her own children.

To the future student of history nothing will appear so utterly inexplicable as the fact that a nation of the brothers of American women should confer the suffrage upon two millions of an illiterate race, but a few months released from long years of the most servile bondage, and at the same time refuse to their own native born, intelligent, educated and patriotic mothers, wives and daughters the elevating and ennobling privileges which they grant to the ex-slave and to the uneducated, debased revolutionary, anarchistic, foreign-born, un-American hordes which crowd our shores from the slums of monarchical Europe, and who before the ink is dry upon their naturalization papers or the oath of allegiance cold upon their lips, audaciously presume to dictate our municipal, state and national politics, formulate the laws and shape the policy by which free-born American woman in her own home with her own sons and daughters about her shall be misgoverned and unprotected. History can furnish no more unjust a spectacle than this; and "why was it thus?" will be the unsolvable conundrum of future generations.

What is the W. C. T. U.? She is a perennial declaration of independence; the organized, prayerful, faithful, hopeful, determined, persistent, fighting protest of Christian woman against that organized, legalized, government-protected, imperious, tyrannical body-and-soul-destroying despot, the liquor traffic.

What has she done? She has gone into all the highways and byways of the world preaching freedom to the captive and salvation for the people by way of the abolition of the rum traffic. She has collided with priestly prejudice and political partisanship; but unmoved by the shock and undeterred by the tumult, breaking all records, she has distanced every competitor on the highway of reform and while some have eyed her with jealous gaze and from imaginary heights have rolled shadowy boulders upon her track, she has, unaffrighted, kept straight on in the even tenor of her way, preaching the righteousness of the eternal Right, the sublime unselfishness of the temperance that "if meat make my brother to offend I will eat no meat while the world stands." True to her God-given mission the W. C. T. U. stands like a John the Baptist, rugged, fearless, purposeful, proclaiming the one message, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord." If the liquor traffic stands in the way of His coming to His kingdom in the hearts of men, destroy it. Better far that it should perish than that a whole nation shall be cast into irretrievable and eternal ruin.

What has she done? Over yonder in the city by the lake she has builded a colossal Temple which is at once a prophecy and a fulfillment. It stands there a stupendous monument to the superb courage and indomitable faith of woman. She has established a wonderful Publishing House which sends out yearly millions of papers and tracts, whose leaves are for the healing of the nations. By means of this literature distributed through all her various departments she is carrying on a campaign of education the results of which can never be estimated until the judgment day. She knows that "my people perish for lack of knowledge" and she would double her labors along educational lines if a sympathizing contingent would double her means. And these vast educational interests have been developed, managed and carried on by the W. C. T. U. Is she worthy of citizenship?

By all the voices of history, by all the signs of the times, God is calling to this nation in thunder tones to use every honorable means to save our people from the ruin which must inevitably be wrought by the unchecked power of strong drink; and in the name of home and all true womanhood, in the name of outraged and defrauded childhood, in the name of degraded and despairing manhood—yea, in the name of all that is good and pure, in the name of all that is right and just, I plead to-day that the W. C. T. U. shall be admitted to citizenship, that with the ballot in her hand she may smite to his death the common enemy and foe of all.

Sisters, our record is open to the world. We challenge inspection. To-day as ever our hearts throb in unison with the great heart of the All-Father, true and tender toward all humanity. Our ears are attuned to catch the slightest whisper of the voice of the Infinite, or the first faint, far-off notes of the shout of victory. Our vision is alert and clear and it is with joy to-day that we note upon the darkened horizon of political action the favorable omens which presage the coming triumph. And we welcome the storm if through it the swift lightning of God's vengeance shall blast that impious enemy of home and woman, called the liquor traffic. We rejoice that we live in these stirring days. We are glad of our opportunities. We glory in our past, and we welcome our future.

ALL OF SMOKE.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

Words fail entirely to describe some things, and they are quite inadequate to portray the picture in which my summer palace built by smoke stands. A great and matchless river flows all about it, for the palace is upon an island. Sometimes that river is heavenly blue, like a summer sky. Often it is ethereal tints of rose and turquoise, and when last I saw it it was steel-tinted and blotched with green and purple lights. In every direction islands, some rocky, others soft round mounds of green turf, and all bearing more or less cedars and hemlocks, give at each turn of the boat a new charm to the landscape.

The palace built of smoke is 72x76 feet in ground dimensions, and is sixty feet high. The walls are of Potsdam red sandstone, and its roof of Dutch tile, made in Akron, O. Towers and wide verandas adorn it and command exquisite views. Six big fire-places of most costly finish turn the air to summer on a chilly morning, and there are all the modern conveniences for a large corps of servants and many guests. The rooms are ten feet high, and the polished hardwood floors are deadened with mineral wool. All the wainscoting is in choice woods, carefully finished, and the windows are of plate glass. There is a perfect system of plumbing, and an electric as well as a gas plant, for though this summer palace is afar from cities, its owner, grown rich out of smoke, has no mind to use rural conveniences. A hot air furnace supplements the fire-place on occasions, for of course the palace is in the North, and Northern summers are fickle, and like to turn winterish. The wide verandas are approached by steps each a single stone 11 feet long, 20 inches wide and 7½ inches thick. The furnishings of this summer palace are in keeping with the sumptuous elegance of its building, yet when September bronzes the beeches and turns the sumacs and woodbine to tints of fire and all the rocks are gay with goldenrod and aster, its owner will sail away to his winter palace in a great city and the windows will be boarded up and the great doors locked, and only a solitary care-taker, glad for pay to brave the cold, will remain.

"I never see the place but I think how appropriate it would be if he should name his island 'Disease and Death,'" said the grave physician who pointed out the place to me last summer. "Cigarettes built it from cellar to attic."

Just ahead of us by the flag-staff two men were talking somewhat acrimoniously about the "rights of labor," and the "rights of the masses," and as our boat skimmed on and I meditated upon all that summer palace built all of smoke stood for, it seemed to me our most precious rights are quite lost sight of. The fine old woods and liberty and freedom are put to strange uses. If the old saying of political economy be true that the rights of the individual cease when the rights of his neighbors begin, then the tobacco seller and the rum-seller have no rights as merchants. Certainly it is strange that men teach their boys our Lord's Prayer, "Lead us not into temptation," and let these evil trades have existence. Two ladies were coming out of the fore cabin, and one said softly, "Everything goes back to yourself in the end, Anna. The kingdom of heaven is within you, you know."

My thoughts took a new turn. After all argument and excuse it must be admitted that palace built of smoke was a free-will offering. Men who would have fought to the death the imposition of the tobacco habit and its attendant prices to pocket and health, imposed it upon themselves, and this charming home in the fairyland of the great river is but one of many palaces all built of smoke.

LONGEVITY OF TOTAL ABSTAINERS.

BY J. D. GEHRING.

Many important cases in law are decided upon purely circumstantial evidence. Both scientific and theological conclusions and dogmas are often found to rest upon nothing better than inferential evidence. But circumstances may be misconceived and inferences may often lead to false conclusions.

It is upon this false basis that the war of words against prohibition and total abstinence has always been conducted; at the same time absolute proof, supported by actual demonstration, and illustrated from life, is ever persistently demanded of those who believe that national or individual rightness is impossible without total abstinence from all intoxicants.

Have we such proof? We have. Time and again it has been produced, and as often has it been ignored by them.

Among many others, we can point with pride to the life and life work of Gen. Neal Dow as a proof that total abstinence, in practice and as a principle, is a benediction, direct and indirect in its effects upon life and character. Thousands of his fellow men who began life with him under auspices as favorable as his have fallen by his side during the last forty years, in the prime of their manhood, without having accomplished their allotted work. Total abstinence would have saved them. Moderate drinking led them to an untimely end.

A noted statistician of England, after long and careful investigations, comparisons and observations, has established the following facts, published in the New York Witness some time ago:

Between the ages of fifteen and twenty, where ten total abstainers die, eighteen moderate drinkers die. Between the ages of twenty and thirty, ten of the former and thirty-one of the latter. Between thirty and forty years, forty moderate drinkers to ten abstainers die.

That is: A total abstainer twenty years old has a fair chance of living forty-four years longer; a moderate drinker has a chance of living only fifteen and one-half years longer.

At thirty years a total abstainer has a chance of living thirty-six and one-half years longer; a moderate drinker at the same age only thirteen and one-half years.

At forty a total abstainer has a chance of living twenty-eight years more, and a moderate drinker only eleven and two-thirds.

We may talk and write as eloquently as we will about the "fifteen hundred millions" annually spent in our own nation for intoxicating liquors, but half the truth is not told unless we add the actual money-value of the wasted mental and physical resources of thousands of otherwise noble and useful citizens, destroyed by that insidious enemy of man—moderation.

LEGALIZED VICE.

BY AARON M. POWELL.

May I ask the attention of the women of the W. C. T. U., especially of Missouri, to the lamentable fact that the Missouri legislature is asked by a committee of ministers, in conjunction with the mayor and chief of police of St. Louis, to pass a bill which provides that houses of ill-repute may exist legally, by authority of the state, within certain "specified boundaries, designated by the police authorities of cities, where such authorities exist or where such authorities do not exist, by the common council."

It appears that the police authorities of St. Louis have latterly compelled the women inmates of the houses of immorality to leave their familiar haunts, that the "residence" portion of the city is being invaded by them, and that this committee of well-known ministers, appointed by the Evangelical Alliance, assuming that social vice cannot be abolished, have, as a method of restriction, adopted this measure of police regulation, which, at their request the city counsellor of St. Louis has formulated in a bill which the legislature is asked to pass.

Our American Purity Alliance has sent the accompanying memorial to the Missouri legislature:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Missouri:

The American Purity Alliance greatly regrets the joint action of a committee of the Evangelical Alliance, and of the city counsellor, with the approval of the mayor and chief of police of St. Louis, in the preparation of a bill which you are asked to pass, to district and localize houses of ill-repute within "specified boundaries to be designated by the police authorities of the city where such exist, and where they do not exist, by the Common Council." We venture most earnestly to protest against the passage by you of any measure thus to give to social vice a legal status, with police surveillance, and to provide for its municipal regulation. We respectfully represent that such a measure enacted into law, establishing a legal truce with social vice in certain specified districts, would be wrong in principle; unjust to women, who would be wholly subordinate to a male police, while vicious men, the purchasers of sensual indulgence, are left without restraint; that it would be futile for good results, and worse than a failure, sanitary and moral, as heretofore abundantly demonstrated by a kindred unhappy experiment in the city of Rome, under the auspices of the Roman Catholic Church; and furthermore that it would contravene a state law, enacted specially to preclude the legalizing of prostitution within the limits of the state of Missouri.

New York, March 12, 1895.

However good the intention, it is quite certain that evil, and only evil, can come of giving within any "specified boundaries" a legal status to debauchery. It means practical slavery for a certain class of dependent women and young girls and unutterable degradation for men. Will not THE UNION SIGNAL and the large army of noble women it represents protest promptly and vigorously against it?

We are writing an imperishable record by our fleeting deeds. Half a dozen pages carry all the story of that stormy life of David. It takes a thousand rose trees to make a vial full of essence of roses. The record and issues of life will be condensed into small compass, but the essence of it is eternal. We shall find it again, and have to drink as we have brewed when we get yonder.—Alexander Mc Laren, D. D., in "The Wearied Christ."

MRS. BARNEY IN ENGLAND.

Dear Union Signal:—Mrs. J. K. Barney sailed for home March 6 last, and she left our shores amid abundant wishes and prayers for every needed good, and with the assurance that very many desire her to "come again," to use the expressive American phrase which all who have visited your country remember as a pleasant part of the good-by on leaving. Mrs. Barney spent some three months in continuous service here, so continuous that scarcely a day—including Sundays—was free, and so effective that while in two or three cases places were visited twice, many more could have been had her stay been longer. As it was, both return visits and new applications had to be refused, and many places desirous of a visit were necessarily disappointed. There is in many quarters a keen wish that Mrs. Barney should pay us another and a longer visit, and if she is able to do so a warm welcome, abundant openings for service and a most successful tour are assured, for she has made many friends who will not forget her.

During her tour Mrs. Barney addressed over one hundred and thirty separate meetings, some single meetings and some missions, covering a series of days. From all only one report has come—that of unqualified satisfaction, of warm appreciation and of the desire for renewed opportunity of benefiting by her presence and work. Mrs. Barney was heralded on her arrival as, in the opinion of Lady Henry Somerset, the finest speaker on gospel temperance her ladyship had ever heard; and now, at the close of the visit, there are very many well qualified to judge who by no means hold that to be too high praise. Keen interest was felt in Mrs. Barney's mission from the fact that her home work in connection with the prisons of America had won for her the title of "The Elizabeth Fry of America," and this in many cases opened the way; but the high regard and even love which is now felt for her here rests far more on the personal worth discovered by personal contact and on the great and transparent value of her work among us.

Some of Mrs. Barney's meetings were marked by specially interesting circumstances, arising either from the historical or other associations of the places where they were held, or from the personnel of those concerned. Among those in the first category may be mentioned a great meeting in Wesley's chapel, City Road, London—the Metropolitan Cathedral of Methodism. The great building was closely packed in every part, and though other speakers, eminent in Methodism, preceded Mrs. Barney, the vast audience waited patiently to hear her, and showed both by applause and by evident emotion how deeply her words stirred all hearts. Another instance was that of a meeting specially arranged for Mrs. Barney at Epworth—the birthplace of John Wesley, where in spite of very severe weather and deep snow, an excellent meeting was held, the combination of personal and historic interest being keenly felt and appreciated by audience and speaker alike. Bedford, the scene of the life, labors and imprisonment of John Bunyan, "the Bedford tinker," and the author of the immortal "Pilgrim's Progress," was also the scene of a memorable meeting, as also was the Friends' meeting house at Barking, Essex, in which Elizabeth Fry used to worship, and near to which lie her remains in Barking churchyard. Both spots possessed singular and absorbing interest for Mrs. Barney, who spent some time viewing the remaining landmarks associated with the two great hearts who made the places famous.

A great many parts of this country were included in the sphere of Mrs. Barney's labors. Westward she visited, amongst other places, Bristol, Gloucester and Ledbury (where she was the guest of Lady Henry Somerset at Eastnor Castle); eastward, Ipswich, Cambridge, Barking, and elsewhere; northward, as far as Carlisle and neighboring towns on the northwest coast; and Leeds, Manchester, Liverpool, with Harrogate and Hartlepool in the northeast, with many a place between these points, and numerous meetings in London, besides Reigate, etc., in the south. Amongst the latter several were held with the coöperation of Lord Radstock, one of our foremost Christian philanthropists, and others, with that of Adeline, Duchess of Bedford, sister to Lady Henry Somerset. Several were drawing-room meetings, at which temperance, and especially the prison reform phase, was brought prominently before unaccustomed and influential gatherings.

I am privileged to have an unique source of information as to the opinions formed of Mrs. Barney's mission, in the correspondence on the subject which has reached my wife, who, as superintendent of the Speakers' Bureau made the arrangements for the meetings. A perusal of these letters leaves a deep impression not only as to the satisfaction felt and expressed, but also of the great and lasting good which has been accomplished. It is evident that Mrs. Barney has done much to awaken temperance convictions, to spread temperance truth, and to strengthen the branches of the British Women's Temperance Association and other societies visited,—for she did not speak exclusively for the women's societies, but was fully as welcome in other circles.

No attempt has been made to tabulate results; yet from one place a record is sent of sixty new pledges, another twenty, and others of varying numbers, while additions to the membership of the branches were frequent and numerous; while many of her audiences numbered a thousand and upwards, and in some cases twice that number.

I am glad to know from Mrs. Barney's own letters how cordially she was received and treated everywhere, and also that she found the work pleasant, and "rejoiced in it because of the presence and power of the Lord." If Mrs. Barney returns—I dispose to say when she returns—much of the seed she has sown here will be found to be springing up; and even greater and better results will be planned for and surely realized.

A MEMORIAL TO MRS. LATHRAP.

Editor Union Signal:—I am sure that you will yield some of your valuable space to the presentation of a matter which cannot fail to interest all your readers, for they loved and revered Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap. It is proposed that a fitting memorial to Mrs. Lathrap be erected this season to take form as Lathrap Chapel in connection with Fisk Memorial Hall, and to be the first completed edifice, and always the most popular feature, of the American Temperance University, at Harriman, Tenn. Mrs. Lathrap was a trustee of the university and a believer in its great possibilities as related to the prohibition cause. She was a devoted friend of General Fisk, who claimed her native state as his, that state whose soil is now sacred to all who love temperance, education and truth, because these two sleep within it. He greatly admired the matchless abilities and royal womanhood of her whom he often referred to upon the platform as "Our Saint Mary of Michigan." It is eminently appropriate, therefore, that their names be thus jointly identified with an institution of learning dedicated to the temperance ideas.

This proposed chapel formed a part of the original plan for Fisk Memorial Hall, but was to be a distinct portion, connected only by corridors with the main building; and the intention was, from the first, to give it a distinct name, worthy thus to be associated with that of General Fisk. The recent death of Mrs. Lathrap, as in the very logic of Providence, determined what that name should be; and her loss lends a peculiar fitness to this tribute, in which temperance men and women can join with equal propriety and zeal."

Miss Willard has written saying: "You are at liberty to quote me in favor of raising the money for the Hall to be called Lathrap Hall, in connection with the University at Harriman. Your plan is excellent. I will contribute to it later on if I am able."

This plan for a Lathrap Hall or chapel fund contemplates contributions from Prohibitionists and members of the W. C. T. U., to be obtained individually and by collections at special and other meetings. Several of the platform workers, who knew Mrs. Lathrap best, have pledged one or more Sunday collections during this year, entirely to be given to this fund—Governor St. John generously heading the list with four. The first collection actually taken for the fund was by Miss Vandelia Varnum, at a meeting held in Ashtabula, O., by the local union there, and yielded ten dollars. Will not other unions pledge collections for this purpose, to be taken, on a Sunday or otherwise, as conditions may permit, before July 1? Where a public service has already been held in Mrs. Lathrap's memory, that should make even easier a considerable collection for the Lathrap fund.

The chapel is to seat one thousand five hundred persons, and to cost, above the foundation walls (now ready for the superstructure), about ten thousand dollars. The understanding is that no part of any contributions made shall be used until at least five thousand dollars have been paid in or absolutely guaranteed, which sum would insure the success of the memorial plan beyond question. Prof. Samuel Dickie, Albion, Mich., has consented to serve as treasurer of the Lathrap fund, and all contributions should be sent direct to him. Pledges to obtain such, in response to this letter, should come to me, at Harriman, as we are anxious to know, as early as possible, how much coöperation may be expected.

The University is a remarkable scholastic success. Its total enrollment, thus far during its second year, rounding an even three hundred, with a senior class of twelve to graduate in May next. Lathrap Chapel will be imperatively needed next fall to accommodate the four or five hundred students who will enroll during the third year; and in the hearts of these and other hundreds of young men and young women, who shall year by year go in and out of it, its name should become a blessed memory, inspiring them with the principles of right and truth which Mrs. Lathrap embodied and advocated so well, and helping to make them workers and leaders for God and the good throughout coming generations.

"OLIVE SCHREINER'S DREAM REALIZED."

Dear Union Signal:—Under this caption in your issue of January 24, Rachel Foster Avery chronicles a "thoroughly equal rights marriage ceremony," performed in her own home. Each of the contracting parties repeated the following formula: "I, Eleanor, take thee, Raymond, to be my husband. I promise to be to thee a loving and faithful wife so long as thou art worthy of the trust which I this day place in thee, and with this ring seal I my vow." (The italics above are mine.) An exchange of rings with the closing words sealed this provisional contract. The Rev. Anna H. Shaw then pronounced the couple married. Mrs. Avery adds: "Such marriages as these, and the assumption of such entirely mutual obligations, presage the better time for both men and women, when the tyranny of sex shall have become a thing of the past—when Olive Schreiner's dream shall be a reality, where she writes: "I dreamed I saw a land. And on the hills walked brave women and brave men hand in hand. And they looked into each other's eyes and were not afraid!"

There are those who fail to recognize in this enlargement of liberty the promise revealed to Mrs. Avery, or the advantage secured to the wife. May not the man who would disregard the simple, sacred old troth-plight: "To be to thee a faithful and loving husband till death shall separate us," find in the terms of this partnership, limited, a ready door out of obligation by declaring his wife unworthy of the trust placed in her? Such a compact subjects the most vital interests of the home and of society to the caprice, ambition, jealousy, or passion of either party to it.

Webster defines marriage as "The legal union of a man and woman for life."

Our common law respecting marriage is based upon the Divine law given to our first parents, and never revoked. "Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother and cleave unto his wife, and they twain shall be one flesh." Our blessed Lord, who recognized but one ground for divorce, confirmed this law, adding with an emphasis which must have startled the Pharisees, "What God hath joined together let not man put asunder."

Surely woman should hold inviolate the inspired Word. No other rock has ever yielded leverage for her uplift from misery and thralldom. Obedience to that Word alone makes possible a reality fairer than the dream of any reformer whose efforts have not root in its teachings. When husbands "Love their wives even as Christ also loved the Church and gave Himself for it"; when wives are subject to their husbands "As it is fit in the Lord," "As the Church is subject to Christ"; under such conditions, possible through riches of divine grace to our fallen race, the estate of matrimony is indeed a holy one. Each life, in every fibre of its experience for "better or for worse," growing into the life of the other, the oneness, resisting every dissolving influence, yields its union only to the sharp stroke of the last enemy.

"PLEASE DON'T."

Editor Union Signal:—In a recent issue of The Union Signal of special interest, I note the use of the word "heathen" in reference to the work among non-Christian nations.

It is sometimes necessary for the sake of clearness of statement to apply this unpleasant word to certain classes we meet in "foreign fields," in reports concerning the work done there; but even in missionary periodicals it is best to paraphrase that old time expression wherever it is possible. I rarely venture to send one of the very ablest among missionary magazines to my English reading friends in the Orient, because this word, so offensive to many of them, occurs in its title.

While we do not use the word in an offensive sense, yet people who chance to be thoroughly conversant with our language cannot fail to know that it is used in an unpleasant way at times. Our common colloquial often makes the old appellation "heathen man," a term of reproach; and some of our daily papers rejoice in using it in regard to the Chinese, with a fervor which makes it read like a stronger word.

The word "Gentile" has lost its full significance since multitudes of the Gentiles accepted the rejected Jewish Messiah; but that is the word Jesus used according to the revisers of the New Testament. (Note Matthew 6: 7.)

When we have found the world to be such a very little world that it can be belted by a white ribbon, is it not time to give heed to our words and ways, that only pleasant echoes may find their way afar?

If a phrase "make my brother to offend"—and, emphatically the word "heathen" does make him "to offend"—I will not use that phrase "while the world stands," save when absolutely necessary. Such is the resolution respectfully offered for the mental signatures of those who read a world-wide paper like The Union Signal.

To its readers, certainly, as to the writer, there are no "masses"; but only people for whom Christ died, no "heathen," but only loved brothers and sisters who have lost the vision of a common Father's face. Among these, also, there be many who will soon be with us, "one in Christ Jesus."

MISSIONARY WORK IN AMERICA.

Dear Union Signal:—In your issue of February 7, I read a good editorial on "The Immigration Problem." That article is all true and we as a nation ought to fear, if not to tremble. Allow me to speak a word of a class of immigrants not mentioned, the Arabs from Syria. These Arabs are not Jews; they are the descendants of Abraham through Hagar—Moabites or Ishmaelites—and they are, in some respects, a fine people, and after a while will make good citizens. They are coming just as fast as they can, and are trying to become Americans.

In 1847 I went to Syria with my late husband, Rev. Mr. Benton, as missionaries of the A. B. C. F. M. We were in Syria more than twenty years, and returned many years ago. In February of 1894, our maid came to my room and handed me my own card and said, "There is a woman in the kitchen wishes to see you." I went down; the woman, who spoke a little English, said she was from Syria: when I spoke Arabic how her face did brighten up. Of course I held a long talk with her, and she begged me to come to see them, said if I would come Sabbath afternoon she would get a goodly number of them to meet me. I went. They were living in a great old wood house, about fifteen or more families, each family having one room; they spread their mattresses on the floor at night and roll them up in the morning—quite a little room full; a chair for me, they sat on the rolls of bedding and the floor. It is difficult to imagine how delighted they were to see a lady here in Minneapolis who could speak their native tongue. I took my Arabic Testament and had a little gospel meeting, offered prayer in Arabic, and at the close of my own words of prayer, repeated the Lord's Prayer in Arabic. An old woman who sat by and held my hand, said, "Why, she said that just as we do." "Yes," I replied, "I say that just as you do. Now let us all say it together." They did so, most of them knew it. I now asked them what they were here for? "No one wants you here, our government does not want you, and your government does not wish you to go away; you don't know our language and what do you come here for?" One of the men bowed down to the floor and replied: "Mrs. Benton, you have been in Syria and you know how we Christians are under the heel of the Turk, how we can't build up any business, or do anything to prosper—and some one who got here before us, wrote to us to come to the United States of America; it is the best country in the world, a free country. And we are coming and we will try to be good people. I have been here nearly five years, also several others who came with me, and have you ever seen anything in your papers against us? We try to keep the laws and do right."

I then gave them good advice and tried to comfort them, and I have been, I think, thirty-eight different Sabbath afternoons and held a gospel meeting with them; indeed I feel that I never did better mission work in Syria than I am doing here now in the city of Minneapolis. They tell me that there are over thirty thousand Syrian Arabs now in the United States; there are less than one hundred in this city, more than two hundred in St. Paul, over one thousand in Chicago, many in Colorado and in California, and more in New York.

Now all this movement is the result of mission work. We must meet these heathen and semi-heathen foreigners whom the providence of God is bringing to our shores, and we must Christianize them lest they heathenize us as the time goes on.

ONE NATIONAL REFORM PARTY.

Editor Union Signal:—It is some time since I have said a word through your columns. I have noted with hopes and fears what many of its contributors have said regarding the uniting of reformers into one single party for the purpose of the bringing in of such reforms in our government as seem to be so sorely needed.

I am now, after ten years of ardent urging and persistent struggle, more convinced than ever that what we need and what we must have is mobilization of the reformers of the nation into one great national reform party. John G. Woolley seems to fully concur with me in this conclusion, and I would give more for his opinion than almost any other man living. He, of all the men I have met, seems more fully to comprehend the awful task we have before us. One writer has said: "He who knows how to say what other men think is what makes poets and sages," but he who dares to say what other men only dare to think is what makes heroes and reformers! John G. Woolley is that man!

A conference, embracing leaders of both the Populists and Prohibitionists, should be held at the earliest possible moment, for the purpose of comparing notes and seeing what can be done to unite true friendly elements into one great party for the important conflict of 1896! The Voice suggests the forming of local clubs or leagues. These would help, but nothing would arouse the country to action so quick as to have it pass over the wires that the Populists and Prohibitionists have united into one party. The "new name" can be easily agreed upon.

N. Tonawanda, N. Y.

Dear Comrades:—"What constitutes a model union?" This question was asked me not long ago and it set me thinking. We often hear the word "model" as applied to individuals, yet no two "model" people are apt to be alike, save in the general characteristic of nobility of soul. So I should say that though our unions differ, any of them that are really working unions may be termed model unions.

Since the question has been asked I have been mentally building such a union as conscientious presidents are ambitious for, and it may be suggestive to beginners in our work if I specify some—there is not room for all—of the characteristics necessary to a model union.

First, officers who can work, will work, and who possess the secret of getting others to work.

A model union should be mother of a Y and an L. T. L., since there are always young women and children to be gathered into the ranks of the temperance army. A union that shows any spirit of antagonism to Y work is on a par with that mother who, wholly through selfishness, prohibits the happy marriage and independent home life of her daughters; and a union that ignores its duty to the children is ignoring one of the greatest factors of our ultimate success in conquering "King Alcohol."

A model union is a missionary union, watching for every opportunity to preach the good news of temperance in districts where its principles are not well-rooted, and setting on foot a movement to organize unions wherever possible.

There are certain departments that can be carried on by every union and without which they cannot live successfully. Among these are:

Sunday-School Work.—No Sunday-school ought to be without provision for regular temperance work, and who are so well able to set this good ball a-rolling as white-ribboners?

Temperance Literature.—As a union reads and studies, so is it; also, the printed page is one of our greatest agents for agitation and education of the public mind.

Press Work.—No organized movement can live nowadays without the indorsement of the press. Though all doors in a community be closed to us as a society, the local newspaper enters all these doors, and it behooves us to gain and hold our "W. C. T. U. column."

Narcotics.—While the air everywhere is blue with tobacco smoke, our pavements unsightly, and our sons and brothers slaves to this poisonous habit, there is work for us to do on this line.

Evangelistic.—If we do not "keep brightly burning upon our altars the sacred fire which was kindled in the Crusade," then our death is at hand. And how more surely may we "help our fallen brother rise" than through the preached gospel?

Unfermented Wine at Sacrament.—As long as there is a house of the Lord within our reach that gives at its altar the cup which inebriates, this department is ours to attend to.

Proportionate Giving.—This is a principle too little taught and practiced even among the Lord's own. People give according to impulse, refrain from giving under pressure of some urgent need of their own, or slackly give, according to the amount of "ready money." This department aims also a direct blow at the false system of church suppers, raffles and charity balls, largely employed to raise money for the Lord's work.

But inexorable space calls a halt, and I hear interested department superintendents crying out for a hearing. What model union can ignore the department of Sabbath observance while the divine law is broken on every hand? the mercy department, while animals are dependent upon man for their lives? the department of purity, while there are pitfalls of ignorance and crime in every path to ensnare our sons and daughters? flower mission work, while there are "lonely hearts to cherish?"—any of our other ways and means by which we may better the old world while it needs to be bettered?

I hear a protest: "We have not enough members to conduct all of these." Every union's activity must be controlled by its ability, but all departments of W. C. T. U. work, whether regularly conducted or not, should be intelligently understood by the unions. For instance, at one meeting there could be a paper on "Homes for Homeless Children," with a discussion of the same, and information given regarding the work done in states in this department; at another, "The Relation of Temperance to Labor and Capital," inviting the brothers-in-law to come and hear or take part; and so on. Financial help can always be given, and a union interested in some line of work which it cannot see its way clear to actively pursue, could raise money for the furtherance of that department in district, county, state or National unions.

For study of the W. C. T. U. department plan there is no better text-book than the Annual Leaflet, which can be procured at National Headquarters for postage—two cents.

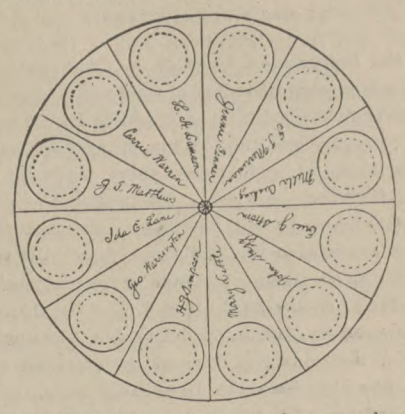
Prayer.—O that I might have my request and that God would grant me the thing that I long for!—Job 6:8.

Promise.—Delight thyself in the Lord; and He shall give thee the desires of thine heart.—Psalm 37:4.



Miss Willard's letter, written as she was about to sail for England, to the presidents of local unions asking that each union as far as possible would secure the filling of one hundred Wheels, is meeting with a generous response. Orders are daily coming in by hundreds. We are now receiving on an average of fifty filled Wheels daily; this is doing very well for a beginning, but we have placed our mark at a thousand per day, and there is nothing to hinder its attainment, if the unions will only see that the Wheels are placed. We find the greatest eagerness, not only among children but adults to fill still other Wheels after they see the ease with which they succeed in filling their first one. Even out on the sparsely populated prairies, far from towns, the work goes on.

Mrs. Olive L. Hart, South Branch, Watonwan county, Minn., writes: "I send to-day the Wheel filled by my little daughter Frances. She is eight years old and wishes premium No. 1. Stanley, five years old, also desires to fill a Wheel; please send one by return mail. We live on the prairie eight miles from town, but we love the Temple and will do all we can to help pay for it. I am helping the children fill their Wheels for I believe if they learn to work for temperance now they will when grown take their place on the right side." Who can doubt it? Mrs. Josie Dorman, Red Fork, Indian Territory, writes: "I return a Wheel we have filled and send stamps for four more for my daughters Nora and Emma. God will bless the Wheel rolling through our country gathering up the mites for this grand work." "Going up and down the street on which I live," writes Mrs. E. P. Dean, Dunlap, Ia., "the Wheel was filled, meeting with no refusals. It is a very unique and easy way of collecting dimes. I send ten cents for five more Wheels." We want to find ten thousand boys like Willy G. Christy, Jerseyville, Ill. He says: "My Wheel was filled in one day. Please send me premium No. 5." That is business; quick work is what we want. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might," etc. A filled Wheel has been received with the following pathetic words written upon it. "Mother's Wheel; she passed away March 12, 1895."

One of our mothers in Israel, who does not desire her name mentioned, sends ten dollars and writes a letter full of sympathy and kind wishes. She also says she made her will some time ago and bequeathed $200 to the Temple. Mr. F. Bacon, Wilton, Iowa, sends $50 and intimates that he will send an additional fifty to place his wife's name on the Iowa tablet in Willard Hall. Mrs. L. M. Perry, Langhorne, Bucks county, Pa., sends $10.95, the contents of three mite-boxes. "I enclose $10 for the Temple," writes Miss Ellen Kneeland. "I hope this is the beginning of one hundred dollars for the Northampton, Mass., W. C. T. U. Our county will soon send one hundred dollars."

Mrs. L. J. Canfield sends $75 to be credited on the pledge of the Bellville W. C. T. U. She writes: "We desire to insure having our name placed in the House Beautiful, to be read of all men, as we want to do our part in helping to secure entire possession of the building for the National W. C. T. U." The St. Joseph, Mich., W. C. T. U. sends $16 on their pledge. The Evansvills, Wis., union send through Mrs. E. A. Winston $20 on their pledge. The East Lincoln, Neb., W. C. T. U. send $24.25 which completes their hundred dollars to place in memoriam, in Willard Hall, the name of Mrs. H. A. Stoner. Mrs. C. E. Bentley writes: "We have enjoyed raising this money, not only because we delight in honoring the memory of one who has left such a record of faithfulness, but because of our faith in the Temple enterprise and our confidence in its originator." Anna D. Stillwell, of Troy, O., sends $2 from the Troy union. This union is also raising $100. Miss Ruth Hawk, of Delaware, O., writes us that the Christian Endeavorers are raising $100 to place the name of Dr. Francis E. Clark, the father of the Y. P. S. C. E., on a tablet in our beautiful hall. We are sure there will be little difficulty in raising this amount.

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money order and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1113, The Temple, Chicago.

TWO KINDS OF WINE.

A Story of the Crusade.

BY MRS. W. C. HAMILTON.

During the temperance Crusade in Cincinnati twenty years ago, a company of ladies in the town of C—— went from a prayer-meeting into a saloon near by. The owner of the saloon was standing at his front door evidently waiting for them, as he had seen them leave the church and had divined their purpose. He invited them in very cordially, and began to talk about his business. He said he had been examining the Bible and thought it justified his business, as it in many places advocated the use of wine. He then produced a Bible and read aloud the blessing of Isaac upon Jacob, and Jacob's blessing upon Judah, and as a climax the story of the marriage at Cana of Galilee, at which time the Lord made wine. When he had concluded one of the ladies asked him to let her have the Bible, and she in turn read to him. The expression on the saloon-keeper's face when she read vivid descriptions of scenes with which he was only too familiar was a picture I shall not soon forget.

"Where do you find those texts?" he asked, "I did not see them," and insisted on reading them himself before he would believe they were in the Bible.

"I must ask Sally about these," he said. "She found the others for me, but she did not show me these. But if they are all true tell me why Christ made wine at the wedding and you Christians drink it in your churches?"

Then this earnest Crusader showed him this passage: "And Pharaoh's cup was in my hand; and I took the grapes and pressed them into Pharaoh's cup and I gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand."

"That," said she, "is the kind of wine God makes every year in the ripening vineyards—drawing the water up from the earth through the vines into the fruit. Christ hastened the process by divine power, just as on another occasion He made bread and fish without waiting for grain to grow or fishes to be caught." She then read the account of the Lord's Supper, calling his attention to the expression, "the fruit of the vine."

"Do you think then there were two kinds of wine in those days?" asked the puzzled proprietor.

"Yes," she answered, "just as there were two kinds of bread, leavened and unleavened."

She told him briefly that the history of the early church confirmed this idea and that travelers in oriental lands find the custom of pressing the grapes in the hands for the fresh wine, or the preparation of the juice to prevent fermentation, quite common.

"As to Christians using fermented wine at the sacrament, many churches use the unfermented juice of the grape as the Jews and our Saviour did; though some still cling to 'the tradition of men' which crept into the church with many other wrong things during the Dark Ages. There is one other text which I want to show you before I go," she said, and read him Habakkuk 2:15.

"'Woe unto him,'" she repeated. "Now do you not see that you are on the wrong side of the wine question? What is it doing for your children while you are pressing it to the lips of those young men who have been drinking while we have been talking?"

She had drawn her bow at a venture but it had pierced between the joints of his armor. We left him then, hoping that some of the texts had reached his conscience.

The next afternoon a stranger was in the prayer-meeting who lingered till all but two or three had gone. It was the wife of the saloon-keeper and she told this story:

"There was not much sleep in our house last night. Mike and I went over all you said; I had heard it all from the back room. We have one boy just twelve years old, but already we see the influence of his surroundings. He thinks now he is wiser than we are and wants his own way more than is good for him. My father is a good Christian. I was brought up in the church, but he was a poor farmer and I wanted more clothes than he could give me, and went to a neighboring town to service. There I met Mike. Neither of us liked farming and wanted to make money easier and faster than my father did. We came across the river and started the saloon business in spite of my father's remonstrances, thinking we could make a good sum of money before the boy was old enough to be influenced by the associations. Now we are resolved to give it up and go back to Indiana, hoping it is not too late to save him."

The next day the house was closed and there was one less saloon in the town of C——.

THE MISAPPLIED "PAULINE DOCTRINE OF THE SWORD."

BY JOSIAH W. LEEDS.

In the first month of this year a lecture upon military topics was delivered in San Francisco before the Epworth League of Centenary Church by a Methodist preacher named Edmunson. Presumably, the lecturer dealt with the special subject that he did in order that the Epworth Guard of the League might be given a clear look at the duties and responsibilities of their military position, and being assured by the preacher (who is also, I believe, chaplain of a warship) that they were certainly on the right track, run forward in the way with gleeful hearts.

"We are born fighters," said this guide—who I also very much fear is a blind guide. "Look at the little babe. If it finds that it does not get everything it wants it will have it. It will fight and bawl and make the night hideous. That is how it is born in us. Preachers will stop to see a fight. Women like fighting. They get men into more fights than you can imagine. It is natural to have guns, and we as an American nation must have guns, well drilled soldiers and warships. America is a great country, but it won't be great much longer unless we are more vigilant. She must have a navy, and have cruisers and soldiers."

This is language not readily misunderstood, and means, in fine, that the church is to be made the grand recruiting ground for these imperatively needed "well-drilled soldiers." We are a great country, and it would not answer upon any account that we should play the part of a humble and a little one.

"Women like fighting," says this preacher to the boys. What have white-ribboners to respond to so loose and mischievous a general statement as that? Said Frances W. Leiter, National superintendent of the department of physical culture, in her last annual report: "The increasing popular demand among boys for the introduction of military training in schools is to be deplored. Its tendency to displace physical discipline, more comprehensive in character, is a detriment to the progress of this work, as well as an unfortunate influence in favor of war, when the children should be trained to believe that the interests of the nation can be better served by settling difficulties as far as possible through arbitration. This organization of women should bring its influence to bear against this innovation in our schools."

The whole of the extended report of Hannah J. Bailey, National superintendent of the department of peace and arbitration, gives evidence of an activity along this line that will not allow white-ribboners, at least, to rest under the aspersion that "women like fighting"; while, again, the declaration of the general officers of the National W. C. T. U. at the late Cleveland Convention upon Boys' Brigades and military drills in public schools and colleges, after reaffirming their belief in the wisdom of such a training of the young "as will make them despise physical combat, and will lift them to a plane where the weapons are arguments, parliamentary usage and law, all of these having above them the sword of the Spirit," concludes by saying, "We call upon all good people to bear witness to the consistency of this course of action on our part, and to the earnestness with which we are trying to build into the character of boys and girls, youths and maidens, those pure principles and habits which mean soldiership in His army who is the Prince of Peace."

An appropriate companion "fighting sermon" to that of Chaplain Edmunson, just considered, was one delivered in Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, by A. J. F. Behrends, D. D. It was entitled, "The Pauline Doctrine of the Sword," being called out by the late trolley line troubles in the city named. "There are prophets among us," he says, "who preach the gospel of non-resistance, who go so far as to tell me that I have no right to defend myself or my home, that I must love the criminal out of his brutality, and kiss his hand even when he smites mine and me. I have no patience with the lugubrious piety of these advocates whose program would surrender the world to the devil and his agents. The doctrine is diabolical. It is not the doctrine of the Bible. It has its vision of universal peace, when swords shall be beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks. But that vision contemplates a period when swords and spears are no longer needed, because all men know and love the Lord."

Now, will the Reverend Doctor tell us how long it will probably take, under the prevailing administration of "bayonets and gatling guns," which he so stoutly upholds, before those weapons, and the swords and spears shall be no longer needed, "because all men know and love the Lord." This teacher, it seems to me, is looking too far off. I would invite him to go back to the second century of our era and read the words of Justin Martyr as to what did happen with those who practised the Lord's doctrine in this regard, for he says: "We who were filled with war and mutual slaughter and every wickedness, have each through the whole earth, changed our warlike weapons—our swords into plowshares and our spears into instruments of tillage—and we cultivate piety, righteousness, philanthropy, faith and hope, which we have from the Father himself, through Him who was crucified."

Dr. Behrends scouts such a doctrine as that he has no right to defend himself or his home, undoubtedly preferring the position of Dr. Buckley, who, in relating a personal experience of threatened assault, said: "The writer himself carried a revolver, which in case of necessity would have been used with all possible accuracy of aim." But this "cowardice" which friend Behrends repudiates and deems "diabolical" and "not the doctrine of the Bible," was it not shown to be the consistent practice of the primitive Christians, as attested by a multitude of witnesses? For instance, this of Tertullian, a century after Justin Martyr: "No one gives the name of sheep to those who fall in battle with arms in hand, and while repelling force with force; but only to those who are slain, yielding themselves up in their own place of duty with patience, rather than fighting in self-defense. In short, as Zechariah says, 'They roll as sacred stones,' and not like soldiers fight. Stones are they, even foundation stones, upon which we are ourselves edified—'built,' as St. Paul says, 'upon the foundation of the apostles,' who, like consecrated stones, were rolled up and down exposed to the attack of all men."

"The Pauline doctrine of the sword," like the alleged Pauline doctrine against woman's preaching, has done, I do believe, great disservice to Christianity. It was said by Paul of the power of the magistrate, that "he beareth not the sword in vain," yet, though the power of Pharaoh and the power of Cyrus were made to perform the purposes of the Almighty, the Israelite had no proper place in the warring camp of either the Egyptian or the Persian. The complete equipment and defence of the Christian remains to be the "sword of the spirit," and he is not to train with the world's warring weapons, seeing that his Captain has said, "My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world then would my servants fight." Having referred to Paul in connection with woman's preaching, I only add that while his opposition to her out-of-place babbling or speaking is evident, he would not have prescribed, as he does, how she should appear when engaged in the solemn service of prophesying if he held the doctrine that she had not the qualification and was not open to the divine call thereto.

I feel unwilling to dismiss this discourse of Pastor Behrends without referring to a quotation which he gives with approval from a work of the Duke of Argyle. "We may confidently affirm, then, that all theories, whether of religion or ethics, which disparage the military instinct or which fail to grasp the universal fact that every existing civilization rests ultimately on a military organization, are theories which have no practical application to the condition of humanity as it now exists, or as it ever has existed, so far as is historically known to us."

Well, if the civilization which was of this proprietary province of Pennsylvania two hundred years ago may be dissociated from the "existing civilization" of the British kingdom as a whole, I should say that it is a historic fact of practical application that during the space of nearly seventy years after the foundation of the province by William Penn, that is to say, during the time that his equable Christian maxims and laws of government prevailed in the council and assembly—the commonwealth neither rested upon nor was backed by any military organization; no soldier with his gun, nor battery of cannon, nor troop of sabered cavalry was known, no severer exponent of the sword of state and of him who bore it was seen than the non-uniformed constable with his staff.

That doctrine of the sword which was of Constantine, Cloris and Charlemagne, Paul the Apostle never knew, for in leaving off the "old man," Saul, when he "breathed out threatenings and slaughter," became transformed thence into the "new man in Christ Jesus," breathing the word of peace to his brethren, "Be not overcome of evil but overcome evil with good." This is the revived evangel which the professing church needs to learn anew, and what if it be proclaimed by them who in times past have been called no preachers, but who now may say, "The Lord gave the word, the women who published it were a great host." What such as these are striving to do is to lay those evil spirits still unmortified by the state, the liquor devil, the tobacco fiend, the unclean spirit of impurity, the gambling and lottery demons, the giants of brutality and animalism, that hidden shape which shuns the light of heaven, the oath bound secret lodge. These, the enemies of our peace, are the allies of the world, and they it is that make war, for the apostle James, making inquisition of this very matter, says: "From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members?"

A TEMPERANCE LESSON FROM A DEW-DROP.

Does the tiny dew-drop, hidden
In the calyx of the flower,
Dream what sudden transformation
Placed it in the thunder-shower?

Does it dream as on it thunders
In the cataract's wild roar,
That its aggregated brethren
Are a power ever more?

So we know not what a power
From beginnings small may grow,
How significant our influence,
Takes eternity to show.

Then let every sister, brother,
In fraternity's strong chain,
Help to win another over
That the temperance cause may gain.

Say a word to those around you,
Say a many, say them oft.
They shall all like dew-drops glisten
While God bears them on aloft.

And increased the stream flows onward,
Bearing opposition down,
Till at last an ocean fullness
Of success their efforts crown.

"TOES OUT, JES' LIKE ME!"

It was growing dark. The autumn day had been delightful; and now, "the tender twilight with its crimson cheek, leaned on the breast of evening." A few belated teams were struggling toward home; but for the most part the dingy streets were deserted, save by the wretched slaves that fling their time and lives away in the black abyss of drink.

A bright gas light revealed a touching and suggestive picture, through the wide open doors of a largely patronized corner grocery, in one of the worst localities of the city. It was a curious and pathetic scene. There was a wild confusion of "glasses and bottles, pipes and gazeteers, as if the table even itself was drunk." Some eight or ten poor, miserable hangers-on of the dram-shop were grouped for their nightly carnival—in common parlance, regular "old bummers," with their puffed cheeks and bleared eyes, and faces blazoned with vicious heraldry.

Presently a dingy side door opened, and in bounded a bright, blue-eyed little girl, scarcely four years old. She ran behind the counter, where her father was just answering the call for "drinks all round." As soon as he seated himself, little "Posey" (that was what they called her) capered about his feet, clambered into his lap, kissed his great burly face, and toyed with his unkempt, bristly hair. She would occasionally dart away in answer to some beck or call from one of the company, for little "Posey" was a pet with every one of these poor deluded victims of drink. Once they, too, were innocent children, as blithe and as artless as she.

All at once the scene changed. "Posey" had inaugurated a new game. Obedient to her summons, every man of them had joined in the circle, in the center of which stood little "Posey" issuing her orders. "Toes out, jes' like me!" was the first command. Immediately eleven pairs of big, clumsy feet, with big clumsy boots, did their best to "toe out," all the while watching their little kindergarten teacher with tacit obedience. Then there was a series of marchings and counter-marchings, not with soldier-like precision, it is true, but with implicit attention to orders.

And now the circle is formed again, and the order comes from Posey, "Fold your little hands!" and, suiting the action to the word, her own little mites of hands are placed in reverent attitude of devotion. This was a grain too much for big Jake, and he was about to slip out of the ring, but Posey's eager entreaty prevailed, and he "stood it like a man," repeating with all the rest, the little kindergarten prayer after the tiny child-teacher, word for word:

"Father, we thank Thee for the night,
And for the pleasant morning light;
For rest and food and loving care,
And all that makes the day so fair.
Help us to do the things we should,
To be to others kind and good,
In all we do in work or play,
To grow more loving every day."

By this time a large group of curious lookers-on had gathered at the open doorway. There was nothing of rude hilarity, but a grave thoughtfulness came into those hardened faces, as if the memories of better days and early childhood years were flooding the heart. Who shall say what may be the result of little Posey's kindergarten in the corner grocery? For, it is true, that in the man whose childhood has known caresses there is always a fibre of memory that can be touched to gentle issues.

The work of the kindergarten does not stop in the school room. It reaches back into the dreary, desolate homes of vice and of crime. It is a ministry for untold good in these homes. Every little kindergarten child becomes a missionary. "In old days there were angels who came and took men by the hand and led them away from the city of destruction; a hand is put in theirs, which leads them forth gently toward a calm and bright land, so that they look no more backward; and the hand may be a little child's."

Little blue-eyed Posey may be an evangel of blessing in the corner grocery. It is not likely that any other evangelist, however consecrated, could have turned a corner grocery into a prayer-meeting, even for a brief interval. Little blue-eyed Posey did it. It was a blossom from the kindergarten.—Selected.

WHAT A COMMA DID.

It pays to be careful and the value of care in little things is well shown in this item from the Youth's Instructor:

There was a time when the punctuation marks as now used in common print were not known, and as the result it was often more or less difficult to arrive at the exact meaning of the writer; and to avoid this the points were introduced.

Of course, about the smallest and apparently the most insignificant of them all is the comma, but its misuse is often the cause of very annoying mistakes, as well as loss of money. It should be the aim of those now in school to learn thoroughly how to use this little mark, and never be guilty of making a mistake like the following, an account of which we read not long ago:

It seems that some twenty years or so ago, when the United States by its Congress was making a tariff bill, one of the sections enumerated what articles should be admitted free of duty. Among the many articles specified were "all foreign fruit-plants," etc., meaning plants imported for transplanting, propagation, or experiment. The engrossing clerk in copying the bill accidentally changed the hyphen in the compound word, "fruit-plants," to a comma, making it read "all foreign fruit, plants," etc.

As the result of this simple mistake, for a year, or until Congress could remedy the blunder, all the oranges, lemons, bananas, grapes, and other fruits were admitted free of duty.

This little mistake, which any one would be liable to make, yet which could have been avoided by carefulness, cost the government not less than two million dollars. A pretty costly comma that.

Dear Boys and Girls:—It was temperance Sunday in the Sabbath-school. The teacher of a certain class of bright boys had asked, "How many have signed the temperance pledge?" Two or three raised their hands but the other half dozen boys did not respond.

One of them, perhaps thinking he must say something, remarked, "Oh, I wouldn't sign a pledge," then turning to another boy said emphatically, "You'll be sorry you ever signed a pledge!" Some of the others who hadn't signed added their opinion to the same effect. The little pledge signer began to look worried, and gazed anxiously at the teacher, as if to beg her to help him explain.

The teacher knew what was passing in his mind and was glad of the opportunity to strengthen the temperance boys in their resolve and to let the others know what they would miss in not taking this decisive step.

"You have not signed the pledge," she said earnestly, "because you are afraid to make a promise; because you think it will bind you sometime when you are tempted to drink or smoke or swear and other boys are coaxing you to do these things; because you think you will be 'behind the times' if you do not join in these things. Now, I want to tell you that these boys who have signed this promise and pledged themselves not to drink, smoke or swear, are as far ahead of you who have not as the boy who is through school is ahead of the A B C scholar. They are the ones who are keeping up with the times, and you will be the ones who are behind. They are ready for every step ahead in the procession of life. In olden times the habit of drinking prevailed among the educated and rich men; clergymen and leaders often drank to excess and nothing was thought of it. In these times a man who does such a thing is looked down upon, and a minister who gets drunk would not be in his pulpit long. Not to drink is the fashion in the best society.

"You know too, about the bad effects of alcohol and tobacco. You have learned about them in school, have you not?"

Here she was interrupted by a chorus of "oh yes," from the interested class. And one of the boys remarked, "Isn't it just as good if I promise myself not to drink?"

"Certainly not," answered the teacher. "When you make a promise you want to make one that will stand. You must promise God as well as yourself. For your own strength is not enough. I think some of you look on the pledge as a 'bug-a-boo' or something to be afraid of. That is all wrong. It is a guardian angel and a protection. Instead of being a chain on your wrists it sets you free from evil habits, God helping you. It keeps you from ever being a slave to the power of drink or tobacco.

"It is a very simple thing to sign the pledge if you are ready for it. And why not place this great protection about you? How many boys here never want to become drunkards or slaves to tobacco? All say you do not. How many promise not to use intoxicating drinks, including wine, beer and cider, nor tobacco and profanity, God helping you? Every one answers yes. Now, would it not be a good plan to make this a red-letter day, to record your earnest act by writing it down on this printed bit of paper and keeping it as a memorial?

"Of course it would, and I shall hope to see these pledges all signed next Sunday. Take them home with you; think and pray over them, remembering always it is God helping you."

I think all those boys will sign, don't you? I am sure, too, that their teacher will never be content until they do.

PREPARATIONS FOR AN OCEAN VOYAGE.

A number of delegates to the World's Convention in London next June have asked us for a practical description of baggage and wardrobe necessary for the ocean voyage and the continental travel. In reply we have prepared from our own experience a list of articles which are indispensable on such a journey.

No more clothes, rather less, than for six or seven weeks at home, should be taken. Estimate every article as so much weight and care. The following would be our outfit, if we were going:

1. One steamer trunk or canvas bag with a lock, not more than three feet long and twelve inches high, so that it will slip under the berth.

2. One light-weight hand bag that will hold toilet articles and a change of clothing.

3. One linen bag that will hold anything and everything, from a steamer rug to a complete wardrobe on occasion, plus guide books, souvenirs, etc.

4. A strong, but not heavy, umbrella that will answer for sunshade and walking stick, and for this purpose should have a turned handle to be easily grasped or hung over the wrist.

5. A pair of field or strong opera glasses in a strapped case to be hung from the shoulders. These are invaluable in Switzerland for mountain view and also well-nigh indispensable on the ocean, in sighting distant steamers and schools of porpoise, from the deck.

6. A large, warm blanket shawl or robe. This should be of sufficient size to throw over the steamer chair and entirely envelope the form from chin to toe. Large headed black or safety pins should be carried to pin the shawl or rug securely, for the sea winds are merciless. It is no longer necessary to purchase steamer chairs, as the best steamers, including the Berlin, carry them to rent at the low price of fifty cents for the trip, but do not forget a long roll pillow with a dark covering and tapes on the end for tying to the chair. Aside from its comfort as a head-rest, it helps you to distinguish your own chair at a glance.

7. A visor cap in a becoming shade and a medium thick veil are necessary for the frequent deck promenade. The visor cap is better than a hood, because it protects the eyes and is of sufficient warmth on a summer trip for any one except an invalid.

8. A warm coat is essential. A long wool ulster is a great comfort, but a cast-off winter cloak will do.

9. A strong chatelaine bag with secure pockets is a real convenience, but may be dispensed with if the dressmaker can be persuaded to put a deep pocket in the skirt.

10. A valuable equipment for the stateroom is a shoe bag on a small scale. A piece of pretty linen or cretonne a yard in length is sufficient. Make it double. Insert a whalebone or wire at top and bottom to hold it flat. Sew small loops on each of the four corners and in the middle of each side, and have a package of small nails in a sealed envelope tucked away in one of the pockets to tack through the loops. Place the bag just over the head of your berth in the stateroom, so that without rising in the morning (which is the usual time for sea-sickness) you can reach up and secure what you wish. There should be two rows of pockets in this bag. The lower row should be large and deep enough for shoes, night clothes, books, etc., and the upper row a series of small, shallow pockets for toilet articles—brush, comb, pocket handkerchiefs, hairpins, medicines, smelling salts, etc. As soon as you get to your stateroom tack up this bag and fill it with every article you are likely to need on the voyage. If securely fastened, no rolling of the ship can dislodge it or throw out its contents. It will prove almost your greatest comfort on board, for without it, you will necessarily be diving into valises and trunk and reaching under the berth for runaway articles.

The only other article that requires description is number three—the linen bag. This is not to be fashioned after the intricate linen shawl bag. The making of it is simplicity itself. Take a piece of firm, dark colored linen (the narrow pin-stripe is the prettiest, or a plain colored denim will answer) hem both the ends and the edges. Into the hem at the sides draw a fine rope or strong cord, a half yard longer than the cloth; knot the cord heavily at the ends and your "bag" is completed. So far you have only a strip of cloth; now for the packing. Place the cloth upon the floor or bed; put smoothly upon it, first, your steamer rug or shawl; on top of this your steamer dress and coat; then add books, slippers, or any small package. Take one end of the linen and cover the contents, then roll up tightly, leaving the other end out to fold over the roll. Strap it with a strong shawl-strap and you have a neat bundle that you will not be ashamed of. The great advantage of this kind of a "bag" is that you can make it large or small to accommodate your parcels and also that its weight is nominal; as you will often be obliged to carry it yourself, this is an item. Above all things avoid our large, heavy leather valises and sachels, as their own weight often equals the weight of their contents, and they are entirely out of place in foreign travel.

This completes the list of necessary baggage and external furnishings, which are far more important for comfort than anything else. As to dress and underclothing for the steamer the one prerequisite is that they be warm and old. Salt water is apt to surprise you at any moment when on deck, and it generally leaves a stain. But if you wear only old clothes, you will not mind. Winter flannels are not out of season on the ocean in June, and absolutely necessary to health and comfort on deck, where every passenger should spend at least ten out of the twenty-four hours.

Just here accept a word of exhortation concerning the out-of-door life. It will seem an insurmountable task many mornings to rise, dress and crawl upon the deck. Lassitude and nausea will bid you recline and "be miserable," but grit and duty will aid in preparing your toilet by easy stages, and in gaining access to the fresh, salt air which in ten minutes will cause you to forget your "droobles" and put you into a blissful attitude to yourself in general and the billowy world in particular. An excellent way to force yourself up early is to make an appointment with the stewardess before the steamer fairly leaves the port for a morning salt water bath. She will register you on her list and prepare the bath for you at the hour specified, when you will receive such a relentless summons that you will hardly dare disobey. The best possible antidote for lassitude is an effort. You can make your way to the bath-room in your flannel sleeping gown, carrying your day clothes with you. After a delightful plunge into the bracing salt water (either hot or cold), you will be revived for the dressing operation, and will be so anxious for the deck that you will tarry only long enough in your stuffy cabin to snatch your coat, cap and rug, and cast a pitying glance at your less courageous roommates lingering in their berths.

As to the balance of the wardrobe, each traveler will suit her personal taste and purse, but a description of a model outfit for a six weeks' tour may not be out of place. As we said in the beginning, the fewer clothes the better. The care of an expensive or extensive wardrobe will eat up many possible pleasures in the trip. Not a moment should be uselessly or aimlessly wasted in this delightful six weeks' tour. The eight days of steamer life will so fully rest you that you will be ready for any task as soon as you land, so do not be cumbered with unnecessary "things."

Laundrying is so cheaply and promptly done in Europe that you will need but two, or at the most, three changes of linen and hose. Every good hotel (and Dr. Lunn's party uses no other) will return your clothes to you fresh and sweet in from ten to twenty hours.

Aside from the old, warm dress for the steamer, which may be carried in the linen bag for mountain climbing in Switzerland, there should be a new, natty, tailor-made wool suit for general traveling and sight-seeing, and a light silk waist to match for evening wear and table d' hotê. A muslin or flannelette waist or jacket will be found desirable for negligé. While this is positively sufficient for such a short trip, many will add a black or colored India silk for dress occasions.

Shoes carefully selected, or better still, made to order, are a prime source of comfort. No extra pair need be carried if the ones worn are new and well broken to the feet. Slippers to those accustomed to them will be appreciated in the evening after a long day of sight-seeing or walking.

In another article we will discuss some preventative and remedial agents for sea-sickness, although we are prone to believe that our special delegation will escape this particular malady.

A PROHIBITION HERO.

In the person of Chief Khama the "Dark Continent" furnishes an example of Christian heroism that may well challenge the admiration of the world. For whatever the view taken of the liquor question in South Africa or anywhere else both "Christian" and "heathen" can but admire the courage and persistence with which the Kaffir chief is endeavoring to protect his race from the curse of strong drink; "Christian" and "heathen" alike must in their hearts do homage to the nobility of character which amid the most powerful opposing influences remains true to God and to conscience—even if that nobility be enshrined in the dusky form of a "benighted" Bamangwato chief.

It is a struggle heroic and pathetic that Khama is making. On one side a man born and bred in darkest heathenism, without political influence and unfamiliar with the subtleties of the great rum oligarchy, loved and obeyed by his own people, it is true, but opposed by many of them in his prohibition policy; on the other hand a chartered company, avaricious and unscrupulous, knowing well how to manipulate the political machine, and having back of it all the accessories of civilization and the greed of a mighty empire ever eager to extend its territory and increase its power. What a travesty is the situation on the "Protectorate" which exercises jurisdiction in that territory! What a commentary on the boasted Christianity of the parent government!

The recent visit of Khama to Cape Town by invitation of the Imperial government was the occasion for much ventilating of the liquor question, and the Chief was the recipient of much attention from the newspapers. A joint deputation of temperance societies, prominent among which was the W. C. T. U., waited upon this unique prohibition champion with words of welcome and encouragement. Replying to the address through his interpreter, the Rev. Mr. Moffat, Khama said: "I rejoice greatly in your words, my friends. I have no difficulty in keeping liquor from my own people, but my difficulty is that the white people will have liquor, and I do not know how I am to succeed in carrying out the law. I have been almost in despair on the subject on account of this; but so far as my own people are concerned I never will give in. I began when I was quite a boy, and determined that I would have nothing to do with liquor, and one of my indunas present, who is an older man than myself, is one of those who has supported me in this matter, and I have others who are faithful to me, and who are doing their very utmost to assist me in the entire prohibition of liquor in our country. The one difficulty is that we have white people there who have another government, and I cannot control them. I feel I shall go back much stronger, and greatly cheered and comforted by your words."

And in an interview reported by the Cape Times, he said among other things: "There are no canteens in my country as far as I can help it. I cannot, however, help the fact that drink is sold at the police camp at Macloutsie.

There is also a canteen just on the border at the junction of the Crocodile and Ngodwane rivers, which is a great eyesore to me. So far as I have power, no canteens are allowed to exist, nor native beer to be brewed."

The "one difficulty" which this uncivilized native chief has to contend with in his efforts to carry the principles of Christianity into government is the unchristian customs of a Christian civilization! "Better fifty years of Europe than a cycle of Cathay." And yet the question comes—which has reached the higher plane in the upward climb, the "benighted" African chief or the Christian European, who in the name of civilization would thrust upon his weaker brothers the greatest stumbling block to material progress and moral development that the world has ever known?

One South African newspaper hopes that Khama, "who has, of course, only the sense of a native," will not be so stupid as to imagine that he "enjoys the sympathy of the white population of the country," and thinks it would be "more Christian" to make him understand that "the few teetotalers and negrophilists who paid court to him at Cape Town exercise no political power, and that their influence is as good as nil."

This is hardly consistent with the further statement that "if Khama perseveres in withholding strong drink from his people, he will win not only the approval of the Cape Town teetotalers, but what is worth more, that of Mr. Rhodes also." Now if the political influence of Mr. Cecil Rhodes is "just as good as nil," nil is very good indeed, as all the world knows. Probably that influence had a great deal to do with the recent reply of the secretary to the petition forwarded to the Queen last October by the South African Temperance Alliance, which it is declared her Majesty "was pleased to receive very graciously, and to direct that the Alliance be told that there is no intention of departing from the previous policy of supporting the Chief Khama in his opposition to the introduction of the liquor traffic into his country."

Khama's reply to the question, "Why abolish native beer which does more good than harm?" contains the kernel of prohibition philosophy; it is Christian temperance in a nutshell, "Because people always get drunk when the beer is made." Stripped of all the sophistries which the governments of England and America have thrown around the liquor question, this truth stands out so clearly that even the barbarian of South Africa may read, —as long as intoxicating beverages are manufactured so long will "the people get drunk," American and English people no less than Kaffir people.

We doubt not that the brave stand taken by Chief Khama will tend to awaken Christian nations to the iniquity of the "rum and missionary" policy, and cause them to recognize the right of native Africans to resist the approach, upon the heels of civilization, of that evil which is already in such marked degree draining their own life-blood.

ONE RESULT OF THE RELIGIOUS PARLIAMENT.

A vast majority of the features of the Columbian year as celebrated at Chicago are, after the lapse of the intervening months, as if they had never been. This cannot be said, however, of the Congress of Religions. That mighty wave of compared thought is yet moving on in the minds of the nations, arousing comment, commendation and censure.

The concentration of attention has been regarding the probable effect of the Congress upon the work of Christian missionaries in the foreign field, and the Barrows Lectureships have perhaps been the storm center about which have gathered the most conflicting opinions.

Behind the generous woman's hand that established the Barrows Lectureships of Comparative Religions (Mrs. Caroline E. Haskell), was a heart of faith in the religion of Christ, a faith typical of that which dared to push the Congress of Religions from dream to reality and of that which sees a great future good resulting therefrom.

Fearlessness is coexistent with belief, fear with unbelief, and those ambassadors of Christ who tremble because Confucius has had a calm hearing by Christians in a Christian land, and who prophesy only evil as a result of further "comparison of views" are tortured simply by a canker worm of unbelief, conquering power of the faith they profess, hidden and unsuspected though it be.

Dr. Barrows has just caused to be circulated a leaflet containing the pros and cons of this most interesting subject. Therein appears the views of Christian and pagan regarding the Congress and its fruitage, and the witness is such as ought to rejoice the heart of every laborer in the vineyard.

When Japan and China sat down with Christian America and listened with dispassionate courtesy and reason one to the other, the walls of division between Christendom and heathendom received such blows as irremediably shook their ancient foundations. It can never be forgotten in these foreign fields that Christianity sounded the keynote of that wonderful conference, that Christianity held her own amid controversy and contrast, and that Christian America stood triumphantly Christian, notwithstanding there flocked to her shores the wisdom of the oldest nations of the earth. Note this one brief word of Dr. Henry H. Jessup, D. D., of Beirut: "The Mohammedans, at least, do not think the Parliament a concession to their views, as they have forbidden the introduction of its proceedings into the Turkish Empire."

But there was a blow struck at the efforts of those who toil in foreign lands to preach Christ and Him crucified, and that blow was struck when America's godlessness met Africa's and Asia's barbarism and heathen darkness upon the common platform of the degradation of Midway Plaisance. When foreign tongues made with glib ease the word Chicago synonymous with "whisky" and "American" interchangeable with "devil," while "civilization" (synonymous with "Christian") joined in the drunken revels and satanic orgies with leering applause, the cause of foreign missions received a set-back that might well dishearten the bravest.

What a contrast!—the dignified, imposing scenes of the Congress of Religions where Christianity gave audience to the nations and abated not one whit of her glory; the lurid revelry of the Plaisance, where a Christian nation hobnobbed with and urged to even greater extravagances the follies and sins of unenlightened "heathen."

Farmers are now catching the spirit of federation, which is so marked a feature of the social and political life of the present day. There has been brought about a union of various farmers' organizations, to be known as the National Farmers' Federation of the United States. Some of their aims as set forth in the constitution are: To furnish a means of communication between organizations and between isolated farmers; to provide for a farmer's reading course; to provide for the distribution of such literature as shall lead to better citizenship; and to promote a better understanding of the relation of agriculture to other pursuits. This last aim is especially commendable and suggestive. A study by farmers of the relation of agriculture to the liquor business, for instance, would give wonderful momentum to the cause of Prohibition.

"Is it not an unseemly survival of the gladiatorial shows of the pagan amphitheater that we permit men to appear on a stage or in an arena to strike at, pommel or gouge each other as though they were brutes? In the olden time the thumbs of the pagan dames were pointed down when the contest of the arena went on to the death. Woman's heaven-uplifted hand ought now to signify to man that such brutal contests should cease." The above sentences occur in a protest by Josiah W. Leeds, of Philadelphia, following the arrest of the principals in a disgraceful sparring exhibition at the winter circus in that city, for which they were arrested and held for trial at the present term of court. The same inhabitant of the city founded by Penn, asks relief in a second appeal from the unseemliness of the glorification of brutality in permitting the world's champion prize fighter, Corbett, to display the "manly art" even in a "friendly set-to" upon the stage of a theater. The hope is expressed that in the much mooted reform municipality, there will be opportunity "to make a law and an ordinance that public fisticuffs of any kind are banished by a perpetual interdict as having no place in our civilization, and as altogether non-conformable with our profession of Christianity."

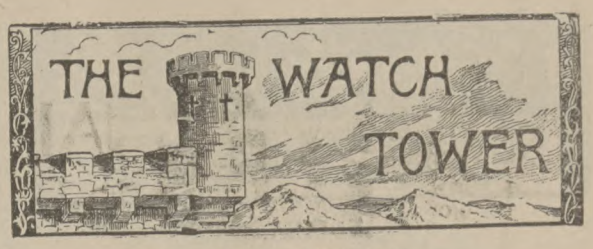
It recently fell to our lot to be in conversation with a pair of distinguished bishops. They were both gifted and excellent men of wide outlook and endeavor. The advice given to our English comrade as the outcome of their interview was as follows: "Madam, you have an undoubted mission to the women of this country, and that is to teach them how to modulate their voices"; while the counsel of the other bishop was, "Try to teach women to be less frivolous." We pondered much why these things were; why these two noble leaders had nothing to say about what we are really trying to do, nor even a question to ask concerning it, and we concluded that it must fall to the lot of men so influential and distinguished to be entertained by women less thoughtful than the average. There is a lesson here for laymen who wish to see the leaders in ecclesiastical and reform work kept in touch with the rank and file, for it is the universal custom as soon as a minister or a specialist in any line of philanthropic effort, a statesman or a politician—becomes distinguished, to put them in the homes of wealth where the things they see and the talk they hear tend to make them conservative and fond of luxury. May not this fact partly explain the other regrettable fact that so few of our chief prelates are at the front of the temperance, labor, suffrage or any other reform? For we are all, more than we are aware, the slaves of our environment. Doubtless there are plenty of frivolous women in the world, but it bodes no good to advance movements in the church when the impression made upon a bishop's mind is that frivolity is the feminine characteristic which most needs attention from women of progressive minds.



It's wiser being good than bad;
It's safer being meek than fierce;
It's fitter being sane than mad.
My own hope is, a sun will pierce
The thickest cloud earth ever stretched;
That after Last returns the First
Though a wide compass round be fetched;
That what began best can't end worst,
Nor what God blessed once, prove accurst.

A young man, who was being examined preparatory to uniting with the church, was asked, "Under whose preaching were you converted?" "Under nobody's preaching," was his reply; "I was converted under my mother's practising."

To know how to be ready—a great thing—a precious gift and one that implies calculation, grasp and decision. To be always ready, a man must be able to cut a knot, for everything cannot be untied; he must know how to disengage what is essential from the detail in which it is enwrapped, for everything cannot be equally considered; in a word, he must be able to simplify his duties, his business and his life. To know how to be ready is to know how to start. It is astonishing how all of us are generally cumbered up with the thousand and one hindrances and duties which are not such, but which nevertheless wind us about with their spider threads and fetter the movement of our wings. It is the lack of order which makes us slaves; the confusion of to-day discounts the freedom of to-morrow.—Henri Frederic Amiel.

A bright little lady somewhat acquainted with our work and its colloquialisms recently referred to an enthusiastic temperance friend as a "white-ribbonist." Why not? Who ever heard of a "sciencer"?

My readers will doubtless all recall the doughty Quaker who felicitously remarked to his better half, "All the world's queer excepting thee and me, Hannah, and thee is a little queer." His match has been found in a Scotch elder who was asked how the kirk was getting along. He answered, "Aweel, we had four hundred members, then we had a diveesion and there were only two hundred left; then a disruption and only ten of us left; then we had a heresy trial, and now only me and Brother Duncan are left, and I hae great doots o' Duncan's orthodoxy."

Godey's Lady's Book has been a household magazine for more than half a century, but not even to this day is it generally known that to its literary editor, Mrs. Sarah J. Hale, do we owe our national Thanksgiving Day. During her literary life of sixty years she did not cease to urge this festival as a national holiday, setting forth its advantages not only in her books and magazines, but in personal correspondence to every successive President of the United States and governors of all the states. At length her remarkable effort was rewarded. As the result of a personal appeal to President Lincoln, at the close of the Civil War, the last Thursday of November, 1864, was observed as a national thanksgiving under the President's official proclamation. This date, however, must not be remembered as the first occasion of the kind, for in 1789 President Washington appointed the last Thursday of November for public thanksgiving on the establishment of the national constitution. It is not to be wondered at that Mrs. Hale's appeal had become so habitual that in every succeeding year up to her death in 1879 she made the same request of each President and with such favorable result that the holiday is now an integral part of our government. On Duty's child readers will be delighted to know that Mrs. Hale was also the author of "Mary's Little Lamb" which is usually given in the school-books without her name.

INDIANA.

BLACK CAP REMOVED.

The fifth attempt of the W. C. T. U. of Indiana to obtain a scientific temperance instruction law has been successful.

Our superintendent, Miss Lodie Reed, has been a faithful watcher and worker. To her, with God's blessing, we owe the successful termination of this work. The white-ribboners throughout the state have responded to her call, circulating the petitions, bringing home influence to bear upon representatives at critical points in the passage of the bill, and above all uniting in prayer at the appointed hour. God through her has given us success in this first step, but eternal vigilance is still needed in order to obtain the necessary text books, etc.

The progress through our legislature of another bill, championed by the Christian Endeavorers of our state, has been watched with eagerness by our white-ribboners. It has many good features, but the one which states that the signatures to a petition of two-thirds of the voters of a precinct can exclude a saloon from a neighborhood, make us hope that the atmosphere of some localities may be purified.

A bill to raise the age of consent from fourteen to eighteen, to our humiliation, failed to pass.

The World's Petition is being circulated by our organization. Here and there we find a member of the L. T. L. who successfully circulated it. The young hearts are fired with enthusiasm and the young feet are being dedicated to the Master's service.

Northern Indiana is kept awake by our lecturers. Our workers all awakened enthusiasm—Mrs. Calkins in Miami county, at Red Key, in Morgan county and other places; Mrs. Baxter in Rensselaer, Roachdale, New Ross and other places; Miss Frances Griffin at Ambia and Mulberry; Mother Trish at Alexandria, Lapel, Warren, Marion and elsewhere; Mrs. Whiston and Mrs. McWhirter at West Newton; Miss Dickson at Westfield. Mrs. Nichols delivered seven lectures in Marion county the first week of February. Mrs. Thompson and Mrs. Ellen Denny have also been in the field. Mrs. Cammack, our recording secretary, delivered lectures in the interest of scientific temperance instruction. Portland reports her successful work there.

The annual conventions were held in many counties during the winter months. That of Princeton was reported as a great success.

The superintendent of flower mission work of Morgan county reports twenty thousand pages of literature distributed.

The temperance Sunday-school of Greensburg has outgrown its quarters. The mayor and council granted them the use of the Firemen's Hall. The mayor visiting the school, commended the work.

Three medal contests in Fairmount netted the union $30.82. An interest in suffrage contests is being awakened.

Freemount W. C. T. U. recently held two public parents' meetings. Heredity and kindred subjects were discussed. A double quartette of married men furnished the music.

The W. C. T. U. of Dana has recently closed two saloons.

The unions throughout our state have agreed to the one dollar membership dues, and many have paid twenty cents per member toward the state debt.

Vanderburgh county some months ago showed signs of awakening that were encouraging. But active members are few though the membership is large.

The white ribbon mission in Evansville is doing good work. The ministers here seem more interested in our organization than formerly. One union in the city supplies eight ministers with The Union Signal. We attribute the awakened interest to the better understanding, thereby gained, of the spirit of our work.

Believing that equal suffrage will ere long be granted, and that an understanding of the political questions of the day is necessary in order to cast the ballot intelligently, some of our members in Evansville have for some time been studying with the light of God's holy word the subjects of finance, taxation and the land question. As their horizon broadens they are inspired with a larger hope for our nation, and realize that God has given us a guide which before was undreamed of.

Touching incidents often reach us which if recorded would encourage our lecturers and evangelists. Several years ago Mrs. Ellen Denny was asked by a minister to visit an humble home in this city which had been made desolate by "King Alcohol." The husband and father signed the pledge which he has since been faithfully keeping. The happy wife still observes the anniversary of the sacred evening which brought light and joy to her home.

PENNSYLVANIA.

MOSAICS.

"A word to the Y's (wise)" not having been sufficient to elicit much information, we concluded to wait until a "more convenient season" occurred for the "Y's letter," and use the material on hand.

Columbia county held its fifteenth semi-annual convention at Millville, February 20 to 22. The spiritual tone of the convention was good throughout. The Light Street Y brought in a number of honoraries who testified by prayer, song and experience of Christ's power to save. The Loyal Temperance Legion work was inspiring. A Demorest contest was held at which Drew Waddell, of Light Street, received the medal and each of the other contestants a Bible. The members of the Loyal Temperance Legion presented each of the delegates with a handsome badge. Mrs. Hammer made a fine address and Mrs. Ellen D. Blair's chalk talk was so well received that she was engaged to return in May. Mrs. Blair gave two addresses in Bloomsburg and one in Berwick after the convention. The Light Street Y's received the banner for largest increase of membership in the Y unions, and Bloomsburg union for largest increase of membership in the W's. One thousand, seven hundred and thirty-five names were secured to the Polyglot Petition in the county.

A new Loyal Temperance Legion with a membership of one hundred has been organized at Bloomsburg. Miss Davis' paper on "Facts" which was read at convention was fine and elicited much applause. Mrs. Mary E. Gearhart, who recently removed from Lycoming to Columbia county was elected county superintendent of evangelistic work. Columbia county is to be congratulated on securing the services of so efficient a worker.

Cumberland County—Carlisle union celebrated their tenth anniversary recently. Dr. Frysinger, pastor of the Methodist church, and who is an honorary member of the union, preached a most able sermon from the text, "Help those women." A report of the ten years' work was read and a liberal collection taken for the benefit of the union, March 1. The Loyal Temperance Legions of Cumberland county held their first conference in Mechanicsburg, which was largely attended by the citizens. Each Legion was represented by delegates and superintendent; the county superintendent being absent, Mrs. Ralston, county president, presided. A county organization was formed and officers elected. A very enthusiastic spirit prevailed throughout the entire convention.

Westmoreland County—Scottdale union in this county is an active working union. At the last county convention, in September, their membership was fifty-nine active members, and they now have a membership of ninety-three active and twenty-nine honorary. They expect to have one hundred active members before the next convention. This union has held a very successful cooking school having a membership of nearly one hundred ladies each afternoon during the course of eight lessons. About one hundred dollars were realized which is to be applied on the erection of a drinking fountain.

Bucks County—Newton union have been sorely bereft of one of their most esteemed members, Mrs. Rachel Wynkoop. A memorial service was held. She was much beloved by all and her death has left a vacancy which will be hard to fill. Yardly held a most successful mothers' meeting; topic, "Obedience." The program as sent us would be hard to excel, and we give a brief outline, hoping it may help other unions.

"Biography of Froebel"; "Does punishment secure obedience?" "What natural rights, if any, has a child which limit the right of parents to exact implicit obedience?" "Is sufficient thought and attention given to teaching respect and reverence in children?" "Explain 'Parents, provoke not your children to wrath'"; "Methods of securing obedience from the larger boys and girls"; "Should children be 'seen and not heard'?" Bucks county should consider itself fortunate in the possession of so faithful a county press superintendent.

Lancaster county—The Millersville Normal School Y is steadily gaining ground. Its meetings are well attended. H. F. Eshleman gave an instructive talk on "Methods of Prohibition" at one meeting; a series of biographies of prominent temperance workers was presented at another, and a "Twenty Word Parliament" was held at another. The average attendance at these meetings has been over one hundred.

Cambria county—Mt. Zion Mission have increased their numbers to twenty-five active and five honoraries. Six public meetings have been held. Morrellville W. C. T. U. meets monthly, and the Y's hold weekly meetings. Both of these unions are active. The county president, Mrs. Ray Luther Barr, is a most energetic and consecrated worker. She has organized unions at Rosedale and at Dale Borough.

Mercer county—The Sharon union have had Volney B. Cushing, Miss C. S. Burnett and Mrs. A. M. Holvey to lecture for them during the past month. Sharpsville unions had Miss Burnett and Mrs. Holvey. Sharpsville W's held a memorial service for Mrs. Woodbridge and Mrs. Lathrap, and held a union public temperance meeting. Millbrook W is making an autograph quilt, and over twelve dollars have already been realized. They are also preparing to hold a franchise contest.

NOTES.

Our state superintendent of health and heredity has prepared a bill requiring physical culture to be taught in schools, and it has been introduced by Senator Andrews.

The state superintendents of soldiers and legislation and petitions have prepared a bill to close the saloons on Memorial Day, which will soon have a hearing.

The Philadelphia W. C. T. U., Mrs. Mary H. Jones, president, held a reception at the dedication of their new headquarters at 1921 Arch street. The decorations were beautiful. Joshua L. Baily, Hon. John Wanamaker, Rev. Dr. Henry McCook and Mr. John Martin, of New York, made able addresses. Miss Elizabeth Russell, of the West Philadelphia union, has been elected state superintendent of mercy, instead of Mrs. Fannie Stearns, who resigned on account of the death of her husband.

Mrs. M. J. Campbell, president of Jefferson county, met with an accident on her return from executive meeting, being thrown from a sleigh.

Mrs. J. A. Yeager, former president of Lehigh county, is now filling the position again, the former president having resigned. Sixteen new unions have been added to our list since last report.

Mrs. J. W. Stevenson, who is widely known and loved throughout the state, and who will be remembered as a former efficient state superintendent of literature, has met with a sad affliction in the death of her father, J. Y. McLean, who was well known for his integrity and Christian character and staunch temperance principles.

Balm union has lost a beloved member, Mrs. Elizabeth Allen.

OHIO.

DEATH OF MISS HENRIETTA B. MONROE.

The angel of death has come into the home of our state president, since our last letter, and taken from it her only remaining daughter, Miss Henrietta Barbara Monroe, the joy and strong right hand of the home circle. She was for two years the state recording secretary of the Ohio union, and resigned the office because of the election of her mother to the office of state president. She was a young woman of rare gifts in many directions, having a very fine voice.

She received the baptism of the Holy Spirit during the Crusade, when all Xenia was deeply stirred, and though she was at the time a school-girl, in her senior year in the High School, all the time she could possibly give to the work was spent in the services of the Crusade bands. From that day until her earthly life closed she found no duty too arduous for her to do for the cause of temperance. No death has been more lamented there. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, state and local, has sustained a great loss.

A beautiful memorial service was held by the local union of Wilmington, in memory of Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap and Miss Henrietta B. Monroe, Sabbath afternoon, March 10. Newark also held a fine memorial service in memory of these promoted comrades, as did many other unions from whom reports have not been received.

SCHOOL SUFFRAGE.

School suffrage is the topic of greatest interest in Ohio this spring. In many cities and towns women have been nominated for members of school boards and are making a vigorous canvass. In Cleveland, Mrs. H. E. Hammond and Mrs. S. M. Perkins, leaders in the white ribbon movement, have been nominated by the Prohibition party and are actively pushing the campaign. Mrs. Hammond writes that three daily papers have opened their columns to her and are trying to help on her election. She is speaking almost every night. No doubt Mrs. Perkins is equally vigilant.

At Springfield Rev. Henrietta G. Moore, for years a most efficient teacher, resisted a nomination in her ward until such persuasions were brought to bear as induced her to sacrifice her own wishes, and she was nominated on a straight Prohibition ticket. Afterward the Populists endorsed her, and there is now a prospect of the Democrats withdrawing their candidate and placing Miss Moore on their ticket. It looks really favorable for her election.

In Athens the women are working with zeal for women on the school board, holding mass-meetings, etc. Everywhere the W. C. T. U. women are the prime movers, and to them all classes of women look for their leaders in this effort.

Wilmington has a large Republican majority and a nomination by that party is the same as an election. Knowing this well, and that it would not do to have their primary nominate men for the school board if women were to have any chance for a place there, the W. C. T. U. determined to press the contest for the women. Two members were to be elected, so two efficient Republican women were selected for candidates, the town canvassed, and the names placed on the Republican ticket. Although very few white ribbon women voted, owing almost entirely to their exertions, the two women candidates selected by them were nominated, the one receiving the highest number of votes exceeding the vote of the highest man on the ticket by one hundred. The Republican member of the legislature, who voted against this bill, and declared he knew not a respectable Republican woman in his county who wanted suffrage, had an object lesson that day of seeing two hundred and fifty-six Republican women cast their ballots in a small primary election, and probably fifty others offer their ballots who were refused the privilege of voting. Woman's power in Wilmington has advanced a long stride.

PHYSICAL CULTURE.

Our National superintendent of this department, Mrs. F. W. Leiter, of Mansfield, has again prepared for the department a valuable envelope of practical leaflets, which all unions would do well to secure. Some of them treat of the much-agitated question, military drill.

Recently the union of Piqua gave a reception to the school board, teachers, ministers and newspaper men in the interest of physical education, at which an excellent address on the subject was made by Miss Effie M. Hecker, who has been for two years past a pupil of Dr. Anderson.

There has been quite an agitation in favor of introducing military drill into the Piqua schools. The W. C. T. U. presented a memorial to the board, protesting against it, and followed it with this reception, given in the Y. M. C. A. parlors. The program consisted of a half hour's talk by Miss Hecker, an exhibition of single school gymnastics and Delsarte posing, i. e., the portrayal of emotions by postures. The last was by way of adding a little of the purely entertaining. The ladies served coffee and cake, and a mandolin quartette played beautifully during the intermissions. The address was in the interest of gymnastics in school—the reasons why it is necessary to have them taught; the effects of the postures of the children; bad air, etc., that produce the poorly developed and often deformed bodies we see so often and the effects of gymnastic work to remedy all this. The audience was delighted; the ladies congratulate themselves on the success of the evening. There is a good prospect of the board introducing physical education into the school next year. Miss Hecker has some classes in physical culture in that city.

Y. M. C. A. BUILDING AT NEWARK.

The state convention of the Y. M. C. A., recently held in Newark, started a real boom for a Y. M. C. A. building, the cost of which will be $25,000. The W. C. T. U. offered the first subscription made, $50, and its members are among the most active on the soliciting committee. Miss Anna Pollock, our state recording secretary, has pledged herself to raise $100. The fund has within a very few weeks reached $12,000. This convention was a great uplift to Newark.

BOYS' DEMOREST CONTEST.

Miss Pollock, our state secretary, is a great success in planning and executing boys' contests. One recently given, arranged and instructed entirely by herself, was the finest ever held in Newark. Twenty-five boys between the ages of eight and thirteen, sang the stirring song, "Saloons Must Go." The six contestants were from the High School and the presiding officer of the occasion was the chairman of the senior ciass. The judges were all men of commanding influence. The evangelistic services in the churches closed at eight o'clock that their people might attend the contest. Pretty booklets tied with white ribbon were provided for all the boys and a dozen white carnations, tied with white ribbon, were given the second best on the judge's slate. All having part in the program wore white carnations. While the judges were out preparing their verdict the six contestants sang, "Turning and Twisting," of the Silver Lake Quartette. Miss Pollock completely won the hearts of these six boys, and she found it a golden opportunity to sow good seed. The mother of one of them, an excellent woman of real influence, came into the W. C. T. U. meeting and asked to join, led to do so by the interest of her son.

JENNIE SMITH IN KENT.

Jennie Smith, our beloved National railroad evangelist, has been holding a very successful series of meetings in Kent, lasting two weeks and four days. Over one thousand persons have signed the pledge and put on the white button or blue ribbon of the Railroad Temperance Association. The junior members will be formed into a Loyal Temperance Legion. Sixty members were added to the W. C. T. U. Many souls were converted.

The noontide shop meetings were a pronounced success. Two all-day meetings were held. Cottage prayer-meetings have been organized.

Two women have been nominated for the school board. Petitions are in circulation asking that women be permitted to vote on local option this spring. Kent has never had such an awakening before, and the wish is expressed by men and women, "God bless Jennie Smith."

ORGANIZATION.

Mrs. Henrietta Skelton was in Ohio actively at work from the time of the National Convention until the middle of March. She has organized eight unions with a membership of one hundred and eighty-nine, and added sixty-four new members to old unions. Her unions are well instructed and have made a good start. Ohio is deeply grateful to her for her work and we hope she may do as well for other states.

Miss C. S. Burnett, for years one of Ohio's best state organizers, has recently returned from an absence of a year or more and resumed her work in the state. In her first week out she lectured six times, held three day meetings, addressed four Sunday-schools and one Christian Endeavor, formed two unions of twenty-five members each, three L. T. L's of over seventy-five members, and one Anti-Cigarette League, all in her own county. District and county presidents wishing the help of an organizer, cannot do better than secure Miss Burnett. Her address is Brockway, Ohio.

AKRON.

Akron union, wishing to continue its Noon Rest for working girls, gave a reception to all interested in this enterprise at its rooms, from two to five o'clock on a certain afternoon, and bring such offerings in money as they wished to contribute. Officers and members were present to receive all visitors; chocolate and wafers, coffee and doughnuts were served. A pleasant time was enjoyed, new members for the union were secured, and $240 were received for their work. The union feels better in touch with all its constituency for this social hour.

PERSONAL.

Mrs. R. J. Trego, our National evangelist, has been engaged in revival work all the fall and winter. London, Cleveland and Tiffin, etc., have been greatly blessed by her efficient help. Hundreds of souls have been converted. Her last meetings have been at the Ohio Soldiers' Home at Sandusky, where her influence has been deeply felt by the veterans.

Dr. Edward Trego, son of our beloved evangelist, has been elected demonstrator of anatomy in the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College.

Miss Charlotte A. Boyer, president of the twenty-fourth district, has been engaged in protracted meetings much of the past winter, and is still actively at work. The hearts of the people wherever she labors are strongly bound to her.

Miss Frances H. Ensign, state superintendent of the Y Branch, has been called home from her work for some weeks past, because of the serious illness of her father. Happily he is now much improved.

NEW YORK STATE NEWS.

I had thought to say something this month concerning the legislative work and the present situation at Albany, but it has all been so well said by Mrs. C. B. Hopkins, of New York city, in the correspondence department of THE UNION SIGNAL that I need not add to it.

Our president, Mrs. Mary T. Burt, keeps a sharp lookout for our interests and has been in Albany working for the same. She has also arranged a series of meetings to be held at Metropolitan Hall every Thursday afternoon in March. The meetings are evangelistic in their nature and the leaders are Mrs. Ella A. Boole, Mrs. E. Frances Lord, Mrs. J. C. Bonnell and Mrs. Mary J. Annable. Such gatherings cannot fail of doing good and it might be well if in other places the same plan could be followed out.

Our state paper is becoming more and more a necessity to our workers, containing as it does much valuable information every month. The "President's Column," which has lately been added will prove a pleasure and a profit to all readers, as it brings us into closer touch with our leader. It is like a personal letter. A "corner" has been given to the corresponding secretary also, through which she may reach county and local secretaries, "passing along" any word or thought which may have come to her. The word and thought which comes to her now is—that every member of the W. C. T. U. of the state of New York should subscribe for this paper. Send to Miss J. E. Dailey, 30 West 23d St., New York city. Twenty-five cents for a year's subscription. It will be a first-class investment.

The work of organization is going on. Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, of Elmira, has lately organized seven new unions in Clinton county, adding to the county membership one hundred and thirty-eight active and forty-three honorary members. If every county could do this what a gathering there would be at our fall convention!

Ilion reports a very successful suffrage meeting. The speakers were all gentlemen, all proving, as it happened, to be so heartily in favor of woman's enfranchisement that the discussion was, one of the gentleman said, "like the handle on the jug, all on one side." The intention had been, however, to make the question the subject of a debate, but as only one man could be found in town willing to appear on the negative the idea was necessarily abandoned. An impressive memorial service was also held for Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, and a song service conducted by the state corresponding secretary. Ilion is alive.

CLINTON COUNTY

was unfortunate in the date selected for its convention. February 8 will long be remembered as the day of the blizzard, and this was the day set apart for their meeting. They held the meeting in spite of the storm, and although few were present, yet the few will long remember other things connected with that date, as well as the blizzard. Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, of Illinois, was present, and by her inspiring words made the day one to be remembered. Mrs. Helen L. Bullock was also present, and Mrs. Mary M. Gamble, both aiding in the success of the meeting. On Sunday Mrs. Rounds gave an address on social purity in the M. E. church, and the people of Plattsburgh had a second opportunity of hearing this gifted speaker.

WARREN COUNTY

held its semi-annual convention at Glens Falls, the three local unions of that place uniting in entertaining. Mrs. Helen L. Bullock gave interesting addresses both afternoon and evening. Glens Falls union has had an existence of twenty-one years, and a most interesting sketch of the work done was given by Mrs. Tritton. Five presidents have been elected during the twenty-one years. Excellent papers followed by discussions, recitations of unusual merit, and fine music all helped to make the meeting both pleasant and profitable.

GENESEE COUNTY

met at Stafford, and in spite of cold and deep snow held a most successful meeting, eight unions being represented beside the Stafford union. Miss Legget, of Bushville, read a paper entitled, "What Next?" which was excellent, and Mrs. Spencer, of Bergen, read an original poem entitled, "The Under Dog in the Fight."

A discussion on the question, "Resolved, That intemperance is the cause of the present agitation between capital and labor," was decidedly interesting. The affirmative was taken by Mrs. Whitney and Mrs. Bezant, of Pavilion, and Mrs. Leggett, of Bushville, the negative by Mrs. Howell, of Bergen, and Mrs. Day, of Batavia. Both sides were well handled.

Rev. Mr. Poland, of Lima, delivered the evening address, and Mrs. Lathrap's poem, "Comrades Two," was read by Miss Joslyn, of Stafford.

THE TWENTY-NINTH CONVENTION

of Wyoming county W. C. T. U. was held at Perry, and was largely attended; the new president, Mrs. Dutton, for the first time holding the gavel. A great deal of business was transacted, and the work thoroughly discussed. Several pastors participated in the afternoon exercises. The state corresponding secretary was present, and gave a twenty-minute talk in the afternoon and a song service in the evening, the latter taking the place of a lecture. A memorial service for Mrs. Woodbridge was conducted by Mrs. Andrews, of Perry, and one for Mrs. Lathrap, by Miss Manning, of Attica. Miss Manning also gave a paper on Sabbath observance, and led in a discussion of the same which brought out many a good thought. The weather was fine, the hospitality bountiful and everybody happy. Miss Moore, of Attica, gave an interesting report of the Cleveland convention. Miss Sheldon, of Perry Centre, gave several fine recitations, and the choir was ever ready when called upon. Three invitations were sent in for the next convention, and each place seemed determined to succeed, but the matter was settled finally, and Wyoming came off victor.

A new union has been organized in New York city called the Mary T. Lathrap union. It began with eight members, but on leaving that first meeting each one resolved to bring one or two new names next time, and the result was that on March 4, at the second meeting, they numbered thirty-seven active and thirteen honorary members. Any union can accomplish the same result by determined effort. Meetings will be held every Tuesday at the homes of the members. A superintendent of prison and jail work has already found plenty to do, distributing literature in the east side prison in Harlem, and looking up cases that need attention.

I feel sure that this is to be a working union, and as my report comes from the secretary I am confident that they have chosen wisely in placing her in that position. When a "brand new" secretary takes up her work like a veteran, it gives promise of great things. Another cheering bit of news from this union is that every officer takes THE UNION SIGNAL, Woman's Temperance Work, our state paper, and has a copy of state and National Minutes.

The "W. C. T. U. on the Hill," of Brooklyn, held a day of prayer on March 4. The rooms were crowded and the day one of deep interest. The president, Miss Greenwood, presided. Mrs. Annable led the first hour impressively, her theme being "Consecration." Many requests for prayer came from mothers for sons, and these were all carried to the Throne of Grace. A lunch and social hour at noon gave time for an exchange of friendly greetings. Then Lieutenant Lamson of the Salvation Army told of their grand work. Next came a memorial service for Mrs. Lathrap and Mrs. Woodbridge.

An opportunity was given for the pastors to say a few words. Several had promised to come but only one appeared. Rev. Mr. Skudder. After his cheering words Miss Greenwood inquired very aptly, "Where are the nine?" After a brief report of the work and more kind words from friends the meeting closed with our benediction.

The annual meeting of

was held as usual in Poughkeepsie. Reports were given which proved satisfactory to all concerned and the present officers were all reëlected. The president's address was from the theme found in Jeremiah 4: 5, "Set up a standard," and urged to continued efforts in good works. A memorial service followed, after which some time was devoted to the L. T. L., Mrs. Nellie Hutchinson, of Owego, giving a talk on the Senior work of the Legion. She also spoke on systematic giving later on. The evening session was held in Montgomery Street church, Miss Vandelia Varnum delivering the address, and all who have heard Miss Varnum can testify that the large audience present had a treat in listening to her keen, bright arguments and clever wit.

The union at Yonkers is preparing for a school of methods to be held soon, but I will not mention here all the good things in store. I'll wait and tell you of it after it is over. A special effort is being made by this union to create a "relief fund" to be used in saving those whom drink has made too poor to pay for their own cure.

which has replenished the treasury. Every one taking part appeared in costume. A small admission fee was charged at the door, and for refreshments tea, wafers and cake were served. Each person who purchased a supper ticket was allowed to carry home the dainty cup and saucer in which their tea was served. Quite a snug little sum was added to the treasury. This union maintains a mission in the poorer part of the city, and the superintendent of evangelistic work, Mrs. G. E. Millard, holds a service there every Sabbath. She also has a Bible training class for Christian workers every Friday evening in the First Congregational church.

The work of the Loyal Temperance Legion, under the able leadership of Mrs. Harriet A. Metcalf, is steadily "marching onward." We are all proud of the fact that Mrs. Metcalf's examination papers on the L. T. L. course of study have been pronounced by the National committee to be the most comprehensive, and have been adopted by them as the standard for all the states. Mrs. Metcalf has been a tireless worker, and richly deserves any honor conferred upon her.

News in a Nutshell.

Forestville, O., union is soliciting aid for a W. C. T. U. hall and a public well.

The words "in this same county" in an item in our New York state news of March 21, misplacing Boonville, should have been omitted. Our careful New York reporter was not to blame for the mistake.

The union at Verona, in Oneida county, N. Y., held an afternoon and evening mass-meeting which was well attended. Rev. Stanley J. Roberts, of Utica, gave a magnificent address in the afternoon and the state corresponding secretary, Mrs. Graham, was present and sang. In the evening Mrs. Graham conducted a song service, and this, with recitations and words from the pastors made up the evening program. Mrs. T. M. Foster, president of Oneida county, presided over both meetings.

Mrs. Frances J. Barnes writes glowingly to Young Women of her tour along the Mediterranean to Constantinople, which port was reached March 1. Sailing up the Dardanelles, the excursion steamer was greeted by the students of Robert College, who waved sheets from the windows. The Sultan sent an invitation to the palace. The Holy Land was visited, also many points on the Italian coast and the Madeira Islands. Mrs. Barnes has lost no opportunity to display the white ribbon and present the Polyglot Petition. She returns to New York April 5, with her young charges, all much refreshed and invigorated by the delightful outing.

The Florence Crittenton Anchorage, Chicago, was the scene of a pleasant gathering on the 23d inst. in honor of Charles N. Crittenton, the founder of the Florence Crittenton rescue homes. After a bountiful lunch of which some twenty white-ribboners and rescue workers partook, a parlor meeting was held. The girls of the home were all present, some with their babies in their arms. Mr. Crittenton conducted the meeting in the interest of these girls, talking from the text, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." After his simple but earnest appeal, heartfelt prayers from the workers and a song by Mr. Greenwood, Mr. Crittenton's coworker, the girls were invited to speak regarding their hope in Christ. Their responses were expressive of repentance and trust and there was scarcely a dry eye in the room as the voices of rescued and rescuers mingled in song and prayer. Truly, to hundreds of girls this refuge in "darkest Chicago" has been as "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land."

Cor. Secy's Notes.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

To the many friends who have sent such kind words of sympathy and assurance of prayer on my behalf, during my dear father's illness, I desire to express my deepest gratitude, and also to render thanks for the wonderful blessing which has been vouchsafed in his recovery. It seems incredible that a man of his years should go so near to the border land and then come back to life and health; but so the Heavenly Father has ordered it. To Him be all the glory! I trust I may live my thanks in better service.

Miss Alice R. Palmer, our fifth round-the-world missionary, or, as she likes better to be called, our World's Organizer, has been also confined by the sick bed of a loved one since her return from England. She writes, "My duties as a nurse are almost finished," and she is longing for her beloved field work. She will go into any part of the country where she may be desired and will make terms for single engagements or by the week or month. Coming, as she does from the far-away field, with a heart filled with unconquerable enthusiasm, she cannot fail to arouse enthusiasm in those who are fortunate enough to secure her services. Address her as to terms at Franklin, Ind.

We are favored by having with us in the country at this time another representative from the foreign field—Mrs. Holden Byles, of England, a member of the executive board of the B. W. T. A. She is at present in Omaha, Neb., but will be in Philadelphia during June, and will spend some time in transit, making engagements. She would like to give the week beginning April 21 to Chicago and vicinity. Lady Henry Somerset speaks in the very highest terms of Mrs. Byles as a lecturer and fellow-worker.

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, our well-known parliamentarian and president of Michigan state union, desires through my official column to express her sincere thanks to all those of the great sisterhood who have written to her in congratulation and sympathy. The letters have been so many it has been impossible for her to reply to them personally, while her well-known modesty, together with her deep sense of bereavement in the loss of Mrs. Lathrap, has made her feel that she could not reply through The Union Signal. We all know the strong tie which bound her to that great leader, and we know that no one more fully than she shrinks from facing the thought that another president is necessary for Michigan. Our sympathy and our prayers are with Mrs. Benjamin, and our congratulations are given to Michigan that so worthy a successor was in their midst.

Reports from state officers, superintendents and organizers are growing more and more encouraging. There is hardly a state which does not report large gains in membership. Indiana reports twenty-two new W's and twelve Y's, and believes it will be one of the two states to secure Miss Willard for its convention. This same enterprising state has arranged twenty-one schools of methods to be held at different points. Mrs. Unruh and Miss Parrish have each organized eight unions within a month, Mrs. Calkins four, and the other organizers will speedily be heard from.

In department work Mrs. Upham, superintendent of work among lumbermen is pushing the interests of her boys in her own gracious, womanly way. The Mississippi Valley Lumberman recently gave a most enthusiastic description of her work and a fitting tribute to her personality. It is good to know that so earnest a white-ribboner graces the gubernatorial residence of Wisconsin.

Mrs. McClees, who never forgets her soldier and sailor boys, has been laboring most earnestly in California against the uniform low license bill, as well as in her general National work. Address her at The Temple, Los Angeles, Cal., if you want to know what you can do for soldiers and sailors.

Miss Greenwood is receiving golden words of commendation concerning her "Hints and Helps for Evangelistic Workers," and they are coming from over the sea as well as from our own land; from workers in other societies as well as the W. C. T. U.

Next week this column will be given largely to a detailed account of our plan for the Mary A. Woodbridge literature fund.

Treasurer's Corner.

IN NORTH CAROLINA.

At Concord, N. C., I found a quiet home with the state president, Mrs. Mary E. Cartland. She had arranged for me to speak in Forest Hill M. E. church and it was filled in every part. Concord has had no license for seven years. This is largely due to the influence of the Odells, who are large cotton manufacturers and they do not wish their employés subjected to the temptations of the open saloon. A ladies' meeting in the Central M. E. church was largely attended and five new members received. By request I spoke also in the Cannonville M. E. church, a factory suburb of Concord.

North Carolina W. C. T. U. has raised twenty-five dollars for organizing work, has bought with this money a thousand mile ticket for the president and she has entered the field to organize new unions, stir up old ones and secure new members; she will soon develop into a first class public speaker. She accompanied me to Greensboro, where I was entertained by Mrs. McAdoo in their excellent hotel. She and her husband are earnest temperance people. Mr. McAdoo has just leased the hotel for ten years and has put in the lease a provision that the lessee forfeits $10,000 if he ever allows any liquor sold in the building during that time. That is what I call practical, individual Prohibition. All honor to such a man as that. A large number of ladies filled the hotel parlors in response to cards of invitation to meet the National treasurer and the state president. North Carolina has a great many lovely women and the W. C. T. U. claims a goodly number, but will have five hundred more before the year is over.

The next morning Mrs. Cartland and I went up to the State Normal, where four or five hundred girls are being educated for teachers and other vocations. After talking to them about our Y work we organized a Y with ninety members, with Miss Bertha Lee as president, and a brighter, more wide-awake lot of girls one seldom sees. The National will hear from this Y. We were greatly helped by the fact that Mrs. Lucy Robertson, Miss Mendenhall and two other teachers are active W. C. T. U. women and gave their countenance to the organization. I forgot to say that a large audience filled the court house the night before and applauded very radical prohibition sentiments. An orchestra of ten pieces furnished the music and two bright girls were among the players. The state treasurer's daughter, Miss Weatherly, being one. The girls are coming to the front.

Saturday afternoon we were driven six miles to Guilford College where I spoke Saturday night, also Sunday night, to large audiences. This is a school controlled by the Society of Friends, and I greatly enjoyed my stay with these quiet, genuine people. Mrs. Hackney is the stately but thoroughly kind and sympathetic matron. President Hobbs and wife are thorough believers in woman's work, and she is an effective preacher that would be an honor to any denomination. There is an active Y among the students, and seven honoraries were added to the membership after the lecture, besides one or two girls. A ladies' meeting was held Monday afternoon, and a goodly number gathered notwithstanding a pouring rain. Two members joined, and in the evening, at request of the girls, a parlor meeting was held and I gave them a talk on woman's work from a Bible standpoint. Miss Darden, the president of the Y's, is an intelligent nineteenth century girl, and will have a large work to do and she will do it. I enjoyed their Sunday morning meeting with its simple and informal service. It was a rest indeed, and a refreshing to my heart. The Lord bless every one of them.

Tuesday morning I left them with regret, and reached Asheville at four o'clock in the afternoon. Mrs. Hilliard and her sister, Mrs. Branner, met me at the train, and very soon I found myself in a large, airy room with glowing fire in the grate, and I was considerately left alone to rest and prepare for the evening meeting. The ladies had secured the Central M. E. church, and it was filled; six pastors present, and every one came forward at the close to shake hands with the tired speaker and give a word of cheer. I was surprised and pleased to find Mrs. Helen Bullock here; she had stopped over to visit a friend on her way to Arkansas for a month's work. She was called upon to ask for a collection, and by her excellent speech drew $17 for the National from the good-natured audience. The pastor was not satisfied, but begged me to speak again the next night and he would turn the regular prayer-meeting into a temperance meeting. I could not refuse, though I had another engagement, so spoke thirty-five minutes there, entered a carriage and drove to the Young Men's Institute and spoke for forty-five minutes to a colored audience.

The ladies had arranged a reception at church parlors that afternoon, and about seventy ladies were present, and ten new members were added.

The next morning I had the privilege of a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Pease, of "Five Points" fame. O the good works of these two consecrated lives! The Lord has been pleased to put many thousands of dollars into their hands, and they have been faithful stewards, using it all for His cause. He is feeble in body, but strong in mind and purpose. She is one of those active little women that never grow old. She is the life of the union of which she was president for many years, and she and Mrs. Hilliard work hand in hand.

EN ROUTE IN ILLINOIS.

I spent last Sunday at Buchtel College, Akron, O. Miss Bortle, the lady principal, is herself a white-ribboner—a thoroughly cultured and progressive woman. Her inspiring influence upon the young women in her charge has borne fruit already in a promising Somerset Y, with Miss Mary Andrews, president. These young women are reading our papers and studying the lives of our leaders. At each meeting a review of the contents of THE UNION SIGNAL is given. The sweet (?) cider question has prevented their membership from increasing rapidly, but an educational campaign is going on which will surely win new converts. A public meeting was held Sunday evening under the combined auspices of the city and Somerset Y's. Miss Margaret Todd, city Y president, is one of our most faithful workers.

I have just attended the Clark county convention in Illinois. The attendance was good, and the meetings increased in interest from the beginning to the close. The workers of this district consider themselves most fortunate in their president, Miss Marie Brehm, who is a fine presiding officer and has the happy faculty of winning old and young to our work. At the close of the last evening meeting a large number joined the union, among whom was an aged gentleman, who proudly donned the white ribbon. I expect to spend the month of May in Old Virginia, where the state corresponding secretary is arranging dates.

The winter months I spent in New York city, assisting Mrs. Frances J. Barnes in preparing the annual reports and Y leaflets. I attended the New Jersey state Y conference, and was pleased to note the good work accomplished under the able leadership of Miss Mary Campbell, the state Y secretary. At Moorestown, N. J., I found W's and Y's enjoying beautiful headquarters and conducting a popular and profitable lecture course, employing the best temperance lecturers. Miss Carrie Busby, the Y president, has gathered a strong band of young women workers, who mean to have a share in all the "good (temperance) times" going on. Stormy weather prevented organization at Montclair, and caused a small attendance at Wenonah, but some good seed, we hope, was sown.

At Mt. Kisco, N. Y., both W's and Y's gave me a warm welcome. Here Mrs. Emily Fowler is at the helm, and the good ship goes steadily forward.

I was called home from the Petition meeting by my father's serious illness, and was obliged to cancel the West Virginia meetings which were waiting for me, but hope to visit these points later.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL

Conditions of membership in the Hospital Association: Signing of the temperance pledge, payment of $5 membership fee, and $1 annually thereafter.

Needs of the Hospital: Members in its Association; endowment of beds, contributions of money, blankets, towels, etc. (As quilts cannot be used to good advantage on hospital beds, it is better to sell them at home and to send the money thus received.) Acquaintance with its principles and purposes. Urgent invitation is extended to all interested, and especially to all physicians, to visit the institution and make full inquiries in regard to its workings.

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—I desire through your columns to call the attention of the W. C. T. U. membership to the National Temperance Hospital and to a means whereby this institution, the cause of temperance and individual members of the W. C. T. U. may all be benefited by patronizing the hospital when in need of such service.

Chicago is a great medical center. Patients come here from all parts of the United States for operations and treatment. Among them must be a certain number of W. C. T. U. members. If they were to come to the Temperance Hospital they could procure every advantage to be gained at any other hospital and would be at liberty to select any physician or surgeon either from the hospital staff or elsewhere—a privilege not granted at all hospitals. The rates are no higher than elsewhere and what money is thus paid would go to help a cause they love.

The non-alcoholic treatment of disease has passed beyond the experimental stage. Many and a rapidly increasing number of physicians and surgeons in Chicago use no alcohol whatever in their practice. They find no disease or condition for which they do not have a better remedy than alcohol. The science of medicine has made great advances in the past quarter century and with the discovery of new remedies and a better knowledge of disease has come the abandonment of the old and more or less crude forms of medication.

Yet the use of alcohol, condemned by the moralist, the jurist and the scientist, still lingers among the older medical men and the people they influence directly and indirectly.

The Temperance Hospital exists to disabuse the minds of these people of the idea of the necessity for the use of alcohol as a medicine by actual demonstration that better remedies are at hand. The membership of the W. C. T. U. can accomplish this work without any additional expense to themselves by personally patronizing this hospital rather than another and by recommending it to their ailing friends.

S. W. BURSON.

The above article from the pen of the secretary of the regular staff of our hospital, should interest every white-ribbon woman who believes in our principles. The hospital cannot be kept up on free patients. Will you interest yourselves in the work in the cities, towns and villages in which you live and fill the hospital the coming six months with patients? It takes something more than sentiment to run a hospital.

MRS. M. E. KLINE,
President of Board.

Years ago, when Henry Ward Beecher's reputation was not world-wide a western Young Man's Christian Association tried to persuade the young divine to go out and lecture to them without charge, saying it would increase his fame. He telegraphed in reply: "I will lecture for F. A. M. E.—Fifty And My Expenses."

Ladies desiring a stylish garment, up-to-date in every way, and at an extremely low price, should see the advertisement of Winters & Sommers, in the issue of March 28.

A western man, who was recently invited to a seat on the floor of the House at Washington indignantly refused, saying that he was accustomed to sit on chairs at home.

"I'm so sorry supper isn't ready," said Mrs. Dinsmore to her husband when he came in. "I attended the meeting of the sewing circle this afternoon, and I couldn't get away."

"Hemmed in, were you?" asked her husband.

Johnny had been studying his spelling lesson and learning definitions, particularly of words with prefixes from the Greek. He had defined monologue as a soliloquy, or "one man talking to himself."

"Now, what is a conversation between two persons?" asked his teacher.

"A dialogue."

"And between more than two persons?"

"A pollywog," answered Johnny, promptly.

There is a man in Chicago so tender-hearted that he often rides in a street car with his eyes closed rather than see ladies standing up.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

The Gospel of Buddha According to Old Records. Told by Paul Carus.

The compiler of this strange but attention-compelling volume has gathered his material in its bulk from old Buddhist canon; parts are liberal renditions, some passages are copies of the original texts. The material has been arranged and selected with a view to logical continuity of thought and elimination of less valuable material. What impresses the reader first and most are the parallelisms between this ancient worship and the religion of Christ. In a table of reference Paul Carus has given those passages in the gospels which are akin to those of Buddha. Aside from the poetic beauty of this religion which must in itself have won many adherents, there is the great principle of elimination of self. But all salvation is left in the hands of the individual. Buddha went through an awful trial before he conquered self, but he only conquered it for Buddha. He must still leave every disciple to fight his own battle. Buddha could only say, "I have hereto attained; do thou attain." Not so Christ. The book is of interest and value as a reference book.

American Charities: A Study in Philanthropy and Economics, by Amos G. Warner, Ph. D.

Most students of pauperism have erred in trying to find one chief cause for such conditions; one claims that it is over-population; another, that it is rent; still another, that it is low wages. Professor Warner recognizes a whole nexus of causes; heredity, environment, social conditions, intoxicants, selfishness, sickness, all inextricably interwoven. He traces the origin of philanthropy in the past and shows how widespread, even among heathen nations, was the idea of assisting the unfortunate. He next takes up the various theories of the cause of poverty and criticises them, showing the extent of their justification. He then analyzes the various methods of relief, and shows, by many instances and also by carefully-prepared tables, what influences tend toward deepening degradation, and what, on the other side, tend to elevate and improve. There is no phase of poor relief, or of pauperism, that he does not throw light upon.

His tone is optimistic and wholesome. It would be hard to pick flaws in his arguments, supported, as they are, by concrete examples selected from a wide range of reading and experience.

TWO VALUABLE BOOKS FOR MOTHERS.

1. Confidential Talks with Young Women. By Lyman B. Sperry, M. D., with introductory notes by Frances E. Willard and Mary Wood Allen, M. D.

"Dr. Sperry," says Miss Willard, "brings not only an adequate scientific preparation but a pure mind to his high task." "And," says the National superintendent of our purity department, "he speaks not only with the earnestness of a friend, but with the authority of a physician."

It is just such a book as will be found helpful to mothers in bringing to their daughters the necessary instruction upon a subject concerning which every girl is, mentally at least, asking questions. Price 75 cents.

2. The Science of Motherhood. By Hannah Whitall Smith.

All the world is beginning to think with Froebel that "we must cultivate mothers," and the aim of this suggestive little book is to give a true idea of scientific motherhood. "We women," says the author, "should study this science as carefully and intelligently as any other, and make of ourselves 'mothers of understanding' as well as mothers of instinct. ## BOOKLETS.

Our list of booklets are in great demand, and well they might be, for they are indeed "things of beauty" both as to form and to the "soul of them." One whose thought is especially attuned to the Easter spirit is

THE PATHWAY TO EASTER,

By Rose Porter. It contains a thought for each of the seven days of Holy Week, based upon the seven utterances of Christ upon the Cross, and closes with the eighth, the triumphant "Day of days." Its introduction is an Easter poem written "For the W. C. T. U." by Mary Lowe Dickinson. Daintily bound in pale blue and white. Price 15 cents.

WORD AND WORK,

By Celia Havergal, is suitable for Easter or any other season of the year, having a Scripture quotation for each day of the month, each page embellished with a tinted floral design. Printed on heavy card, with scalloped edges; embossed cover in cream and gold, with colored lithograph. Price 20c.

Frederick Faber's beautiful hymn, is presented in a booklet of twelve pages, with beautiful floral designs on each page. Handsome embossed and open-work cover in delicate shades. This is an attractive Easter gift from friend to friend, from Sunday-school teacher to scholar, or scholar to teacher. Price 40 cents.

JESUS IS GOD,

And the most handsomely dressed booklet of this list is

THE VOICE OF HIM THAT LIVETH.

It consists of short poems by Cecilia Havergal. Pages of heavy cardboard, scallopped edges, profusely decorated with colored lithographs and other designs. Embossed cover of the most beautiful tints combined with white and gold. A poem in color as well as in thought and language. Price 50 cents.

All the booklets mentioned are triumphs of the lithographer's and printer's art—a veritable feast for the eye.

TWO VALUABLE BOOKS FOR MOTHERS.

1. Confidential Talks with Young Women.

By Lyman B. Sperry, M. D., with introductory remarks by Frances E. Willard and Mary Wood Allen, M. D. "Dr. Sperry," says Miss Willard, "brings not only an adequate scientific preparation but a pure mind to his high task," and, says the National superintendent of our purity department, "he speaks not only with the earnestness of a friend but with the authority of a physician." It is just such a book as mothers will find helpful in bringing to their daughters the necessary instruction—often so hard to give—upon a subject concerning which every girl is, mentally, at least, asking questions.

2. The Science of Motherhood.

By Hannah Whitall Smith. All the world is beginning to think with Froebel that "we must cultivate mothers," and the aim of this suggestive little book is to present a true idea of scientific motherhood. "We women," says the author, "should study this science as carefully and intelligently as any other, and make of ourselves 'mothers of understanding' as well as mothers of instinct." This booklet is a most fitting gift to a young mother.

Of Mary A. Woodbridge.

There are throughout the country, doubtless in every state in the union, "Woodbridge" unions and "Woodbridge" Y's, for many a local W. C. T. U. in the long list which Mrs. Woodbridge helped to bring into existence is proud to call itself by her name. Doubtless most of these already possess portraits of this beloved leader, and it goes without saying that those who do not are desirous of supplying this lack immediately. Hence we call attention to the cabinet photographs we have on sale. They are excellent likenesses and we commend them not only to "Woodbridge" unions but to all unions and to all friends of Mrs. Woodbridge.

Look at Pearline

through the wrong end of the glass, if you will; make all its labor-saving, money-saving qualities appear as small as you like; cut them down one-half;—and still there will be left a place for it in every home and an urgent call for it from every bright, progressive woman. It isn't necessary to exaggerate the virtues of Pearline. Perhaps that couldn't easily be done. But without telling of them all, there's enough to prove it the easiest, quickest, safest and most economical thing you can use, in all washing and cleaning.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled; if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. 158 JAMES PYLE, New York

5 POPULAR BOOKS.

We will give for one new subscriber, free of all charge, the five books named below, written by

CHAS. H. SPURGEON,
HENRY DRUMMOND and
T. DeWITT TALMAGE,

The greatest modern writers on religious topics. Their works are justly famed, and these have all had an enormous sale both in this country and abroad. The books are clearly printed on good paper, and each is as complete a book as though they were bought in five separate stores, and all are bound in attractive, heavy paper covers.

No. 71. John Ploughman's Pictures. By the late Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon, the great London preacher and evangelist. This is one of the most original and popular books of the age. The author states in the preface that its object is to smite evil, and especially the monster evil of drink, and it is safe to say that the plain talks of John Ploughman, couched in Spurgeon's quaint sayings, his wit, his logic, his power for good, have accomplished more than any similar publication. This book can be read by every member of the family over and over with increasing pleasure and profit, and every mother who has a son that must face the temptations of the terrible curse of drink, will place a good weapon in his hands when she induces him to read this work. Illustrated.

SERMONS BY T. DeWITT TALMAGE.

No. 74. Talmage on Palestine. A book containing a series of sermons, by the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, about his recent and noted travels through Palestine, telling what he saw and learned there. They make such delightful reading, and so instructive and entertaining, that the book is immensely popular. On the days he delivered these sermons in his church in Brooklyn, which seated 4,500 people, thousands were turned away from the doors for want of standing-room inside the church. Even to read the book makes one thrill through and through.

LECTURES BY HENRY DRUMMOND.

Prof. Henry Drummond is without doubt the most popular writer of the age. It is with much pride that we are enabled to offer three of his most popular works. If you read one, you will want all; and if you read them once, you are almost certain to read them over and over.

For simplicity, truthfulness, gentle yet mighty force in statement, and loving loyalty to God, they are unequaled by anything ever written on the subject. They will be angels of mercy to every home that gives them a welcome place on the reading-table.—Quarterly Review.

No. 64. The Greatest Thing in the World. By Henry Drummond. This book is on love as taught by Christ and the disciples; and if any one doubts that love is the greatest thing in the world, and if they want to be made stronger in their love for all things, they must get this book, by all means.

No. 63. Changed Life. By Henry Drummond. If you want a practical solution of the cardinal problem of Christian experience, read this book on "Changed Life." You will be drinking at the fountain of eternal life.

No. 62. Peace Be With You. By Henry Drummond. This book might be called a short treatise on Rest, Joy, Peace, Faith and Light. It is so simple, yet so grand and so clear, that you lay the book down feeling that a new and brighter day has dawned in your life.

OUR BOW PIN.

We desire to call the attention of our women to the new white ribbon badge. It consists of a bow pin of white enamel on sterling silver and will meet a very general demand for a "white ribbon" which has some intrinsic as well as distinctive value, and which—like the inclusive "aim" of the organization it represents—will retain its pristine purity and all opposing forces. Every W and every Y should wear one of these truly symbolical pins.

WOMAN IN THE PULPIT.
By Frances E. Willard.

More and more in these fin de siecle days do our workers find themselves confronted with the question of the "woman preacher." This question is most ably and forcibly presented and considered in Miss Willard's book, which is the outgrowth, as she explains, of an article prepared in compliance with the request of the Homiletic Review. It has introductory letters from Rev. Dr. Parker, Rev. Dr. Talmage and Joseph Cook, and contains, besides the author's own wise conclusions, the testimony of men and women preachers concerning women in the ministry — which, be it noted, is somewhat different from the ministry of women.

Signal Notes.

The Glasgow United Evangelistic Association has reached its majority.

One hundred and thirty million people now speak the English language.

It is reported that the Khedive of Egypt has prohibited the culture of tobacco, under a penalty of one thousand dollars.

Twenty-five thousand dollars have just been given toward a permanent building for a deaconess' home in New York city.

It is said that Stevenson, the novelist, smoked one hundred and twenty to one hundred and fifty cigarettes a day, undermining his health.

According to the London Times the Russian government is by degrees taking the whole spirit trade into its own hands. It will this year establish its monopoly in four provinces, and money is being provided to pave the way for the extension of the system to twenty-five others.

There are fourteen states in which aliens are allowed to vote upon the simple declaration of their intention to become citizens, after a brief residence ranging from four months to one year. These states are Alabama, Colorado, Florida, Indiana, Kansas, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, Oregon, Texas, Wisconsin.

New Zealand's population of seven hundred thousand spends two million pounds annually in drink. In refutation of a brewer's statement that there was "no drunkenness in the colony worth naming," a temperance worker culled from the newspapers of a few of the cities for a year a record of drink's doings which, incomplete as it was, measured over sixty yards of newspaper column, and contained 1,430 items, 97 of which were deaths and suicides.

An interesting comparison of theological schools has been published in a recent Outlook, showing the progress of the different denominations in the education of candidates for the ministry. The statement covers the statistics for nine years, between 1881 and 1890, and is culled from the report of the United States commissioner of education. The Methodists and Lutherans have made the greatest percentage of comparative increase, while the Baptist students still retain the largest proportion of gain according to population.

The Fitchburg, Mass., Athletic Club has recently erected a handsome four story structure, in which a large and sunny room is especially reserved for non-smokers. A small consultation room opens out of the non-smokers' room and is also for their use. It has direct access to the stairway and the rooms are conveniently located over the front entrance. These rooms are greatly appreciated by many men in the town who felt debarred from the privileges of the Athletic Club on account of the previous necessary inhalation and contamination of the tobacco poison.

The Chicago Waifs' Mission and Training School, located at 44 State street, is doing a remarkable work in transforming the neglected lives from the streets into useful and trained characters by means of its various industrial departments. A fine illustrated paper for youth is published, which has been a wonderful success, earning eight thousand dollars yearly toward the general expenses of the mission. The messenger service and pony express earn a good sum for the training school, besides employing the boys. A novel feature of the Sunday-school is a nice free lunch provided to all comers. The entire work is practical, preventive and uplifting in the highest form of Christian philanthropy, teaching the lowly to raise themselves.

The Chautauqua Assembly management announces among its lecturers for the season of 1895, Principal A. M. Fairbank, of Mansfield College, Oxford, Eng., President G. Stanley Hall, of Clark University, Mr. John Fiske, of Cambridge, Mass., Dr. John Henry Barrows, of Chicago, Gen. J. B. Gordon, of Georgia, President William R. Harper, of the University of Chicago, Prof. Borden P. Bowne, Chancellor Henry M. MacCracken and Dr. Wayland Hoyt. The chief topic for the year will be American History and Institutions, including all phases of national life. As usual, attention will be given to current social questions which will be discussed by men of ability and experience. The American School of Christian Philosophy will again hold its annual session at Chautauqua, July 2-9 inclusive.

My Wife.

January 10th, 1895.

The Dr. J. H. McLean Medicine Co.,
St. Louis, Mo.

Gentlemen: My wife suffered several years with consumption and general weakness. During her illness three doctors tried to help her, but they did no good, as they could make no headway against the terrible weakness. I saw your Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier recommended for weakness caused by disease, and concluded to try it. She began to improve at once; she used, in all, four bottles, and it cured her completely. The doctors thought she was incurable, but, thanks to your Strengthening Cordial, she is now healthy and strong.

Yours truly, E. EMMERT,

FROM COLUMBUS SCHOOL JOURNAL.

Columbus and What He Found.

This is the title of a volume by Mary H. Hall, and published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Company of Chicago. It is a sample of the excellent works handled by this well-known publishing house. The book would prove just the thing for supplementary reading. The idea of the writer is not to advocate hero-worship unrestrained, but that something warmly human may stir the heart and mind through arresting the attention and severing an interest in human affairs. It is no fable. The wanderings and wonderings of this modern Ulysses are all so real that naught but heroism, self-denial to the point of self-discovery, can be breathed into the young American if it be simply, sincerely and sympathetically placed before hir This is what the author has done in tht volume of "Columbus and What He Found: Price $1.

An Australian comrade, writing of one of our departed leaders, says:

"In reading the account of her beautiful memorial services and of her last hours, I could not help thinking that we, who are so far from you all, seem to learn more of the actual characteristics and lovable qualities of the workers after their death than before—when it is too late to show any practical appreciation of them. Would it not be possible to give us more glimpses of the leaders in THE UNION SIGNAL? The articles now appearing on 'Some of our Women' meet this idea to a great extent; but you are all so familiar with the foremost leaders that perhaps it does not occur to you to write many things about them which would interest those who are far away."

It is for this very purpose that the W. T. P. A. is bringing out a new edition of "Thumb-Nail Sketches of White-Ribboners," namely: that we may know more about each other's character and work before that knowledge takes the form of a funeral oration! This book will give brief sketches of our leaders, World's and National, as far as it has been possible to secure them within a short time. It will hereafter be kept as one of our standard publications, revised from time to time, as may be necessary. There are many ways in which such a little volume would be of great help to the work. It would assist local unions in advertising speakers, and it would rouse up local press superintendents to print from time to time in the papers which they supply with white-ribbon items some of these brief, attractive sketches of prominent workers.

The book is to be one of the W. T. P. A. specialties at the World's Convention in London, and we feel sure that many of our sisters in other lands than ours will, like our Australian correspondent, approve its mission and help it on its way.

Here is what one of our "brother's-in-law," Rev. E. H. Stokes, D. D., founder and central figure of the great Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Association for the past twenty-five years, says of "A Great Mother":

"As the book was the offspring of Miss Willard's brain and heart, I, of course, expected a great production. But the half was not anticipated. From beginning to close, page after page, presented increasing interest until, long before the middle of the book was reached, I said, 'The final climax has been attained; there can be no higher point.' Yet, as in mountain climbing, each summit gained reveals another higher still, it was so with the book, onward, to the end. It is a wonderful account of a most wonderful woman, at one time so simple, touching and tender, that we smile and weep together, and then rising to such altitudes that we forget the simple, and are lost in the sublime.

"I have read it through with a fervor beyond that aroused by the strangest romance, and a kind of spiritual fascination which would not let it rest until the last page was reached, and then, at its close, felt as if I was, at least in spirit, almost a member of the Willard family.

"I am sure the book cannot be other than a great blessing to the parents, especially the mothers, of the world."

CAROLINE F. GROW, Bus. Mgr.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Arbitration has been favored by the Wisconsin assembly.

The Utah Constitutional convention has adopted the equal suffrage clause.

The Irish Land League bill has passed its second reading in the House of Commons.

Li Hung Chang is progressing toward recovery, and peace negotiations have been resumed.

The lower house of Nebraska's assembly has refused to indorse the senate's bill favoring gambling and pool selling.

Newfoundland has sent delegates to Ottawa for the purpose of considering the question of annexation to Canada.

A demonstration in honor of Rev. Samuel F. Smith, of Newton Center, Mass., the author of "America," was held in Music Hall, Boston.

The Loyal Legion of Wisconsin has indorsed the measure now before the state legislature for the removal of all saloons within a half mile of the Milwaukee Soldiers' Home.

The committee of one hundred of the new National party met in Pittsburg, Pa., April 1. Each state was asked to name delegates, both men and women, for the National convention in March, 1896, the place of meeting to be given later.

SINCE our last note concerning the age of consent bills the Missouri legislature has almost unanimously raised the age to eighteen years, and the governor has signed it. Missouri unions will hold thanksgiving meetings all over the state, so the people may know about the law. Our rejoicings over legal victories are almost constant these days. Praise ye the Lord!

MISS WILLARD writes us that she knows nothing of the Mr. Hicks who has been circulating false reports concerning Lady Henry Somerset. It has been said in press dispatches that this man had been one of Miss Willard's co-workers, but she has no recollection of him whatever. By the way, who is he, we wonder, and what "ministers' meetings" are investigating Lady Henry Somerset?

WHILE so many white-ribboners are turning their thoughts eastward to London in anticipation of the World's W. C. T. U. convention, June 14–21, earnest young Christians in Great Britain, Europe, and Australia, are looking westward towards the Mecca of Christian Endeavor this year—Boston. Probably the largest convention of Christian workers ever yet convened will be held in Boston, Mass., July 10–15. Under favorable circumstances, sixty thousand delegates are expected, and there is talk of the English and Irish Endeavorers chartering a steamer for the journey.

A THIRD number of the Marching Song Series will soon be ready for publication, and will be compiled for the use of the Senior Grade of the L. T. L. A prize of $10 is hereby offered for the best song with music that is received by or on May 1. A committee including Miss Mary A. Lathbury, Mrs. Alice J. Harris and Rev. Theo. F. Seward have agreed to examine the selections sent in. The words and music need not be by the same author, but must accompany each other. Please address all manuscripts to Miss Anna Gordon, The Cottage, Reigate, England, and kindly remember that the postage to England is five cents for each half ounce, any deficiency being charged double the amount on the other side. Please bear in mind that the time is short and that the songs must be suited to our older young people.

"THE coming woman" was discussed by the Sunset Club of Chicago recently. One of the best points made by the men speakers was that the coming woman had already arrived, and that the time had come for the discussion of "the coming man." A minister replied to his toast, "Will the coming woman preach?" by saying that as soon as she had anything to say she would surely say it, and that nothing could or should prevent her. The question was also spoken to by women, all of whom favored equal franchise and outdoor exercise, particularly bicycle riding.

THE women of Ohio entered into the full liberty of school franchise on April 1. The press reports that their voting was very general throughout the state and that the polls, as a consequence, were orderly and that several women were elected to educational positions. We notice with especial pleasure the election of Miss Henrietta G. Moore to the board of education in Springfield, with eighty-four majority on the Prohibition ticket in a ward that has long been intensely Republican, and we learn with great satisfaction that as the result of a lecture on woman suffrage in Worcester, by our National corresponding secretary, Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, a woman was elected on an independent woman's ticket in that city. It will soon be one of the marvels of the age that women have not always been duly represented on the administrative boards of educational institutions.

AN occasion of rare interest was the testimonial meeting in Boston to Rev. Samuel F. Smith, author of our National hymn, "America." The program was largely musical, the leading feature being the singing of "America," by a well trained choir of school children. In narrating the circumstances under which he wrote the hymn, Dr. Smith said that in February, 1832, when a student in Andover Theological Seminary, hec ame upon a tune of great majesty among a collection of German patriotic airs and he instantly felt an impulse to write an American patriotic hymn. "I reached my hand for a bit of waste paper, and taking my quill pen, wrote the four verses in half an hour. I sent it to a Boston music firm and the next I knew of it, it had been sung by the Sunday-school children at Park Street church, Boston, at a Fourth of July celebration." It is fitting that Dr. Smith's beautiful life of eighty-six years should be crowned with homage, the ringing of the Columbia Liberty bell, or any other honors that we have to bestow upon virtue and patriotism.

THE reputation in the West of John G. Woolley as one of the prominent temperance orators of this generation has recently been verified in the East. His keen, incisive argument, with his clear, powerful, serious logic, stepping boldly out in advance of public sentiment has won for him a warm affection in the hearts of the thousands of co-workers in New England. Sunday evening, March 31, at New Bedford, Mass., Mr. Woolley closed the most successful series of fifty meetings ever held in New England in the interest of no-license and of good citizenship. Twenty-five meetings of the series have been held in churches, twenty-five under the auspices of W. C. T. U., ten by Y. P. S. C. E., and the remainder by no-license committees and conferences. Probably no other man has, in the same length of time, struck such hard blows at the saloon and so aroused Christian men to at least think of their individual responsibility relative to the existence and perpetuation of the legalized liquor traffic. He has given very little attention to the drunkards or saloonkeepers, but has devoted all his energy to arouse the apathetic, indifferent Christian voter to make his testimony good at the ballot-box, whence comes the right by law to exist—the saloon. Mr. Woolley has already been engaged for New England and adjoining states from September 1 to October 27 and from November 6 to December 9 for a series of one hundred and five meetings.

RISEN.

BY H. LAVINIA BAILY.

CHRIST is risen! Christ is risen!
Here His empty tomb you see,
And He goeth as He told you
To the hills of Galilee."
Thus to loving, loyal women
In the centuries agone
Angel voices told the story
Of the resurrection morn.

He is risen! He is risen!
Years hand down the glad refrain!
Let the ages on to ages
Waft the tidings yet again,
He who near the Bethlehem manger,
Lowly Child of earth was born,
King of kings reigns all triumphant
Since the resurrection morn.

Christ is risen! Calvary's anguish;
All a lost world's ransom paid;
Then, with tears, "the hope of Israel"
In the new-made tomb was laid.
Deep and dark the desolation
Falling with that night forlorn;
Radiant the dawn awakening
With the resurrection morn.

He is risen! By this token
We with Him shall rise again;
Faith shall vanquish doubt and terror,
Joy shall banish grief and pain.
No more fear of sin's temptation,
No more dread of hatred's scorn;
O the glory purchased for us
On the resurrection morn!

Christ is risen! Bow before Him!
To His courts an offering bring;
Suffering Lord, and Lamb victorious,
Crown Him Conqueror, Priest and King!
Robe of light for robe of mocking,
Diadem for crown of thorn,
Wears He now; and in His likeness
Rise we, satisfied, immortal,
In the resurrection morn.

THE WIDOW'S "MIGHT."
An Easter Story.

BY MYRA GOODWIN PLANTZ.

"Just look at this letter, Mary," and pretty Mrs. Harris laughed heartily, as she handed over with some pride the first letter she had ever received from her little daughter. "You know she is at grandma's for her Easter vacation. Doesn't she write a clear hand, but did you ever see such spelling?"

The fond auntie read: "Dear Mama, There are meatings at granma's church to get ready for ester, and granma and Auntie have lovely New dresses and bonnets. the preacher talked yesterday about the widows Might, and i thought you would like to hear about it kause you told the lady the other day you would gladly give your Might to the temperance kause. I am glad you will for the preecher said jesus loved folks most of all who gave that way and they would get their reward in heven. I am going to have lots of colored eggs and hoping you will too i am yours truely, your dear Dotha."

"All that kind of might that the temperance ladies get out of you won't give you a very high seat in heaven, Clara," said her sister, very much amused.

"I supposed that they just met to talk, but it seems they have a home some place where they rescue young girls—good work, but the state ought to have institutions. Then some old lady has opened her home for orphans, but the W. C. T. U. is to support them. And they are trying to send that poor Will McBride to the Keeley Cure, in hopes he can reform so as to care for his old blind mother and his wife and her sweet babies. So few ladies attend, who have any money, they decided to canvass the town, hoping to get funds to carry on their work from those who do not choose to belong. I could not refuse such worthy objects, but I found only a ten dollar bill, which I owe for having my Easter dress made, and a quarter. So I spoke of my mite when I handed Mrs. Parker the quarter, and my sharp little daughter heard me."

"Mrs. Parker must have felt repaid for taking the car out here," Mrs. Jessup said teasingly.

"I did not think of that," said Mrs. Harris. "I do believe the poor thing walked back to save the nickel for the cause, but if every lady in town gave a quarter—"

"Or according to their income, as you did, many would give less than a mill," reminded the sister.

"Now, Mary, you know that I am not a rich woman. Of course I have this nice home, and income enough to keep Paul in college and take good care of Dotha. But I economize in many ways. My Easter bonnet is a made-over one," Mrs. Harris said, earnestly.

"I needn't preach, for I am just as bad. I have never had a bit of interest in temperance or all these reforms, and there are so many calls for money nowadays, but my little dressmaker, Mrs. Baker, made me ashamed of myself yesterday. You know she does not get high-priced work, and has had a hard struggle to keep her family together since her husband died. Well, while I was in the inner room dressing, Mrs. Parker called on her and told her story. The little widow put her hand in her pocket and said, as she handed out a dollar, 'I meant to have chicken for the children's Easter dinner and color them a lot of eggs, but I am sure they will be glad when I tell them what I have done. I'll make it up to them soon. I can't be thankful enough that my boys are growing up good in the midst of so many temptations. When work gets slack, in June, let me make some of you ladies a nice dress, and let the money for it go towards keeping that poor fellow away from temptation.' I suppose, Clara, that is giving with one's might. I felt sorry enough I had used every cent on cut flowers and fancy eggs and a lot of Easter cards I doubt if my friends will appreciate. I do wish those good women had that ten dollars. They seem to be able to look after their own children, and yet try to keep other people's children from going straight to perdition."

"Why, Mary, if you feel that way you had better join them and go tramping around with petitions a yard long," said Mrs. Harris, a little scornfully.

"I mean to, Clara; my little dressmaker is not the only woman in town who ought to do something for the cause because the curse has not entered her home. I don't doubt our boys are in as much danger from these open saloons as are the sons of these devoted workers. I am going to help clean house myself, and give up fresh hall paper and send the money to Mrs. Parker to be used in making society a little cleaner."

Mrs. Harris listened in astonishment. She and her sister were good church workers and ideal housekeepers and mothers, and had always insisted that a woman's duty ended there. Of course they had to admit that there were a few ladies who had as good a reputation as home-makers and yet did try to save other homes, but Mrs. Harris had often remarked that they were wearing themselves out trying to do so much and she felt no occasion to get old before her time over other people's troubles.

"Clara, are you so sure of Paul after all? He is in a place full of saloons and other bad places. Would you not like to hear that the ladies had swept away the saloons and other wicked resorts as they have done where Rob Clayton goes to college? There the W. C. T. U. ladies watch the boys as if they were their own sons, and where they used to expel young men for frequenting saloons every year, not a case of drunkenness has been known in three years. These women do give their might to help mothers who are far away, praying perhaps, but powerless to make the answer possible."

This was Mrs. Jessup's parting shot as she left her sister, and this made Mrs. Harris feel very uncomfortable.

"I do suppose," she acknowledged to herself, "that if every woman would join the work with all her might it would about save the tempted and maybe stop the whole business. But there will never be enough care to make much difference. Dear me, I do wish Dotha would learn to spell, for that word troubles me. I will take a long walk to be sure that my Easter lilies will be here this evening, and that there will be a beautiful design for dear Harold's grave to-morrow. How could I have neglected it till to-day? But a little extra work will get it done this evening. How much I would rather have him there, even sadly as I miss him, than to have him the ruined, beastly man that Sophia Keeling has for a husband, and yet John was just as full of promise as my husband. I owe something to God for the memory of such a grand man," and the tears came as she thought of the loss felt more keenly as the years went by. She wondered how women bore sorrow who had to struggle with poverty besides.

She tried, on the street, to dismiss the disagreeable subject but that was impossible, for there had been an "arrest of thought" and she never could look at the question in the same light again. Just as she passed a gilded "high license" saloon she heard some one call, "Paul! Paul!"

The mother's heart leaped in her breast, but no, it was not her Paul. She turned and saw a group of elegant young men stop a sweet-faced youth with, "Come in and have a game of pool, old boy. Now don't refuse, for this is not a common saloon, and we will set up soft drinks if you are still tied to your mother's white ribbon."

Mrs. Harris held her breath, for this was one of the worst places in the city, in spite of its grandeur.

"Thank you, boys," replied the other Paul. "As long as my mother wears and works for the white ribbon I will be true to her principles. Come across the street and I'll set up ice cream soda, and let us all get a boat and take a row on the river."

The boys hesitated, laughed, and then followed Paul to a place of safety.

"Oh, if my Paul only had that safeguard in temptation," thought Mrs. Harris. "I did not suppose it meant so much to a boy to have a temperance worker for a mother."

The florist Mrs. Harris desired was in the suburbs and she had to pass through the poorer settlements to reach the greenhouse. A sound of bitter sobbing arrested her steps and she turned to a broken down house and pushed open the half-closed door. She had read of such scenes as met her eye but had always supposed that they were fancies of some imaginative writer. But this was reality that she saw before her. On the floor lay a man dead drunk, and in the corner a woman was sobbing wildly over a baby, a beautiful, dimpled baby, who would never smile to her kisses again.

"Curse them, curse them," shrieked the mother. "They would sell him the whisky though they know it makes him crazy, and I've been down on my knees to try and get them to stop, even offering to pay old Billings every week what he would make off of my husband, and earn it too, if they'd let him alone, but he would not do it. He said he had a right to sell to any who had the money to pay for it. A better man than Dick never breathed, except when he has liquor, and he's not been drunk often since baby came for he just worshiped him. I saw him coming hardly able to stagger and I tried to catch up baby, but he ran to his papa with a shout, and Dick picked him up, and before I could get there baby cried for the bottle and Dick poured half a pint of whisky down Willie's throat, and drank the rest of the bottle himself. I did what I could but you see baby is dead. Oh, you were my only comfort. How can I live without you?"

Mrs. Harris had seen such things frequently in print, only noticed by a mere mention in the daily papers, too common for comment, but brought before her very eyes it seemed to her her heart would break with the poor mother's. She lost no time in getting help, and before long the patrol wagon rolled up, and the wrong man was dragged away, while the real murderer, Billings, at the corner "Exchange," looked from his door with little concern.

Mrs. Harris had so little experience with trouble that she had to send for Mrs. Parker before she could calm the mother, and she wondered how that lady, quite as high in social circles as herself, understood just what to do for the crushed woman and the dead baby.

"You seem to know how to soothe her," said Mrs. Harris. "I will hire some one to stay, for I wouldn't know what to do myself."

"It requires some time to know how to help those in trouble," replied the lady. "Of course, that is part of our work, and a blessed thing too. But you have been very kind, and I thank you for that money. It is so hard for a mother like this to turn a beautiful child over to a pauper's burial, especially with these circumstances."

"Draw on me for all you need," said Mrs. Harris. "I will have my Easter flowers sent here."

She had given up the handsome design she had intended to order for her husband's grave. It seemed sacrilegious to put money on a grave with such suffering among the living. She was glad the flowers already ordered could be used for some good purpose. The Easter lilies might say something to the poor mother that a human voice could not suggest.

As Mrs. Harris hurried home in the twilight, she ran into a frail, wild-eyed girl, scarcely more than a child, who needed help at once.

"Why are you on the streets now, poor thing?" asked the lady. "You ought to be with your mother."

"She's dead long ago, or I wouldn't be this way. There's no place but the bottom of the river for me, and I'm on my way there now. It wasn't my fault, but nobody will believe me and take me in," answered the girl in a tone of desperate despair.

"I know of a home for you, my poor child, and I will pay your board there until you can start again. Oh, come home with me to-night. You look like my own darling. What if Dotha should come to this!"

The poor frightened creature gladly took the lady's hand, and was led to a comfortable room, and provided for with sympathetic care by a lady who would have handed her over to the police a few days before.

Mrs. Harris was not accustomed to the tragic side of life and spent a restless night. Once she dreamed that a procession of drunkards' wives were holding out thin hands and crying, "You might help us." Another time she saw a terrible precipice and noble young men were being pushed into the awful abyss below, and Paul was with them, and he cried, "Oh, mother, you might have saved us." Then again pallid, homeless orphans clung to her, sobbing, "You might help feed and shelter us."

Mrs. Harris was thankful to awake and hear the glad Easter bells and know by the bright sunlight in her room she had only dreamed. When she arose she took her Bible and wrote on the fly leaf the date and these words: "God helping me I will give my might to the work of saving others."

It was a beautiful Easter to the newly resurrected soul. Though she had come in touch with sorrow and sin, she had known the heavenly joy of relieving human woe.

I wish I could follow with all the happiness that grew out of that Easter offering that Mrs. Harris put in her Bible. She not only gave her might but persuaded many of her friends to earn money, or sacrifice some luxury, or even comfort, to help the good work on. She would often say, "Are you too busy with your little children, or your housework to come and help us? Then you can send us money to do the things that the Lord gives us to do. We are trying to get the curse of drink out of our land, and to help those who are innocent sufferers. Are you an invalid? Then all the more you will try and send some help so you may not be denied the reward that will come to us for doing this work for the Master. Have you money for pleasant living? Then you will be glad to share a little of it with those whom the government allows to be robbed of the very bread the children cry for. Are you poor? Then you will want to help a little, for you can appreciate the sufferings of those who have even less."

And the W. C. T. U. soon had a home, with its own coffee rooms, and library to tempt young men from places of vice, and the orphans of that town were well cared for, and the tempted girls saved before they were able to fall, and the wives of drunkards made to feel sympathy and help, while every year it becomes harder for their husbands to fall, and all because one Easter day, one woman began to give her might unto her Risen Lord.

MOUNTING THE GREAT PETITION.

How It Was Done.

BY REBECCA C. SHUMAN.

While recently engaged in mounting upon muslin the great Polyglot Petition, I received many letters of loving sympathy and also many inquiries as to just how the work was done. At the editor's request I will try to give the readers of The Union Signal some explanation of my part in mounting the names on what is already the longest Petition known in history.

It was in June, 1891, that the first mounting of names was done. The sixty-yard bolts of white cloth used for this purpose were first torn through the middle, and the half-yard-wide strips bound with red and blue braid, those being the prevailing colors in the flags of all nations. The binding was done by hand, as I could do this when too tired with housework to run a machine.

This strip of bound muslin was then stretched along the sitting-room floor and pinned to the carpet, and the sheets of paper containing the signatures were pasted over the whole surface of the cloth as closely as they would go. I took the foreign sheets first, as they were more complete than those of our own country. The lists of names from England, Canada, and, indeed, from all the English provinces, were of uniform width and easily mounted. It was a comparatively simple matter to cut a strip from the roll of paper the length of my canvas, between pins, and paste it down. Each list of names had a column attached giving the nationality of the signers, but when the names were thus grouped together on the canvas this column became unnecessary, and in order to make the best use of the space this part of the paper was trimmed off or covered over. After the first row was "run on" the second was overlapped to the residence column, and the cloth was thus covered with as many columns of names and addresses as it would hold. Sometimes it was but two columns and sometimes five, but the average for the whole work is about four columns.

In those days of beginnings, when many perplexing questions met us in our efforts to preserve everything and still fill the canvas, Miss Alice Briggs, on one of her numerous visits to bring me the ever-accumulating rolls of paper, brought with her in the family carriage the dear old mother from Rest Cottage. Madam Willard took a great interest in the work, looking in wonder when I placed at her side the great rolls of canvas containing the signatures from Madagascar and New Zealand. "What a marvel," she exclaimed, "when we have always looked upon these as heathen countries." My own mother, then in her eighty-eighth year, was able to visit with her, and touching words were exchanged between them on the "waiting time," the sweet close of which has since come to both these true hearts. Madam Willard's visit and her lively interest in the great work before me were an inspiration, and have ever remained a cheering memory.

For ten years the faithful workers in every land have been sending in signatures to this Petition. Many of these workers, especially in our own country, have been invalid or blind men and women, or the very aged who were glad thus to "help rid our fair land of this curse"; sometimes it was a little boy or girl who proudly sent in a list. Thus have the letters and rolls steadily continued to come in; but the mounting has been done "by spells."

The first great rush was to get ready "a mile or so" for the Boston Convention, and the last and greatest strain was to complete the Petition for its recent presentation at Washington. At that time I mounted seven hundred and fifty-eight yards in thirty days.

The first work was done, as I have said, upon the floor. But I soon found this injurious and so betook myself and my multitudinous convolutions of canvas to the laundry; here I could work undisturbed on the long laundry table during warm weather. But last January I was frozen out of this refuge and had to take possession of the dining-room. By using a broad board on the dining-table I could hang the lengths of the Petition, as finished, over the register, where they quickly dried ready for rolling.

It will not require a very strong imagination to see how after awhile the ever-lengthening canvas swarmed with its folds and its rolls through dining-room, hall and parlor, until it came to be a standing threat of my family to rent a neighboring barn for a residence; of course, the mother and her work should have the home.

The foreign signatures were easily mounted, for with the exception of the Burmese rolls, they were written on one side of the paper, and on sheets of uniform size. But when the American signatures were undertaken they were found to be written on all sorts and sizes and colors of paper. Many thousands of the first names that came in were written on narrow slips of paper requiring several hours' work to fill one yard of canvas, which, when finished looked something like an old-fashioned "crazy-quilt."

The first year the names came in so irregularly that it was found impossible to keep the states separate. Since then each state from Maine to California has had its signatures under its own name. To shorten the time of standing on the feet, the paper was all trimmed and sorted before I began mounting.

The Petition is in three distinct parts:

1. The women's petition, containing the women's signatures from all countries, our noble Chieftain heading the list for our country and the gracious Lady Henry Somerset for England and her colonies; this is the longest.

2. The men's petition, with the name of Neal Dow as a leader followed by many good and great men of our country, members of the British Parliament, secretaries and ministers. High on this list is recorded the name of Chief Khama, an account of whose brave fight against the liquor traffic of the civilized nations of the world was lately given in The Union Signal.

3. The endorsers' petition, where congregations, societies and masses of people have signed by attestation through pastors and officers. This petition, though but few yards in length, rolls up the millions for us.

In answer to my plea to call the work finished Miss Willard only says, "Go on, go on." As it is her wish, shall we not rally once again for a last effort to send to her for the June Convention in London, the two million actual signers that she has set her heart upon having?

Every white-ribboner understands that it is the agitation produced by her efforts in securing the names that has done the good. Let us not weary in well-doing, but once more take up the work in earnestness of purpose, believing that we shall have strength to finish this important part of what we cannot but regard as a God-given work.

The most difficult thing in the world for a man whose eyes are open is not to believe in God, for God is everywhere. He is the necessary hypothesis of the existence of the planet around you. You look at some beautiful shell you pick up on the sea-shore; you open it and find it is tunnelled and chambered just up to the best-known engineering laws of the present day, and you see there is a mind behind it; in every direction you may see God, and you cannot do without Him.—Canon Wilberforce.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS.

BY S. H. TAFT.

Frederick Douglass and I were friends in the olden days when contempt for and persecution of the old line Abolitionists gave great significance to friendship. We were often associated together in the Liberty party campaigns. I first met Mr. Douglass at anti-slavery meetings, where he was always in demand. When lecturing in Oswego county, New York, he used often to make my father's house his home. Mr. Douglass was a delightful conversationalist and one of the best of story-tellers. His stories were free from the taint of vulgarity, always mirth provoking, often instructive. When listening to a narration of his own adventures one was often at a loss to know whether to laugh or weep, and would often do both before he knew it. No one who ever heard Mr. Douglass tell the story of his first Sunday in church after his escape from slavery will ever forget it. I will venture to repeat the story as I remember it: "On the first Sunday after my coming into a free state I attended meeting at a Methodist church. Entering the church I had proceeded but a little way up the aisle when the usher touched me on the shoulder saying, 'The colored people sit up there,' pointing up into the gallery. I went up there and found the part of the gallery designed for us with very different seats from those occupied by the white people; the partitions between our pews being much the highest, so high that none but very tall persons could see the preacher, when seated. I remained through the service in no very devotional frame of mind. It being quarterly meeting the ordinance of the Lord's Supper was observed. During the singing which followed the sermon the altar was twice filled and the communicants served, after which the presiding elder said, 'If there are any more of our white brethren and sisters who have not partaken of the sacred emblem let them now come forward.' Not to exceed half a dozen came to the altar, leaving plenty of room for all the colored members to be served at the same time, but this might not be. After these few had partaken and retired, the presiding elder, peering from the pulpit up to the retired corner occupied by the colored people, and extending both hands in an inviting and pleading manner exclaimed, 'And now let our dear colored brethren and sisters come forward; come forward, brethren and sisters, come forward and partake of the sacred emblems, for God is no respecter of persons.' I did not go forward for I felt like the simple fellow who, having applied for admission to a Baptist church, seeing that he was likely to be rejected, quickly arose and withdrew his application, giving as a reason that he had changed his mind and instead of uniting with the church he was going to join an engine company."

I had the honor to be one of the delegates representing the state of New York in the Pittsburg convention of 1852, which nominated Hale and Julian as the standard-bearers of the Free Democratic party. Among the delegates representing the Empire state were Gerrit Smith and Frederick Douglass. On our way home the cars halted for the passengers to take dinner at a station between Pittsburg and Cleveland. The New York delegation with many New England delegates, among whom were Charles Francis Adams, Amasa Walker and General Wilson, commenced gathering around a long table prepared for the occasion, when the master of ceremonies, seeing the stalwart figure of Douglass approaching the table, called out to him, "You cannot come; we don't feed niggers here." As Douglass went out the whole delegation followed him, and crossing the street we took dinner at a more hospitable table.

Mr. Douglass was a man of the highest oratorical power; he was also a statesman of marked attainments, and his statesmanship was of that high order which led him to recognize the principle of law as proclaimed by Blackstone, viz., "To command what is right and forbid what is wrong." Fidelity to this principle of law not only made him a foe to American slavery but also to all forms of monopoly, and especially to the most heartless and murderous monopoly of all, the licensed saloon traffic. His conception of law represented under a Republican form of government, made him, of necessity, a defender of equal suffrage, which cause he championed with masterly ability.

The sentiment of Terrance, a Grecian slave, uttered centuries ago, found full expression in the life and work of Frederick Douglass, viz., "Nothing pertaining to the welfare of man is foreign to me." When he came in to the political arena he found the Whig and Democratic parties wholly dominated by the slave power, and he identified himself with the despised band of Abolitionists, known as the Liberty party. He remained with this party until its place was first taken by the Free Soil party of 1848, next by the Free Democratic party of 1852, and finally by the Republican party of 1856–60. Well do I remember his terrible arraignment and condemnation of the old political parties for their guilty partnership with African slavery. On one occasion, after drawing a picture of the nation's guilt, that made every cheek tingle with indignant shame, he said: "I welcome the bolt, come it from heaven or hell, that shall break the power of these allies of American slavery." His resistless power as an orator on great occasions was unsurpassed by any of all the great men who have fought freedom's battles. At the time when the representatives of slavery stood in the pulpits, presided in our courts, mutilated our school books and made the laws of the nation, a meeting of the persecuted friends of freedom was held in Tremont Temple, Boston, Frederick Douglass being one of the speakers. He told the story of the nation's shame and of freedom's betrayal. He spoke of the anguish of his race, of the humiliation of Northern freedmen, who, by the fugitive slave law had been transformed into blood-hounds to bay upon the path of the fleeing bondman. The expression of his face and the intonations of his voice told of feelings too deep for utterance. The audience had come into such perfect sympathy with the speaker that every heart seemed ready to break with commingled feelings of humiliation, indignation and despair, when the oppressive spell was broken by Sojourner Truth, who cried out, "Frederick! is God dead?" That question, like the affirmation of Garfield on the occasion of Lincoln's assassination, pierced the brooding night of despair with the sunlight of hope.

Mr. Douglass was a deeply religious man. Believing in God, he believed in the final triumph of right. In this faith he lived and worked, and in this faith he triumphantly and peacefully died.

Mr. Douglass has been an important personality among American reformers for almost half a century. What cause having for its object the bringing in of God's kingdom upon earth, has he not advocated? He will be greatly missed. While mourning his departure, let us not fail to temper our sorrow with the sentiment of gratitude that he has been so faithful in his service to humanity and God and that the rich fruits of his labors remain to bless the world. In sad sincerity I lay upon memory's altar my tribute of respect and love for the genial, faithful friend, eloquent orator, noble patriot, wise statesman and Christian gentleman, Frederick Douglass.

"MEDIUM OF EXCHANGE."

BY HENRY VOSHOLL.

THE UNION SIGNAL for March 21, under the above heading, contained an article so full of misleading doctrine that it should not go unchallenged. In the first paragraph we read, "Money is artificial. It is wholly the creature of law. All of its attributes are given by legislative authority. Interest and the rate of interest are created and regulated and may be abolished by act of government." This quotation has only a fraction of truth in it; as a whole it is false.

Let us take Mr. Gould's own illustration of the yard-stick to see what the government does in regard to money. "A yard-stick," we are told, "is made by law a measure, and it is important that it should remain unchanged." We admit that this is true, but what does it really mean? To determine this we ask, What is the function of a yard-stick? Every one says to measure length. The one thing that a yard-stick must have is length, otherwise it cannot be used as a linear unit. Now, evidently, the government does not create length; all the law does is to cut off so much and declare this is a yard. In a sense then the yard is "artificial" and "the creature of law," but not in the sense that law can make a unit of length of that which is without length. Nor would any one contend that without government action there would be no more buying and selling involving units of length. In other words men would use a linear unit whether the law established one or not. Of course, this is not saying that a unit fixed by law may not be a very excellent thing

Now let us use our illustration to understand money. Mr. Gould says, "By the same authority [the nation's sovereign power which fixes the yard] money is not only made a measure of values and a medium of exchange, but it is also clothed with all the attributes of actual wealth." Money, then, is a measure of value just as the yard is a measure of length. But does the fiat of the government create this value? We think not. Value must be in the thing that is to be used as money just as length must inhere in that which is to be a yard. We can measure only by means of a unit that contains the elements we wish to measure. For time there must be a time unit, for weight a weight unit, for value a value unit.

Now what does the government do in the case of money? It takes gold or silver, which by the consent of all men have value; it weighs a small portion, and as a guarantee of its weight and fineness affixes its stamp. Such a bit of gold or silver we call a dollar. The law has not given it value; it has only said so much value as is contained in this bit of metal we will call a dollar, and use it for measuring values generally. Changing Mr. Gould's words slightly we say, "Such legal standard money issued by any government on the face of the earth need not be redeemable," because it has practically the same value in the goldsmith's melting pot, in the farmer's stocking, in the banker's safe and in the government's vault. Why should it be redeemable?

We agree entirely with Mr. Gould that the standard of measure should remain unchanged whether we measure lengths or values. We contend, however, that if contraction of the circulating medium—an increased value for the unit—is unjust to the debtor, expansion—a decrease in the value of the unit—is equally unjust to the creditor. If I have one hundred dollars coming to me, I can as ill afford to take a nominal one hundred dollars, having the value of only fifty of the original sum, as I could afford to take a nominal one hundred yards of cloth having only the length of fifty of the yards originally contracted for. Why should we think only of the debtor and not of the creditor? But if Mr. Gould knows of a way to absolutely prevent any variation in the unit of value, he has found the philosopher's stone for which the statesmen of the age are seeking.

Further in the "Medium of Exchange" we read, "Our national Constitution places the twin money metals, gold and silver, on a parity. That is, their legal status in our organic law." By no means. The Constitution only says "Congress shall have power to coin money"—nothing about keeping "the twin money metals on a parity." The fathers however thought—very properly doubtless—that a gold and silver coinage was best, and hence, tried to keep the metals on a parity. It is interesting, however, to notice how they went about it. They determined the relative values of gold and silver in the markets of the world and then established the ratio of weight between the coins accordingly. Mr. Gould may note, too, that this ratio was practically the same that had been adopted by the countries of Europe.

The fundamental fact is that a government cannot create value. No government has ever been able, by a mere act of law, to keep two kinds of money on a parity. Legal tender acts will not do it. Such an act may force a creditor to take a depreciated currency, but when a man has anything to sell, he cannot be forced to take such a currency. He can say, and he does say, as was the case during the Civil War: My horse is worth in gold fifty dollars, in paper one hundred and forty. Legal tender acts and government laws cannot change the facts. Rhode Island learned that to her sorrow as early as 1787.

The above criticism on Mr. Gould's article is not to be taken as an argument against the propriety and the possible advantage of having gold, silver and paper money; but it is intended to antagonize the idea that the government in any proper sense, by legal enactment, "clothes money with all the attributes of actual wealth."

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Round-the-World Letters No. 1.

REIGATE, NEAR LONDON, ENG.,
March 19, 1895.

MY DEAR WHITE-RIBBON COMRADES:—We have worked so long together that the international movement is now becoming almost as homelike in our thoughts as our own beloved "National." It is my duty and pleasure to be constantly writing and sending articles, paragraphs and helpful documents to every quarter of the globe, so that the fact that I am "President of the World's," as we say in our familiar way of speaking when together, impresses itself more deeply upon me as the years go by.

You know that on the death of our dear Margaret Bright Lucas I urged this position upon Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt when she returned from her long pilgrimage, and that when she declined it we succeeded in getting her to accept that of honorary president—subject to the confirmation of the biennial convention, on the parliamentary ground that one convention cannot bind the action of another. You also know how earnestly I have urged Lady Henry Somerset to allow her name to be used as president, and that were it brought forward she would have the unanimous vote of the white-ribbon women of Christendom; but she continues to insist that until the Polyglot Petition has been presented she would not think of doing so.

It seems to me important at the outset of these letters (which I hope to continue from time to time until the world's journey is complete) to put before you afresh the actual situation, so far as I am concerned. It now looks as if the plan, which would have been carried out if the General Officers of our National society had not, so soon as it was announced, cabled and written me of their disapproval, would be considerably modified, and that the journey will now take other forms; nor am I at all sure but that the present plan of taking up the work more gradually will be better suited to the interests of the various countries to be visited. For instance: we have now presented the Petition in our own country and it has added its quota of influence to the accumulating current of educated opinion and sentiment which is bearing our cause toward success. In June the Petition will be brought to this country by our American white ribbon delegates of the third biennial convention of the World's W. C. T. U. and presented to the British government. In the summer many of us expect to travel in Scandinavia and the Petition will be presented in Norway and Sweden, possibly also in Denmark. It is well known to you that from the nature of the case we have accomplished less on the continent of Europe than any other place in the world except in the heart of Africa. While it is true that we have a group of faithful white-ribboners in every country they have been unable to accomplish anything adequate on a national scale in the wine drinking countries of Europe. Count Tolstoi and his family in Russia, Countess Wedel-Jarlsberg, in Norway, Mrs. Selmer in Denmark, Rev. Adama von Scheltema in Holland, Mrs. Mary B. Willard and Mrs. Dr. Stuckenburg in Germany, Miss De Broen in Paris, Mrs. Gulick in Spain, Mrs. Josephine Butler in Rome and the Baroness Langenau in Vienna—these have been chief among our trusty pioneers on the continent of Europe. But now we are sending in response to earnest invitations that come to them from leaders in the purity movement, our dear Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell, who after their arduous labors here in the anti-opium cause, go to Switzerland for a brief rest and will then undertake the more thorough introduction of our work in Europe, making the purity department their point of attack in the unceasing "peaceful war." From their intelligent seed-sowing will come, I have no doubt, such a preparation for the reception of the Polyglot as will tell immensely on all our future work.

The Convention in June will select several new round-the-world missionaries. We shall hope for the presence and counsel of those who went out first, and the strongest single impetus ever given to the movement in its cosmopolitan aspect will come from that great gathering. Let me again urge our workers in the states to send from each state at least one delegate. Remember that two hundred dollars (the total expense of the trip) includes six days in London, with hotel accommodations, one week with entertainment at Grindelwald, two days at Lucerne and two days in Paris, and any who care to prolong their stay abroad can do so on very reasonable terms. All applications should be addressed to Pilgrimage Bureau, care Review of Reviews, Astor Place, New York city.

If any state lacks any fraction of the one thousand members requisite to the appointing of a delegate these can surely be secured within the next few weeks, or if not, the state can piece out its numbers by arrangement with some adjoining state. We who "at this end of the line" are helping to prepare for the Convention, do most earnestly desire to see looming up from the wide-awake West such a delegation as shall give adequate expression to the zeal and success of the white-ribbon movement in the United States and Canada, and we beg of you not to disappoint us. We are working with might and main to prepare for your coming. Now let me beg you not to fail to come. We hope to have a sermon delivered before the delegates in Westminster Abbey, and a service in St. Paul's Cathedral, a trip to Windsor Castle and a lawn party at Lady Henry Somerset's suburban home, The Priory, Reigate. These I mention as delightful incidents, but the great meetings in Queen's, St. James' and Exeter Halls will, with the presentation of the Petition to the government, be the chief attractions to our devoted workers.

We find the cause moving on as always. The local veto bill of Sir William Vernon Harcourt, chancellor of Exeter, will be presented before Easter. The papers are full of it and were never more favorable. The British W. T. A. is the right hand ally of the United Kingdom Alliance, these two societies standing side by side far in the front of any others, as they deserve to do, because of the progressive character of their principles and work. Sir Wilfrid Lawson is as full of his famous "gay wisdom" as he was thirty years ago. He says the trouble in the recent county council election was not only "Gog and Magog," but "Grog and More Grog." The liquor interest in London is solidly united against the county council; but in spite of that our side has a majority and has elected progressives to all the offices.

Lady Henry Somerset has gone to Leeds to conduct a National Conference of the White Ribbon Women. She presides in Exeter Hall March 22 at a great anti-opium demonstration to be addressed by Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell. Bishop H. M. Turner, of Atlanta, Georgia, whom we met on the steamship and who is a genius in his way, will participate in the exercises. Lady Henry and I have promised to speak with him and Miss Hallie Brown, the celebrated colored elocutionist, at a meeting in the interest of Wilberforce University, Ohio, to be held before long in Exeter Hall.

Mr. Henry J. Osborn is the greatest "worker up" of the huge public assemblages that are a special feature of the reform work in London that has yet appeared. I do not see why some of our women might not become equally well known and successful as specialists in convening those great gatherings which to the "great public" seem to indicate the high water-mark of beneficent movements and the societies that can serve them.

Anna Gordon and I are hard at work in our den at the Reigate home. We expect with the soft spring breezes soon to be blowing, to retrieve physical tone through the use of our bicycles along the shady paths of the Priory grounds. But we have "fallen to" and are hard at it with our stenographers, setting forces in motion to help make the W. C. T. U. a success.

Again urging your coöperation in the beloved home land, I am, with love from us all,

Your loyal comrade,

Frances E. Willard.

THE PEOPLE'S UNIVERSITY.

Dear Union Signal:—I wish to present to your readers an outline of the work of the People's University, which is the educational department of The Union for Practical Progress. The first permanent Local Union for Practical Progress was organized at Baltimore in April, 1893, by Rev. Hiram Vrooman. The present National Union was effected in Boston in January, 1894, chiefly through the instrumentality of B. O. Flower, editor of the Arena. Its purpose is to unite the moral forces in a systematic war on the evils of modern society. One of its methods is to unite the clergy and moral workers of modern society on a single issue each month and place in their hands data on the given subject. Each local Union also takes up such additional sociological work as may be adapted to its condition.

In several of our leading cities, notably Baltimore, San Francisco, and Providence, the work of the Union has assumed large proportions, accomplished many practical reformations and aroused thousands who heretofore were dormant to a lively interest in sociological affairs. One of its chief methods is to work through the churches by sending to the clergy every month a request to preach upon the monthly topics on the third Sunday of the month, thus concentrating and unifying the reform sentiments. Following this simultaneous discussion, committees push the work of executive action. These monthly topics are chosen by an advisory board consisting of about forty of our leading sociologists and reformers, among whom are Miss Frances E. Willard, Carroll D. Wright, Prof. John Bascom, Prof. George D. Herron, President Charles F. Thwing and others of like repute. Some of the topics which have been discussed are: The sweating system, best methods of suppressing the saloon, child labor, gambling, the unemployed and municipal reforms. For April, 1895, the topic is improved home life; May, public sanitation; June, child life, kindergarten; July, manual training in public schools.

The Arena magazine means to publish an article or symposium with an extended bibliography every month on the current topics, as have also many other leading reform and religious papers.

The labor organizations in most local centers warmly support the Union, often marching in a body to some church where the Union topic is to be discussed. In large cities they organize a central council composed of delegates from all reformatory bodies including the churches, temperance societies and trades union, to guide the local work. In the rural districts the Union becomes simply an all round social club for the discussion of reform.

The local unions have developed such a diversity of social enterprises that an educational department was organized to guide them in their various efforts. Accordingly the People's University was established with its departments of lecture bureau, correspondence courses, reading circles and dynamic religion institutes. While this work is under the general management of the Union, its constituency is by no means confined to the Union members and it was here that it was thought to be practicable to have the W. C. T. U. and kindred associations utilize the facilities for sociological education thus offered.

The lecture bureau has an array of talent covering all phases of progressive ideas. It is well equipped with speakers for Chautauqua and similar gatherings. Correspondence courses are on the basis of regular college work. Special attention is given to reformatory topics, such as the new political economy, social ideals of Christianity, etc. These are conducted by scholars of high standing, many of them professors in our leading universities.

A very interesting course in English literature is given by Prof. Frank Parsons, of Boston Law School. A course on "Modern Cities" is given by Prof. John R. Commons, of the State University, Bloomington, Ind. The reading circles on special topics are organized for those who have not time to take the full course. The institutes of dynamic religion are a series of religious meetings which emphasize the application of religious life to everyday affairs, to health, society, industry and government.

The intention is to have a loan library, after the manner of the English Fabians, which can be sent for a very small fee to rural districts, where the supply of literature is limited.

In the vicinity of Boston and Baltimore, University Extension courses are given in the new political economy and kindred subjects. The work is yet in its formative stages. Any coöperation which will extend the usefulness of this work to uplift humanity will be gladly welcomed.

Dear Workers:—How many times when our ship is plowing heavily through the deep sea we cast our eyes this way and that and strain our ears in hope that some other vessel, homeward bound, will send us

"A CHEER ACROSS THE WAVE!"

I have selected to-day from the mass of letters before me, some bearing words of cheer and encouragement which you will doubtless welcome.

The first of these bright messengers comes in a letter to Miss Willard, which she has kindly sent to me that I may pass its good word along. The writer says to our Chieftain:

"You are so kind as to ask what my thoughts are in respect to the future. In brief, to work for womankind through the lines of W. C. T. U. work and by so doing to work for humanity. I would be glad to tell you about my 'arrest of thought.' I longed to come in touch more closely with womankind and God put it into my heart to go to the first World's Convention in Boston. There I received such a baptism of the Holy Spirit that I spent many hours in prayer for a little corner somewhere in which to help on this great work. My next summer vacation was given to the forming of a union at my home. I go home once each month—a distance of one hundred and fifty miles—to attend the monthly business meetings of the union. . . I am still obliged to keep on with my teaching, but I have adopted this as my life-work and wait God's time when I shall be entirely given to it. My lot is cast with the white ribbon army."

Truly, the "Crusade fire" burns yet!

But even before encouragement we look for

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

In our special work it is ever our need that is mother to our ingenuity as to how to best gain our various good ends. The following letter is witness to this:

"If only kindergarten attachments could be made to the mothers' meetings we could take our little ones and they would enjoy it so much we might sometimes go for their sakes even when we thought we were too busy. I have two little girls and realize more deeply every day the need of wisdom to train them. I do all my own work; have no one with whom to leave the children, and if I take them (and other mothers theirs) they are apt to be restless and disturb the meeting."

Persuade some of the older daughters who love children but maybe "do not care for the W. C. T. U." to "mother" just such a kindergarten.

Mother Experience wishes that every local union would so far as possible carry out the plan which has worked admirably in that of Nashua, N. H., namely, to secure on some of the regular lecture courses kept up by the town, or by some committee thereof, a lecture from one of our best representatives, for by doing this they would succeed in having our ideas presented to a "lyceum audience," and that is one that does not always go to temperance meetings.

We are grateful to Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, president of the Washington, D. C., W. C. T. U., for the following helpful advice, given "out of personal observation and experience":

"To local unions let me say emphatically, never neglect any possible opportunity of canvassing for new members. Many a public meeting with good program, earnest speeches, full of enthusiasm and fire, fails in permanent results, because the opportunity to secure new members is allowed to pass unimproved, and the impressions produced are not crystallized into action and power through organization.

"New members once secured should not be allowed to drift away because of inattention on the part of the local union. There should be one or more women in every union, wise, tactful, well read up in our literature, enthusiastically in love with the W. C. T. U., whose duty it should be to visit new members at once, welcome them to the union, inform them conversationally, concerning our organization and work, call their attention to our leaflets and periodicals, and leave with them copies of the same, tell them of our Temple, our publishing house, and our many departments, and then see that they are regularly notified of time and place of meetings until such time as they shall become sufficiently interested to cease to need such close attention. This may seem arduous but it will pay. Nothing succeeds without work and care. There are untold possibilities in every new member. Under the skillful, loving care of veterans they should be nursed, developed, trained, and in due time given their share of responsibility. These new members will presently be the W. C. T. U. when these 'gray-haired girls' who now carry on the work have gone away to rest in the many mansions. Take care of the new members—take good care of them."

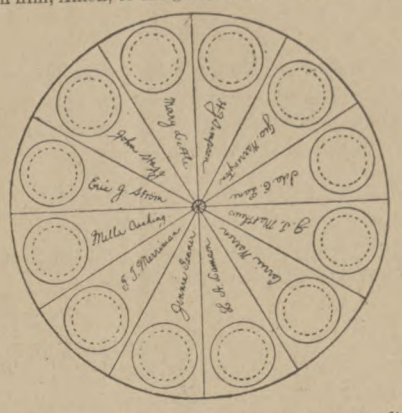
And in all our labor, let us remember that "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it."

Mother Experience.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Prayer:—Now, oh Lord God, let thy promises be established.—2 Chron. 1:9.

Promise:—All promises of God in him are yea, and in him, Amen, to the glory of God.—2 Cor. 1:20.



Marcus Aurelius says: "A wrong-doer is often a man that has left something undone, not always he that has done something." According to this theory which coincides with Christ's teachings, a great many of us must plead guilty of being on the side of the wrong-doer. Would it be uncharitable to say that all temperance people ought to be classed in the above category who have heard and read about the great effort that is being put forth this year to raise $300,000 for the Temple and are not stretching forth hands of help either by giving their thousands, their hundreds, their dollars or their dimes? We are glad that there are many, however, who are coming out on the right side of this question, who believe that "What we give we have, and what we save we lose." Of this number is Mrs. Charlotte Woodman, Cambridge, Mass. She wrote of her deep interest in the Temple and her desire to give $1,000 towards it. A call upon her by the writer when she was in Boston, three or four weeks ago, secured the above amount. It seemed a perfect joy to Mrs. Woodman to transfer the sum from her own savings (for she is not a rich woman) to the Temple treasury. Seventy-eight years of noble living have taught this great-hearted woman the true value and rightful use of money.

Mrs. Alice Cary, Madison, Wis., is another mother in Israel whose heart has been moved to aid. She writes: "I feel now that I can afford to carry out my cherished plan which is in my will, but which I would rather do while in life, return to you the enclosed Temple Trust Bond for $100, making this much more added to the Temple fund and decreasing your interest." Another noble helper is Mr. Isaac P. Monfort, Scottsburg, Ill. This good man is over seventy years old, and a "shut-in," but neither age nor failing health keeps him from working for the Temple. He writes: "I return the three Wheels you sent me filled. In addition I send you a dollar on my own individual wheelbarrow. A dear little ten-year-old girl, Stella Clary, of Good Hope, Ill., did most of the work in filling the Wheels. Please send to her address two more. I feel quite enthusiastic on the Wheel business; it is my firm belief that within two years over a million Wheels can be sent out and returned to the Temple loaded with 'filthy lucre' sufficient to pay the debt and place the Temple in the hands of those who have so earnestly worked and prayed for its success. My faith is very strong that the founder will see her heart's desire accomplished." We thank our brother for his words of cheer, and we feel assured he will prove a true prophet. This week we are receiving on an average seventy-five filled Wheels a day—an increase of over twenty-five per cent over last week.

We are continually being admonished that what we do we must do quickly. Another one of our standard-bearers has been suddenly caught up from work to glory,—Mrs. L. J. Stapler, the president of the W. C. T. U. of Indian Territory. On Saturday she was out attending to her usual work, in the evening she was taken ill and Sunday morning winged her way heavenward. She was a grand and noble soul. Well do I remember the sweet converse I had with her at the last National Convention at Cleveland. Her daughter, Miss Ella M. Stapler, writes: "One of the last things mother did on earth was to rush off some filled Wheels for the Temple." Dear saint; that may have been her last work on that Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. Emily F. Fowler sends $35, which completes one hundred dollars the union of West Chester county, N. Y., have contributed to place the name of Maggie Knapp on the New York tablet. Mrs. A. C. Davis sends $10 on the pledge of the Lockland, Ohio, W. C. T. U. Mrs. F. H. Wright, treasurer for Webster Grove, Mo., W. C. T. U., sends $34.30 raised through the Temple mite-boxes. She writes: "We hope to increase the amount to one hundred dollars during the coming year." Mrs. C. F. Kingsbury, Springfield, Mass., sends $15 on the union's pledge.

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money order and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1113, The Temple, Chicago.

OUR LORD IS RISEN.

BY LOUISA S. WEIGHTMAN.

The night is dark! Thick clouds enfold
The silver moon, the pale stars hold
Their breath in awe, for lo! has died
In pain and woe the Crucified.

But hark! All nature cries "Awake!"
A glorious day begins to break,
And on each quivering ray is borne
Message of resurrection morn.

Roll back, roll back, ye clouds of night,
Roll back, O Rock! Ye angels bright,
Proclaim the message far and near:
"Our Lord is risen. He is not here!"

Angels and men, rejoice and sing,
Loud let your hallelujahs ring,
That empty tomb proclaims this hour,
That death is robbed of all his power.

No more the grave is dark and drear,
Death holds no sting, no gloom, no fear.
Discrowned and conquered, now he waits
A porter at the heavenly gates.

Oh! human heart, by sorrow torn,
Oh, tear-dimmed eye, no longer mourn;
Who die in Christ their sleep how blessed,
How sweet, how undisturbed their rest.

How short the night! How glad that day
When angels roll all rocks away!
And ransomed spirits shall arise
To greet their Lord in Paradise.

MINING IN A SAND-PILE.

BY ESTELLE M. AMORY.

"Don't cry, Johnny! Come in and let me sew some buttons on your pants."

The sobbing little fellow was giving his sadly demoralized garments an impatient jerk when Mrs. Reynolds called him. At the invitation he gathered the loose band into his dirty fist and trudged up the walk.

"When the buttons are on you'll look better and have more time to play."

Johnny gave his would-be benefactor an inquiring glance.

"You won't have to spend your time holding on to your pants," was the smiling explanation, at which the lad gave an appreciative laugh. "Go to the kitchen, Johnny, and while I am sewing you can wash yourself."

The buttons were on and the rent in the seat made secure before the noise of the bath ceased, for Johnny seemed determined to make the most of this unusual opportunity.

The little four-year-old fellow was next to the youngest of eight children. The father was a dissolute, profane man, and the overworked mother had long since settled down to her miserable environment, scarcely ever giving a thought to a better life. Day after day she and her older child stood over wash tubs and ironing boards, earning a scanty support for the family. The father's wages, though fair, were thrown into the saloon-keeper's till.

The good people of the avenue adjoining Wash Alley had long since, in the interests of economy and fastidiousness, given over to the care of the city missionary the bodies and souls of its wretched inhabitants. So thoroughly had the policeman enforced their wishes that the dirty swarm of children from this uncanny quarter seldom strayed up the avenue to play.

But during the repairing of Mrs. Reynolds' house a tempting pile of sand lay just outside the front yard, and, as naturally as ducks find water, the children of Wash Alley had been drawn to this sand-pile.

Mrs. Reynolds was not less sensitive than her neighbors to the fights and foul speech of these unsightly children. But two little graves in the cemetery made her heart tender toward all little ones. There was something quite winning about forlorn Johnny, and she longed to keep him from the coarse ways into which he must inevitably drift were no hand reached out to save him.

For several days she had prevailed upon her husband not to have the sand-pile removed, hoping for an opportune moment when she should find Johnny alone. At the hottest time of this hot July day it had come. The other children had sought the river for a swim, Johnny being left to the sand pile under the severest of threats should he attempt to follow. It was his prolonged cries that had awakened Mrs. Reynolds from her afternoon nap.

Johnny did not give an audible "thank you" as he presented himself in the sitting-room in the renovated pants, but his face, which was still streaked here and there with grime, was sufficiently lit up with gratitude.

"Now I can hitch on my s'penders," he exclaimed triumphantly, and without further ceremony ran home to find them.

The next morning Mrs. Reynolds heard an unusual commotion at the sand-pile. She glanced through the shutters and listened. Johnny's six brothers were there, pouring forth a torrent of abuse and throwing stones and sand toward the house.

"That pile shall be removed before noon," she said decidedly, as she left the window where she had been an unseen listener. She started for the carriage house to call Mr. Reynolds' attention to the matter, but at the back door stood the sorrowful little figure of Johnny, one hand still clutching at his pants and the other full of buttons.

"Ma cutted 'em off," he cried, "an' give my s'penders to Jim," looking with hopeless appeal into her face.

Mrs. Reynolds' indignation vanished, for at a glance she realized the hapless environment of these almost worse than homeless children. Looking tenderly at the little fellow she breathed a prayer that she might save these children from their evil ways rather than herself from hearing and seeing them, as was her first impulse.

"We will make them all right some day," was her cheering response to the lad, and giving him a fat doughnut by way of present consolation, she invited him to stay awhile and play on the back porch.

After a time, the boys, tired of performing without an audience, went away, all save Johnny, who visited the sand-pile as soon as the others left. In a few moments he came running to the back door crying, "See my pitty stone! I'll div it to you."

It was indeed a cunning little pebble, smooth and delicately marked, and Mrs. Reynolds accepted it saying, "We'll make a trade; here's a doughnut for it."

Having had no breakfast the toothsome doughnut was soon dispatched and he again started for the sand-pile, saying, "If I fin' another stone, will you div Jim a doughnut?" Ready promise was given.

Not returning for some time, Mrs. Reynolds went out to see if he were still delving.

"I don't be've dere is any more," he said looking quite discouraged with evident thought of the savory prize.

"Let me help you," and she began sifting the yellow sand through her delicate fingers, and asking a few questions whose answers drew her more tenderly toward the child and his unhappy home. As they sat there the three brothers next older than Johnny appeared on the opposite side of the street and again began their abusive talk. "You ain't bad," was Johnny's comforting assurance as Mrs. Reynolds utterly ignored the presence and actions of the boys, and kept delving deeper and faster than ever for the desired pebble.

"I've got 'im," presently shouted the zealous little digger. "Now I div Jim dat doughnut an' he'll say you're dood too," and taking the twisted cake he made for his brothers.

"Dat lady div me dis for you, Jim, for fin'ing her a pitty stone. She div me two"—with evident importance—"an' I dess she'll div you all some, if you fin' her some more an' don' call her bad names," pleaded the little diplomat excitedly.

Before the plea was finished the divided doughnut had acted like oil upon the troubled waters and the boys were following Johnny somewhat shamefacedly across the street.

"Can I get you boys to hunt some of these lovely pebbles for me?" asked the tactful Mrs. Reynolds; "I have stones and pebbles from almost every country, and after you find me some more we will go in the house and see them."

Many truly curious and interesting stones soon rewarded the search that ensued which was followed by a sight of Mrs. Reynolds' unique collection and more satisfactory still, doughnuts and luscious lemonade.

"I will gladly pay you for any pretty stones you can find me here or along the river bank," she said, as they were leaving armed with a bag of doughnuts she made them believe they had earned.

"An' we'll make ma an' Kate take it back the next time they call you names fur fixin' Johnny up, see if we don't."

"Oh, no, if you boys help her, I think she will find time to do it herself. I am sorry I hurt her feelings."

There was something in her manner that drew Jim to make an apology for his and his brothers' shameful conduct, awkwardly expressed, to be sure, but sincere.

"We'll stan' up fur ye agin 'em all," added Jim with rude gallantry.

With the affection of the children, hers, Mrs. Reynolds soon found access to their home, where by her sweet, tactful ways, she brought many wonderful things slowly but surely to pass.

September saw the boys neatly clothed and in school where they had scarcely ever been on account of their poverty and the hopeless indifference of their parents; and Johnny, the unwitting link of it all, with "buttons and s'penders an' a west," was reveling in the delights of the kindergarten.

The sandpile seemed to Mrs. Reynolds too precious to be carted off, so after due consultation with "the boys" it was taken to their back yard in Wash Alley for other children to enjoy.

"I found gems immortal in that old sand-pile," I have more than once heard dear Mrs. Reynolds declare.

THE BOW OF PROMISE.

BY HARRIET NEWELL SWANWICK.

Glorious gladness crowned the dawning,
Of the first bright Easter morning,
Like a rainbow's gleam.
Far adown the rolling years,
Through the mists of falling tears,
Flows that Light Supreme.

Claim His promise, weary-hearted,
Grieve no more o'er hopes departed,
Cheered by Love's own beams.
Leave the past with all its wounds,
Forward! march to higher grounds,
Ye whom Christ redeems.

THE JOY OF OUR LORD.

Our Lord has told us that His Father's life and His are, from the beginning, one unintermitting, infinite work. He came to us, "not to be ministered unto, but to minister." Did that ministry end when He cried out on the cross, "It is finished"? Have apostles and martyrs and all holy men and women down to our own time been doing merely a work of their own, or is it He Himself, His Spirit in them, who has accomplished all good that is done in the world until now? If we believe in a living Christ, "the Son of Man who is in heaven," we must believe that He is still giving His loving service to the beings for whom He lived and died on earth, a service inconceivably more glorious because it is now wholly a spiritual work.

Yes, service is the law of the heavenly life, and heartily entering into it, we enter into joy—the joy of our Lord.

To enter into His joy! It means freedom and shelter and communion. It includes all the hospitalities of earth and of heaven. To be welcomed into every room in our Father's house—to blend our life as music with the harmonies of His universe—to be at peace forever, forever at one with the onward movement of His holy and glorious will! To feel ourselves each a part of the vast unity of things together in Him—to help Him in shaping the new heaven and the new earth—to know that nothing exists that is not an element of His joy and ours! This it is to be at home in the New Jerusalem—"built as a city that is at unity in itself."

It is the joy of our Lord.

The souls that walk white-robed there are the souls of those who, with Him, have laid down their lives for the saving of other lives. So are their garments washed white in the blood of the Lamb. And in the spirit of that sacrifice they go on, from glory to glory. They cannot cease from giving themselves; it has become the habit of their entire being. They are full of the light of their Lord's love, and they must forever radiate His blessedness. Wherever they are needed in His universe, they go forth, swifter than sunbeams, on His errands. To be with Him in His heaven, is not only to have lost all selfishness, but to know no joy in life except in giving that life forth continually to others.

"I looked, and behold, a door was opened in heaven." A door—swinging back on musical hinges before the discouraged wanderers of earth, inviting them to hospitalities glimpsed beyond, inconceivable to the heart of man. A door? Those are not unfolding portals, they are outspread arms, and above them is the glory of a face, and from within there floats the tenderness of a voice,—

"I am the door!"

It is He, the Lord of life Himself: and we, who were so weary of our vain efforts to conquer the evil, the pettiness and unlovingness of our natures, are uplifted, upborne to His heart, and its mighty throbbings become the inspiration of our own. He does for us what we could not do for ourselves, and we are saved. Henceforth there is no life for us but His.—Lucy Larcom's "As It Is In Heaven."

BIDDY'S EASTER EGGS.

The topknot biddy, with yellow legs,
  Was Harry's, and every morn
He gave her orders for Easter eggs
  While he scattered the oats and corn.
Day by day, for a week, he fed
  Rations of every hue;
Chosen ears of yellow and red,
  And squaw-corn, white and blue.

"Now, Biddy Topknot," I heard him say,
  "Easter will be here soon;
A dozen eggs, at least, you must lay
  By to-morrow afternoon;
Red ones, Biddy, the nicest kind,
  And yellow and blue, real bright,
Speckled, and striped, and spotted; now mind
  Zat you make 'em zackly right!"

But in spite of feeding and coaxing, too,
  His biddy would only lay,
Instead of red and yellow and blue,
  Just one white egg a day.
And Harry's patience was sorely tried,
  But he waited and watched the nest,
And stroked his biddy, and softly sighed,
  "I fink she will do her best."

On Easter morning, wasn't it fun
  To look at him through a crack!
He went to the nest, as he'd often done,
  But soon came capering back
With his apron full of Easter eggs,
  Striped and speckled and gay.
The topknot biddy with yellow legs
  Was petted and praised that day.

He told mamma just how it befell;
  She listened again and again;
'Twas such a pleasure to hear him dwell
  On the skill of his wonderful hen.
And when he had gone to share his prize
  With Susy and Katy and Ned,
The dear mamma looked ever so wise,
  But never a word she said.

EASTER EGGS.
A True Story.

BY GRETTA.

I WONDER if the boys and girls who read The Union Signal can imagine a young girl living twelve years of her life in a Christian country, in a Christian home, taught to go regularly to church, to read the Bible; who knew the beautiful story of Christ's life; who could not listen to the sad news of His death without a choking sensation in her throat, and whos heart had "burned within" her in sympathy with the disciples, as He showed Himself to them after His resurrection, and yet had never known or kept Easter as a religious festival.

You, favored American Sunday-school children, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and ninety-five, with your "Children's Day" and "Harvest Home" and Christmas and Easter festivals, cannot imagine this to be a true statement. Can you?

But if any of you have Scotch Presbyterian ancestors they will tell you why it may be so, for this happened many years ago in an old historic town in Scotland, and I should like to tell you more of the little girl's life there, but I started to tell about Easter eggs, and shall confine myself to that.

At twelve years of age a new life and a new world had opened to Mattie Mitchell. She had crossed the ocean to live with an uncle in America, and, for the first time in her life, on a farm.

What delightful surprises and experiences to one who had never before lived in the country! First, the glory of the autumn days, the bustle of gathering in the winter stores; then the winter months, with the indoor occupations and good cheer, all so new to her; but the spring, waking everything into life, was best of all.

She busied herself with her cousins in raking the door-yard, that the fresh young grass would have a good start, in caring for the feeble lambs, in feeding the pigs and in milking the cows.

But the greatest fun of all was in hunting for hens' nests! What delight to come unexpectedly on one hidden away in the depths of a hay-stack, or in the thatched roof of the old log sheep-pen! Then to join the roguish cousins, carefully concealing their treasures, and demand of the gentle, smiling house-mother, "Guess how many eggs we found!"

One bright, spring afternoon the young cousins whispered to her that next Sunday would be Easter, and that now they must hide away some eggs every evening, so that they would have plenty on Easter.

As Mattie looked her surprise, they explained, "Everybody can have all the eggs they want to eat on Easter, and everybody tries to eat more than anybody else." As she was very fond of eggs, Mattie entered heartily into the sport, and was somewhat surprised, after all, when Easter came, that her stomach did not fulfil her expectations. So Mattie came first to know about Easter, just as a day of feasting on eggs. In leaving the old home across the ocean, she had left church and Sunday-school, Band of Hope, yes, and even Bible reading behind. In that isolated farm-house, Easter day suggested nothing more to these children than eating plenty of eggs.

But during the following year a change came, and Mattie learned to love the day for what it really meant.

With her uncle and cousins she crossed the great prairies to live in a new home in a great valley of the far West, where the red man had been in possession only a few years before. A Sunday-school had been organized, however, meeting from house to house. A Loyal Temperance Legion met on week days, and the children were instructed in temperance principles.

On Easter day preparations were made to celebrate by song and story the joyful fact that "Christ is Risen."

An appeal was made to the little temperance band to send an Easter offering to the sick children at the Temperance Hospital in Chicago. Their sympathetic hearts gladly responded, but how could they, was the question that arose, for they were so poor. Luxuries they had none, nothing but bare necessities. Money they rarely saw; eggs were their only medium of circulation at the village grocery. Eggs! ah, yes, their faces brightened, they were to be allowed some to eat on Easter day.

"Would they, could they deny themselves their one Easter luxury for the sake of the dear Lord's sick little ones?" was the question. You shall see what they did.

Easter dawned bright and beautiful. The prairies had been scoured the day before for the blossoms that now graced the day and the occasion, and from every home came the children bearing their Easter offering of eggs, in such numbers and with beaming faces that plainly showed that they already realized it was more blessed to give than to keep.

Next day the eggs were turned into money at the nearest town and the amount, although not large, sent to the Temperance Hospital to minister to the comfort of the poor sick children under its care.

Now, do not the boys and girls who have read this story agree with Mattie in thinking that of the "two ways of using Easter eggs," the last is the best?

Dear Boys and Girls:—Why are eggs so prominent at Easter? Does any one know?

Perhaps you will be surprised to learn that the custom of giving eggs at Easter time is as old as the day itself. It began with the Persians about a thousand years ago on account of their belief that all things are produced from an egg, and the custom grew in that country of presenting each other with an egg, the symbol of the New Year, the beginning of things. Their New Year was in March. They considered eggs, too, as the emblems of the world because they were thought to represent the four elements.

There are many quaint illustrations of the way in which Easter was celebrated in olden times. I will tell you of some of them.

A number of children would gather at a church, and the first who came placed themselves with their backs against the church and joined hands; as more came they kept this up until there was a row entirely around the church; then they all separated and went to another church to repeat the ceremony. This was called "Clipping the church."

Among the poor German peasants, the children only have eggs once a year, and that at Easter, which they call "fox day." At noon their mothers say to them:

"Quick, run and see if the fox is coming!"

Then all the children in the village can be seen running up and down the streets. During their absence, the mothers hide the colored eggs, one for each of the children who are soon called in to go hunting for the eggs, which they consider great fun.

How are you going to spend your Easter?

We go two blocks and a half to Sunday-school and pass four saloons, but mamma says when we temperance boys and girls grow up there will be no saloons. I mean to do all I can for temperance, but some of the boys call me "sissy" because I tell them it is wrong to smoke cigarettes.

May I be permitted to the Cozy Corner long enough to tell about our temperance canary bird? His name is "Dickey." He is six years old. He is not kept shut in the cage, but has his liberty in the house and comes to the table at meals. His drink is cold water. Yesterday, to our astonishment he was flying about the room with the W. C. It is Christ that died, yea, rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us.—Rom. 8:34.

THE LESSON OF EASTER.

Easter is the distinctive festival of Christianity. Not the birth, but the resurrection of its founder is that which causes the Christian religion to differ from all others. Heathen nations celebrate their Christmas-tides; no other religion celebrates a life through death—a rising from the grave into "newness of life."

The apostles made Easter, or the great truth of which Easter is the symbol, the center of their teaching. Peter's sermon on the day of Pentecost turned upon the resurrection as its grand pivotal point. Paul's preaching was summed up in one sentence: "He declared unto them Jesus and the resurrection"; while he clearly indicated his conception of the preëminence of this doctrine when he cried out, "If Christ be not risen then is our preaching vain, and your faith is vain."

The early Christian Church built itself upon this hope. Long before Christmas had a place in the sacred calendar, Easter was marked with a white stone in the hearts of the suffering, persecuted believers everywhere. The Catacombs bear pathetic witness to this fact. The majority of the inscriptions there are symbolic of the resurrection. The thought of a triumphing Saviour, whose glorious might could not be overthrown by even "the last great enemy," was the thought of all others which brought to them cheer. In His resurrection they saw not only their own triumph over the grave, but the glorious triumph of right over the forces of darkness. Small wonder that the favorite greeting between Christians during the first three centuries should have been, "The Lord is risen indeed!"

The prosperity and speedy popularity which came to Christianity after the days of Constantine tended to exalt the form at the expense of the true meaning of the symbolic days of the church. Easter suffered with the rest until in the dark ages it had become a mere glittering pageant; a body without a soul. The Protestant reaction made Easter, together with Christmas, the sign manual of Popery, and in the intense bitterness of those days there were few who dared or cared to look beneath the surface to find the vital truth hidden beneath the pomp of ritualistic trappings.

It is only of late years that the Protestant churches have begun to realize the divine uplift of soul, the strengthening of faith and the deepening of hope which come from the true appreciation and a right observance of Easter. Even now we doubt if the church, as a whole, is willing to concede these facts; but prejudice is being more and more dispelled, the observance of Easter becoming more and more frequent. And when once observed it becomes its own most potent advocate and works out its own propaganda. What lessons does it bring to us?

First, the old yet ever new lesson that Jesus Christ "rose from the dead," that in that rising He showed forth His own divine might as Son of God, and became also the earnest of our inheritance of immortality. "He became the first fruits of them that slept." These are old truths. We have heard them so often that we are sadly apt to overlook their true meaning; but when we come to face them anew what do they show forth but the central truth of the universe—that light must conquer darkness; right must triumph over wrong; God must be greater than all that can oppose God?

Suppose Jesus had been born, had lived, had died, and had not risen from the grave. What an awful mockery would His life have been; what a cruel tragedy His death! What hope would humanity have had as it faced the grave? What hope before the darkness of sin of which the grave is only a type?

Life would have been forever an unsolved problem; an unguessed riddle. The daily conflict between good and evil in which the odds seem so hopelessly against good, would have driven the world mad. Once admit that wrong can conquer right, and you have given the lie to the very existence of a God. But if the life of Jesus Christ had ended on the cross, if the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea had held Him prisoner, what would that have been but the conquest of evil over good? Here was a life absolutely given to righteousness; a life which was righteousness incarnate. Because of its righteousness it came into contact with the forces of unrighteousness. In a truer sense than most theologies teach, the sin of humanity brought Him to the grave. If He had stayed there would not unrighteousness have been the victor? and if we can conceive of unrighteousness triumphing in the end, in a single contest with righteousness, then we must admit that the foundation principle of the universe is destroyed.

But Christ rose from the dead. He must rise from the dead. Our hypothesis has been not only imaginary but absolutely impossible. So long as God is God, right must conquer wrong. Peter struck the keynote of Eastertide when he declared, "It was not possible for Him to be holden of it." Christ, the incarnate life, the revelation of the heart of God, could not be holden of death. He passed through its mystery but only that He might show it to the world henceforth robbed of its terror. His passage through the grave made it forevermore "a covered way leading from light to light, through a brief darkness." The eternal Life of which He was the one perfect exponent broke through the bands of death as the butterfly breaks through the chrysalis; and when He appeared before the revelator, His calm statement concerning Himself was, "I am He that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore and have the keys of death and of hell." The mystery is solved; the unconquerable is conquered; master forever of the situation the risen Christ faces the rising world.

"Because He lives we shall live also." That is what it all means. Be of good cheer, beloved. To us, too, life shall come through death. The corn or wheat which falls into the ground and dies shall not abide alone. The darkness of the earth shall be the nourishing mother from which shall spring forth "much fruit." We, too, shall be victors—we—humanity. The deed wrought for right shall not fail of its purpose. The hand lifted for God shall not fall powerless. The forces of the universe are on the side of good, and good must triumph. The pathway to that triumph may lie through the grave, but not surer is it that the dead earth shall waken into the resurrection of the springtide than that from that grave the buried good must come forth into "newness of life." It is not possible for good to be holden of evil. Christ rose from the dead and became the first fruits of every buried principle and work of righteousness. Because He lives, we our best, our truest selves, shall live also, and always.

EASTER JOY.

The Lenten season has passed into Easter gladness as the warm April sunshine brightens the lengthening days after the cold winds of the preceding weeks.

Sadder than the dirges of the bleakest wind were the hearts of the disciples during the days of their Lord's arrest, trial, crucifixion and burial. What dark days and nights were those to that scattered, terrified, hopeless little band! Now that their Lord was dead and buried in the tomb, they were stunned, dazed and in utter despair. "For as yet they knew not the Scripture that He must rise again from the dead." For them the sun had gone down never to rise again. What anguish of despair was in the words of the weeping Mary, "They have taken away my Lord and I know not where they have laid Him," and in the words of the two disciples who, having lost all hope, were going away from the scene of their sorrow to Emmaus, "We trusted that it had been He which should have redeemed Israel; and besides all this to-day is the third day since these things were done." And when Mary, to whom He appeared first, "went and told them that had been with Him, as they mourned and wept, they, when they heard that He was alive and had been seen of her, disbelieved."

No language could more forcibly depict the hopelessness of their grief. They were utterly incredulous of the first reports that Jesus had risen. When the two Marys, who were first at the sepulcher, "and other women that were with them, told these things to the apostles, their words seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not." And when the two disciples to whom He had revealed himself on the way to Emmaus, "went and told it to the residue, neither believed they them." But as the evidence that He had risen accumulated, their faith gradually grew to grasp the transcendent truth, until even Thomas, overwhelmed with conviction, exclaimed: "My Lord and my God!"

The unmistakable proof that He had risen indeed, which they received, lifted them from the blackness of despair to the highest pitch of exultation and joy. It flashed the full light of the risen sun upon their night. It restored to them their dearly loved Lord, and convinced them that He was divine. The Christ they gained when He rose was more to them than the Christ they had buried. They had given up the Jewish Messiah as lost, but the Saviour of mankind came back to them. They had expected Him to "redeem Israel" from the Roman yoke, but He overcame a greater foe—He vanquished the terrors of death and the grave.

Such were some of the reasons for the Easter joy of the disciples. What are ours? We have even greater reason to rejoice than they had, in that our knowledge of the full significance and importance of Christ's resurrection to the race is greater than theirs. They rejoiced that their beloved Master and Friend, with whom they had been in sweet fellowship for three years, had come back to them. We rejoice that His resurrection is the pledge and proof of the resurrection of all men. Standing in the presence of the Easter memorials that "the Lord is risen, indeed," we are just as certain that we shall be raised from the grave as we are that He is risen. "For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ risen."

To all who accept Christ as their Saviour from sin and keep His commandments, His resurrection is the pledge of a glorious immortality of perfect happiness. Inspiration has not revealed all the blessedness of heaven. It tells us that neither hunger, nor thirst, nor sin, nor sickness, nor sorrow, nor pain, nor death, can ever enter that blessed abode, and intimates that all its sources of felicity cannot be revealed to men: "For eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."

Another cause for Easter joy is that Christ's resurrection is the pledge of the eternal reunion of loved ones. "For I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not as those who have no hope, for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them, also, who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

Such are some of the reasons which should make Easter the most joyful day of the year. It means that "Christ is risen and become the first fruits of them that sleep," and that all men shall be raised from death. It means the blessed immortality and the eternal reunion with Christ and with one another of those who have loved and obeyed Him on earth. And more: His resurrection is the sure pledge of the triumph of His kingdom. The progress of truth and righteousness may seem slow to us. Their victory over selfishness, injustice and oppression seems delayed, but we know that He who triumphed over death "shall not fail nor be discouraged till he have set judgment in the earth," and "the inhabitants of the world shall learn righteousness." It is, therefore, the strongest possible incentive to every good work, to pure and consecrated living. Since Christ is risen, His truth must conquer, and since we shall live forever, we shall see the glorious fruition of our labor for the advancement of that truth. This was the great lesson the apostle drew from his conclusive argument for the resurrection: "Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

MRS. ELLA F. M. WILLIAMS.

Scarcely half a year has elapsed since the World's W. C. T. U. was called upon to give up its secretary to a higher service. To-day white-ribboners around the world mourn the departure of their treasurer, and as before we voiced our sorrow for ourselves and our congratulations for Mary A. Woodbridge, so now we mingle joy and tears in our memoriam of Ella F. M. Williams—joy for her who has passed beyond the "waking and the sleeping," beyond the "parting and the meeting," tears for the work and the workers and the friends on earth who will so sadly miss her visible presence and strong personality.

The news of Mrs. Williams' death came to Headquarters with the shock that an unexpected death always brings. We knew she had been ill, but the latest report was that she was improving. In response to a request for a sketch of her life for the new book of "Sketches of White-ribboners," which the W. T. P. A. is bringing out, she wrote to the editor only two days before her death:

"Strangely enough, the night after writing you I was suddenly taken violently ill, and I have been forbidden to dictate anything until to-day. I am now pronounced 'on the mend' and send you my first note and dictation. Under the circumstances it is not very brilliant, but use what you wish of it."

This note, written evidently with a trembling hand, was received at the Temple March 29, at which time the faithful, loving hand which penned it was even then at rest. The sketch which accompanied it we give below. While she dictated it her feet were already slipping over the brink, her every sense opening to the glories of the better world. This gives it unique value:

Like many another of the active white-ribboners, Mrs. Ella Williams, the treasurer of the World's W. C. T. U., is of New England descent, tracing her ancestry directly back to that branch of the Dickinson family which came from England to America in 1629. Her father—Rev. N. S. Dickinson—was for more than thirty years a Congregational clergyman in Massachusetts, well known among his contemporaries, before the Civil War, for his fearless advocacy of anti-slavery and prohibition principles. Ella was born in Wendell, Mass., September 28, 1849, but the greater part of her early life was spent in the vicinity of Boston where, for the most part, her education was personally conducted by her father. Later she attended Wheaton Seminary for three years, graduating in 1869.

After teaching two years, she married Charles T. Williams, a young business man of Cambridge, and went there to reside. Removing to Montreal, Canada, in the spring of 1874, Mr. and Mrs. Williams at once found awaiting them an abundance of Sunday-school, temperance and mission work, into which they entered with much youthful enthusiasm. The "Crusade fire" from Ohio spread more slowly in Canada than in the United States, but when the first W. C. T. U. was organized in Montreal Mrs. Williams at once joined, and after the first few weeks became corresponding secretary of the large city union, which soon numbered nearly one thousand two hundred members. When the isolated unions in the Province combined to form a Provincial organization, Mrs. Williams was one of the original executive. With a ready talent for organization and a perfect willingness to be changed to any position where there was need for service, she has held many different offices in local, Provincial and National unions, and considers it a great help to her that she has had practical acquaintance with so many different branches of the work. Among other things she has served as Provincial superintendent flower mission work, 1887–91; Provincial recording secretary, 1890–92; superintendent of flower missions in Dominion W. C. T. U., 1889–93; treasurer of Dominion W. C. T. U., 1890–92, when she was elected president of the Canadian forces.

She was unanimously reëlected the next year and with but one dissenting voice at the last convention, so that for three years she has been at the head of the Canadian white ribbon workers. Meantime in 1891, while in Boston, attending the first convention of the World's W. C. T. U. she was elected treasurer of that organization, an office to which she was reëlected in Chicago and still holds.

All these different branches of service have demanded newspaper, leaflet and platform work and her pen is usually kept busy many hours a day, still she has found time for church and missionary interests, having just resigned, after four years' service as treasurer of the Congregationalist Woman's Board of Canada.

We cannot fail to read between the lines the consecrated spirit of the writer; the spirit which gives prominence to the work rather than to the worker; the spirit which would emphasize the point not that she has been a valuable and efficient server of the W. C. T. U., but that she "considers the work has been a great help to her."

Of the place which the beloved president of the Dominion of Canada held in the hearts of Canadian white-ribboners and of the memorial service held by them in her honor her faithful co-worker and the official reporter for The Union Signal, Mrs. Margaret G. Ure, of Montreal, thus tells:

It can truly be said of Mrs. Williams that "To know her was to love her," and to be associated with her in work of any kind was a privilege. Her bright, cheery way of looking at things, and large-minded charity acted as a solvent on all difficult problems, and after a talk with her, that which had weighed as a discouraging burden was picked up lightly with fresh courage. Her rare executive ability made her eminently fitted to fill the positions of honor and trust from which she had to choose, so many were urged upon her. Like all real leaders she was quick to recognize ability in others; while needed, her help was unstinted, but her constant endeavor was so to train her workers that they could walk alone and be a law unto themselves.

Deeply interested in missionary and Christian work of every kind it was against the deadly evil of intemperance that Mrs. Williams put forth her strength, and only those who realized her intimate knowledge of every department of the work can in any measure estimate the loss her death is to the Dominion of Canada. Indeed, her influence extended far beyond the Dominion, and her name was held in love and reverence wherever women were engaged in earnest Christian temperance work.

By the wish of Mrs. Williams the funeral service was conducted in the simplest manner, a quiet house service. In Canada it is not the custom for ladies to go to funerals, but at least fifty members of the W. C. T. U. claimed the privilege of following the remains of their beloved leader, thus showing their appreciation of her worth and sympathy with her sorrowing husband.

Beautiful flowers, in many devices, were sent by Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard, Miss Anna Gordon, the Provincial unions of Ontario and Quebec and many local unions.

MEMORIAL SERVICE.

It was with full hearts and an aching sense of loss that the friends of Mrs. Williams met to do her honor on the afternoon of Monday, April 1, in the Evangelistic Hall, Montreal, where so often they had looked into her bright face and listened to her words of cheer and counsel.

The bright face was still there in the form of a life-like portrait, surrounded by the flowers she loved. The keynote of the gathering was given by the presiding officer,

MRS. ELLA F. M. WILLIAMS.

Miss Dougall, county president, and soon "the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness," descended like a benediction on those whose mourning was turned into thanksgiving as one after another spoke of the influence which their loved leader had exerted on their lives.

A letter was read from Mrs. Todd, vice-president of the Dominion W. C. T. U., expressing in beautiful terms her appreciation of Mrs. Williams' character and services to the Dominion.

Telegrams of sympathy and sorrow were read from the officers of the National W. C. T. U., editors of The Union Signal and the Canadian temperance organ, The Woman's Journal.

After several beautiful tributes and tender hymns, Mrs. Stephenson spoke most feelingly and appreciatively of Mrs. Williams in her connection with church work. Her allusions to the bright, helpful, ever-ready spirit imprisoned in a delicate body made every heart swell as each one thought of the special occasions on which she had carried to Mrs. Williams the burden of sorrow or perplexity, or indignation, and had come away comforted, straightened out and pacified. The little frictions and entanglements consequent on the running of a large organization, were smoothed out or melted away under her skillful touch and large-minded charity. Without a most rare amount of executive ability it would have been impossible for Mrs. Williams to do all she did, but so quietly and unostentatiously was it done that it was only when the work dropped from her fragile fingers and the gaps left unfilled that the breadth and variety of her interest was realized.

As for her private works of benevolence they are beyond count. One little incident simply told by the Bible woman engaged by the Central W. C. T. U., may serve as an example. Asked by Mrs. Williams to recommend a work-woman, she, with some misgiving, sent one who was in poor health, hardly thinking her services would be worth much. Mrs. Williams cheered the poor creature, nourished her into fresh life, and had Mr. Williams drive her home every evening till strength returned.

Memorial services are sometimes matters of form, but when love speaks out of the heart in faltering tones, it is a truer witness than the clash of trumpets and high sounding praises. Such lives as Mrs. Williams' are an inspiration to all who are brought into contact with them.

The editor of the Interior, referring to the ringing in the ear of an attractive strain of music, or stanza of poetry, which all have experienced, suggests the following verse as something which will attach itself to the memory with happy results—a suggestion which I am glad to pass on:

"We all can do more than we have done,
And not be a bit the worse.
It never was loving that emptied the heart,
Or giving that emptied the purse."

In Germany the problem of how to treat wife-beaters has been solved in a far wiser way than in most other countries, for there the brutal husband must work all through the week, then turn over his wages to his wife on pay day and go to jail Saturday night and Sunday; about two weeks of this sort of experience has a most salutary effect on the savage wife-beater.

One of the most beautiful tributes that could be paid to a bright, active boy, the son of a rich man whose young life went out a few weeks ago in a southern city, was unconsciously given by his mother, who in speaking of him said, "There were a great many more inquiries for him when he was sick at the kitchen than the front door." In this simple statement how much matter is there for reflection, and each of us can profitably ask the question, would that be true of me?

Many definitions are being given in these days of the word lady; we therefore asked our leaders to give those that appeal to them, and with the following result. Miss Willard said: "A lady is one who not only purposes to make every living creature with whom she comes in contact happier, but knows how to do it." Lady Henry Somerset said: "A lady is one who never makes any one else feel inferior to herself either mentally, morally or socially." It might be well in this connection to mention Cardinal Newman's definition of a gentleman: "He is one who is incapable of giving willful pain."

It is not generally known that the first temperance lecture delivered west of the Alleghenies was given in 1831 by some wandering temperance light for whom a vain endeavor to secure a church in Pittsburgh was made by that noble man, John Alexander, who died recently in his ninetieth year. He was a retired merchant and capitalist, born on a farm in Pennsylvania of a Scotch-Irish family whose ancestors were Covenanters. Although a man of remarkable business talent and preoccupation, he was for fifty years a "ruling elder" in the Presbyterian church and a leader in every good word and work. Temperance people knew him as a devoted friend of the cause; and even at his advanced age he was president of the Philadelphia Sabbath Association, and for some years president of the National Reform Association.

"Mrs. Grubb's recent article in The Union Signal," writes Mrs. S. S. Weatherby, of Kansas, "concerning the visit of Mrs. Woodbridge to our Kansas conferences, was of great interest to me, as I was the woman who arranged for her meeting at C. Mrs. Woodbridge gave a masterful address before the conference, and at its close I heard one minister exclaim, 'I had no idea there was so much to the W. C. T. U.; the fact is I had not given it much thought anyway, but I shall go home to my people and talk it up among the sisters and try to have them organize.' That minister is an honorary member of a union now, and his wife a full member. I recall what a serious time I had to secure the hour for Mrs. Woodbridge to speak. It was at a time when the old party men, preachers not excepted, were very bitter toward those of the Prohibition party, and as the National W. C. T. U. had espoused the cause of Prohibition, the committee with whom I conferred regarding her coming was very fearful she might say something that would hurt the Republicans, and wished me to vouch for her that she would not, which I could not do, as I did not know what she might say. I told him, however, that she had spoken many times before large and influential bodies, and I had never heard of her causing any trouble, so I felt that it would be perfectly safe to trust her there. Consent was finally given, with the result already narrated."

On Duty.

AUSTRALASIAN W. C. T. U.

W. C. T. U. COURT AT THE TASMANIAN INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

In the Tasmanian temperance paper, The People's Friend, there appeared a very able article from the pen of Miss A. L. A. Murcutt, Australasian organizer, who, being in Hobart at the opening of the International Exhibition, thus described the W. C. T. U. court:

"The idea of having a white-ribbon exhibit originated in the fertile brain of our Australasian president, Mrs. Nicholls, who together with Mrs. Blair (Colonial president of Tasmania) and Mrs. Lodge (Hobart president) has worked most indefatigably. At first we were allotted space in the women's court, but that was so crowded that the position was changed, and we benefited by the change, for many persons going along the main avenue would view our exhibits who would never visit the women's court. In the center of our exhibit hangs the white satin, shield-shaped banner of the Launceston W. C. T. U., with a small inner shield of royal blue satin, beautifully painted, and bearing our motto; on the right of this is an artistically designed banner from the Hobart W. C. T. U., whilst on the left hangs a white satin one—quite a study in itself—from South Australia.

"At the side of this banner is a large wall sheet, on which is printed in bold, clear type the wording of the World's Petition. The photos consist of a group of South Australian workers, another a Queensland convention, the Colonial union of Tasmania, the Australasian W. C. T. U. and a large frame enclosing the photos of the Australasian executive and most of the superintendents. The central figure of this interesting group is Mrs. Nicholls.

"In the center of the top row is the photograph of Miss Ackermann, "our Jessie," as we love to call her. The photograph of Mrs. Evans, of South Australia, who gave twenty pounds so that Australia's name might appear in the Temple, is framed separately. Misses Vincent and Cummins, Australasian organizers, are taken together and look remarkably well. The whole of these exhibits are draped with pale blue art muslin, looped with tiny white bows, and present a very attractive appearance. On the table is scattered a profusion of literature (for distribution), amongst it being a bound volume containing a copy of all the South Australian reports to date and copies of several Colonial and the Australasian reports for distribution. A framed copy of the Declaration of Principles of the World's W. C. T. U. adorns the wall. Beautiful flowers and growing ferns brighten the tables, and above all floats the inscription, 'Woman's Christian Temperance Union' 'For God, Home and Humanity.'

"Later, a beautiful banner arrived from Western Australia. This, and the three before mentioned, were made for the occasion."

Miss Murcutt forgot to mention Miss Willard's photograph, and modestly omitted her own from the list. Victoria sent a framed photograph of their headquarters and hoped to send their large banner.

The W. C. T. Unions throughout Australia have been asked to have special meetings for prayer on 20th February, on behalf of Miss Ackermann, our honorary Australasian president and for our Australasian organizers.

VICTORIA.

THE SEVENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE W. C. T. U.

was commenced with a large gathering of the juvenile temperance societies in and around Melbourne. After marching through several streets of the city with banner and song, they assembled in the town hall. The program consisted of responsive readings, songs and a few short bright addresses. The day following (Sunday) temperance sermons were preached in a number of churches, a few of our sisters taking the services.

On Monday night the inevitable tea (which pays) was held, followed by a public meeting in Dr. Bevans' beautiful church. The secretary reported there were ninety-six branches of our union in the colony containing nearly 3,000 members; also thirty-eight divisions of the Loyal Temperance Legion in which were 2,328 members.

The meetings were continued all the week from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. Excellent papers were read and discussed on the following subjects: "How to Educate Our Daughters"; "Health and Dress"; "How to Reach the Working Women"; "Child Culture"; "Beauty of Health"; "The Typical White-ribboner in the Church, in the State and in Society"; "The Local Union Evangelist"; "The Ideal Home"; "Woman in the State"; "Communion Wine"; "Duties of Officers."

A Bible Reading was conducted every day from 11:30 to 12. Tuesday night was the woman's franchise demonstration when prizes were distributed to the best essayist on this subject. There were some fifty competitors, several being from other colonies.

Wednesday a Demorest medal contest was held, all the recitations being admirable.

Thursday a grand stereopticon entertainment was the attraction. The election of officers took place Friday morning when Mrs. Press was reëlected president; Mrs. Kirk, secretary; Mrs. Boyd, treasurer, after which Mrs. Press and Mrs. Kirk were presented with a cake casket and biscuit box as a small token of the love and respect in which they are deservedly held.

A very happy and profitable week closed with a garden party and sale of gifts held at Rose Bank, the residence of one of our sisters.

Some of the resolutions passed at the above convention were that the members of the W. C. T. U. of Victoria enter our earnest protest against the exhibition in Melbourne of the tableaux vivant and earnestly call on all women who have any respect for their sex to absent themselves, and we also request that the attention of the proper authorities be called to this matter; that believing the Bible to be the true standard of moral teaching we use every possible means to have it placed in our state schools, and that we coöperate with the league for Scripture instruction in state schools; that we take steps to prevent young girls selling newspapers and other periodicals in the streets, as such tends to degradation; that in view of the prevailing immorality and the alarming increase of infanticide, we make the purity department a prominent line of work in our unions and that efforts be made by means of mothers' meetings and distribution of suitable literature to enforce the necessity of purity in the home which is the foundation of the state.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

A W. C. T. U. FAREWELL

was tendered to the Misses Vincent and Cummins, Australasian organizers, on the eve of their departure for work in the other colonies. After tea and a social chat a meeting was held at which Mrs. Nolan, Colonial president of the W. C. T. U. presided. On her right were the guests of the evening, and Mrs. F. B. Harris, Australasian secretary, who was on a visit to Sydney, while on her left sat representatives of all the temperance bodies of New South Wales, who bore testimony to their affection for, and gratitude to our sisters, for the grand work they have done in this Colony during the past months. Members of the local Y unions rendered some vocal numbers very sweetly, and in conclusion Mrs. Nolan spoke very warmly and feelingly of the great help and blessing our sisters had been to us, concluding by wishing them God-speed and an early return.

A special meeting of the Colonial (state) executive was held in the temperance hall, Sydney, after which the Crusade anniversary was commemorated. Mesdames Bowes, Rea and Ward and Miss Pemell taking part. Mrs. Nolan, Colonial president, who was in the chair then conducted a memorial service for Mrs. Woodbridge, late World's corresponding secretary, and several paid loving tribute to the good received from her articles and speeches recorded in the World's UNION SIGNAL, and expressed the fervent hope that the words she uttered at our beloved Chieftain's birthday meeting might prove an inspiration to all of us who are honored of God by being placed in the front of the battle, and enable us faithfully to wield the weapons she was called so suddenly to lay aside.

UNION SIGNAL CORRESPONDENT.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

REV. MR. WHITNEY and Mrs. Whitney (formerly Mrs. Woodbury, superintendent of Demorest contests for United States, America) recently spoke for the Jamaica Total Abstinence Alliance.

MRS. MARY CLEMENT LEAVITT is expected to arrive at New York, April 24, by the steamer Orizaba from Vera Cruz, and to begin her summer's work in Washington, D. C., the following Sunday. Her address is as usual, care Messrs. Kidder, Peabody & Co., Boston, Mass.

MRS. ESTHER M. CAMPBELL, president National W. C. T. U., of Chili, writes of the progress of temperance work in that far away sunny land, and says they have introduced a child's primer of health into some of the schools and are working earnestly, circulating temperance literature and endeavoring in every way to create a sentiment for total abstinence.

MRS. FRANCISCA B. NELSON, secretary National W. C. T. U. for Brazil, has sent quite a large number of signatures for the World's Petition. The Brazilian National union completed its organization with the following list of officers: President, Miss M. H. Watts, Piracicaba, S. Paula; vice-president, Miss Bessie Moore, Piracicaba, S. Paula; secretary, Mrs. Francisca B. Nelson, Para; treasurer, Miss Martha E. Hamilton, Piracicaba, S. Paula.

MANY of the ministers in South Africa are daily wine drinkers, and think the church the only institution required and total abstinence entirely unnecessary, while the poor, ignorant people would not dare to do anything without the authority of the preacher. The W. C. T. U. workers find the process very slow, but they distribute good temperance Dutch literature and arrange for quarterly W. C. T. U. meetings, and thus "peg away."

THE quarterly Colonial executive meeting of the South Australian W. C. T. U. passed an enthusiastic resolution of thanks for the passage of the adult suffrage bill regretting only "the introduction of the amendment enabling women to avail themselves of the provisions of the absent voters' act, a permission which may interfere with the secrecy and freedom of the ballot and is in opposition to the principles we have always advocated, viz., that women should possess the ballot on exactly the same terms as men."

THE Countess Wedel-Jarlsburg and Fraulein B. Esmark, the president and secretary of the Norwegian Woman's Christian Temperance Union, have sent to Miss Willard two long and beautifully prepared rolls of names for the great Polyglot. These signatures will be added to the ever-lengthening rolls by Mrs. Rebecca Shuman, of Evanston, Ill., to whom all names should be sent, as she will continue to work on the Petition until the last minute before its presentation in London, nor will that great event cause her labors to cease, for there is no reason why signatures—now flowing in by thousands—should not be steadily added to the list, for they are precious in the sight of white-ribbon leaders, and not one of them will be allowed to fail of an honorable place on the Petition.

THE introduction of the methods of the Loyal Temperance Legion by the British Women's Temperance Association is progressing steadily. The excellent work of Mrs. Addie Northam Fields is receiving warm indorsement. The clear and definite manner in which she explains the principles of the L. T. L. and the need for temperance deeply interests both old and young.

THE W. C. T. Union of Cape Colony, besides being responsible for raising £70 a year for Miss Palmer's support, has maintained the superintendent of the Rescue Home at Cape Town, and appropriated from £2 to £5 per annum for each of the ten departments of work. The forty members of Maritzburg have bought and nearly paid for a good two-story house, centrally located, which they hope soon to open as a safe, temporary home for young women out of employment, ladies traveling alone, etc. Their ambition also reaches out toward owning a comfortable and commodious hall for meetings of the Young Crusaders and for evangelistic services.

EXTRACT from a letter from Amanda Smith, who has been working in Scotland under the auspices of the British Women's Temperance Association: "My heart was made sad at hearing of the death of my dear friend, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, of Michigan. She was always one of my favorites among the workers from the first time I saw her at Ocean Grove and heard her preach that masterful sermon from John 3:16, 'God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son that whosoever believed in him might not perish, but have everlasting life.' Bishop Simpson was on the platform and spoke after her, and said it was the best sermon he had ever listened to on the subject. I have never forgotten it, and I have always had the warmest love and admiration for Mrs. Lathrap. When I heard her at the great Convention at Chicago, it seems only the other day, I thought how firm she stood, and always seemed to make everything so clear when she spoke. It must be beautiful to be at home with God."

FLORIDA.

CONVENTION DAYS.

The three last days of February and March first witnessed the twelfth annual meeting of the Florida W. C. T. U.

Ocala, called the "brick city," opened her hospitable homes for our entertainment and the use of the Methodist church for our meetings.

In spite of frozen orange groves and ruined gardens, those unheard of calamities which so sadly marred our fair Florida the past winter, more than forty delegates responded to roll-call and the superintendents of twenty-four distinct lines of work reported their success for the year.

The four general officers were in attendance with the exception of the recording secretary whose place was kindly filled by Mrs. M. E. L. Herrick, of Orange City. Tuesday evening short addresses of welcome and response marked the opening exercises. The words of Mayor Reddon were unique, saying that he welcomed this gathering of white-ribboners in the name of those citizens who were glad to see them, wishing that might include all —but he knew too well there were plenty who never did enjoy the sight of a white-ribboner anywhere. As for himself he joined heartily in aiding the progress of reform.

Following those preliminary speeches was the address of Mrs. E. Norine Law, of Michigan, which was listened to with much interest as was, also, the thrilling recital of "A Drunkard's Dream," to which the gifted speaker treated her audience. Mrs. Law spoke on the closing evening of convention to a crowded house, her subject "Building the Walls." To her other good gifts Mrs. Law has added that of a sweet, clear, sympathetic voice of song, which inspires new zeal in the hearts of those who hear.

Wednesday morning the convention was called to order by the president, Mrs. E. A. Hill. From that time on for three consecutive days and evenings the time was industriously occupied with such routine work as is usual in such meetings.

The L. T. L. gave practical proof of their willingness and ability to be useful helpers. They not only furnished excellent music but served as pages and newsboys during convention hours, for which thanks are due.

The sudden and unaccountable sickness of Mrs. Hill and several others during the latter part of convention was much deplored. All were sufficiently recovered, however, to return to their homes. Mrs. S. H. Webb, of DeLand, was elected president for the ensuing year—with this exception the list of general officers remains as it was last year.

There will be a mid-yearly meeting of the executive, the place not known at present. Mrs. Alice C. Brown, of Ft. Reed, who is state superintendent of scientific temperance instruction in schools, is now at Mt. Dora, attending the Chautauqua assembly, where she will conduct a W. C. T. U. school of methods on the day assigned for that purpose. Our corresponding secretary, Miss Neal, of DeLand, is there also, representing the Y. P. S. C. E. of Florida.

Directly following the close of the annual meeting Mrs. N. E. Arnold came to Tampa, where she addressed an audience, mostly ladies. Her theme, "Whose Image," was handled in a manner showing cultured thought and deep research. Her chaste and beautiful language, her dignified manner coupled with Christian grace, commanded the attention and approval of her hearers.

Mrs. Arnold is state superintendent of social purity and of scientific cookery, and is the wife of the Episcopal rector of Daytona.

Florida has been favored the past winter with another speaker of note. I refer to Mrs. L. E. Bailey, of Michigan. "Everywhere she met with an enthusiastic reception; very many places insisted upon a second lecture after hearing the first. Her remarks on all the leading issues of the day were well timed and well received."

The Rescue Home has been adopted as the charge of the Tampa union. In a previous letter the reporter has written something of the founding of this refuge from an evil life for fallen girls and women. One dear member of the union whose great heart yearned lovingly over these unfortunate ones, went among them as a pitying friend and gained the love and confidence of many. Some professed a willingness to come right away, but there was no place, no shelter for them where they might be nurtured and strengthened for the new life, having cast aside the old.

With courage and faith born of God this noble woman—aided by two or three other consecrated Christians—rented a house and made a beginning, unsolicited. Furniture and provision sufficient for actual needs came in, so that a home was provided. This has been at least a year ago. Sacrificing a great deal, the founder of the Home became herself the matron, until her family obligations were such that she could no longer fill this important position. Feeling that this rescue work comes legitimately into line in W. C. T. U. ranks, the Tampa union has espoused it, and hopes to make it successful. There are at present two inmates —a mother and daughter—the former one of the most notorious of her class in the place. She claims to have been truly reclaimed. Through the efforts of the Salvation Army she was won for Christ.

The great need of this Home is a capable woman as matron. It requires one of versatile gifts, many resources, for, like children, these misguided, uncontrolled creatures must be, as it were, re-moulded and gradually taught to love that which they have hitherto hated. If any one who reads this letter knows where a suitable one might be found, they will be conferring a great favor and aiding a noble cause by writing the same to me, directing to Tampa, Florida, No. 1307 Fla. avenue.

NORTH CAROLINA.

AMONG THE LAW MAKERS.

The white ribbon women of the "Old North State" are not numerous but in some sections at least they are wide awake and active. The seed sowing of eleven years under the wise guidance of Mary C. Woody is to-day bearing fruit, and temperance sentiment is more general and stronger than in any period of our history. Other temperance societies, ministers and evangelists have also been active against the license system.

During the past year a formidable foe has been recognized in the organization of the good men of the state under the name of "The North Carolina Temperance Association." Political affiliation and church creeds have been set aside, and "down with the saloon" is the cry of hosts. As soon as they organized, the W. C. T. U. sent them greetings of welcome and offered our services as their ally. The reply came, "We have taken up your fight and expect great things of you." In a few days their plan of work was made known to us. A campaign was inaugurated for a better local option law to be presented to the next legislature, the prominent feature of which was to close the saloons, but upon certain conditions a majority of the qualified voters in any town, township or county could re-open them. We labored together for months circulating petitions, speaking, etc. and, inasmuch as a majority of the members of the general assembly were church members we thought we could entertain reasonable hope for the passage of the bill.

When the legislature met, however, some of these church members could not vote for that bill and in voting against it took upon themselves the responsibility of the open saloon, with all its train of evils for the next two years. Thus, temperance and Christian men and women have been ignored and defeated; but defeat is not death as some would like to believe, and two years hence another assembly will doubtless find a very active corpse again appearing for temperance legislation.

Another measure which our persistent women have been bringing to the notice of law-makers for nine years is, a reformatory for young criminals. This year we repeated our petition and were somewhat hopeful of success since the governor had recommended an appropriation for this object. Economy, economy! was the cry of the legislative body, and we suppose through false notions of economy the bill was smothered on the calendar.

As disappointing as these things were to us, we trust we accept the situation in the spirit of the Master, believing "all things work together for good." So we turn to the bright side, and rejoice that the statute for girls was changed from ten to fourteen years. W. C. T. U. petitions have repeatedly gone in on this subject, and this year we asked for a change to sixteen years. Reforms move slowly, and while some of the members of the legislature regarded us as a set of women who come bothering every assembly, some "big brothers" made fine speeches in defense of purity and woman.

By a resolution in our last National Convention an investigation as to

of the states was asked. I am glad to state no such disgraceful attachment is found within our capitol grounds. It is with pleasure also that I append the following resolution passed by the senate in regard to a drinking member of that body:

Whereas, Information comes to us that one of our number has been seen on various occasions under the influence of intoxicating liquor to that extent that his seat has been vacant for many days past, and his constituents thereby deprived of proper representation which by law and justice they should have, therefore be it

Resolved, That a committee of three shall be appointed to investigate such conduct, and if they find the truth as set forth, shall prefer charges in legal manner against said member and cause him to be properly dealt with according to law, to the end that justice may be done to his constituents and that such conduct shall not reflect discredit upon this honorable body.

MRS. BARKER'S VISIT to us was one of much pleasure, stimulus and upbuilding to our membership and our cause. We made six appointments in leading towns and cities for her, but owing to the inability of getting a church in which to speak in two cities and a terrible tragedy in another, these appointments failed.

Mrs. Barker spent two days in Concord, delivered three public addresses and spoke to the pupils of Scotia Female Seminary, a colored institution under wise management and doing good work. As a woman of broad views, deep consecration, fine native ability and excellent judgment, Mrs. Barker made a good impression upon our people. At Greensboro and Asheville, she was tendered a reception, the W. C. T. U's inviting the teachers of the various schools and colleges, wives of ministers and others to join them in honoring our guest and state president. At each of these points and at Guilford College Mrs. Barker held interesting public meetings. The result of her work as already reported is an increase of about one hundred members to the union.

Our state president and organizer will make a tour of Eastern Carolina in April. This is eminently the conservative section of the state as regards woman's public work, yet we have some friends in the ministry who are opening the way for our work and we trust that when our aims and methods are better understood, prejudice will give way to hearty coöperation and much good be accomplished.

WESTERN WASHINGTON.

HERE AND THERE.

Seattle reports a new union starting out vigorously under favorable auspices with Mrs. Alfa V. Freeman (111 Moltke St.,) as corresponding secretary.

Lewis county reporter speaks in high praise of their efficient county president, Mrs. Stewart. She faithfully visits the unions in her county, carrying inspiration for better work along all lines.

Centralia, in Lewis county, is quite a railroad center. Therefore Mrs. M. Bertrand, the superintendent of flower missions, celebrated flower mission day by distributing over two hundred bouquets among railroad men. Another two hundred were distributed through the town, each with a Scripture text attached tied with a white ribbon.

Centralia, Chehalis and Winlock have each given a number of sociables, serving refreshments and thus realizing quite a neat sum for the local treasuries.

Every union in the county has had at least one lecture during the year. Some have had a number.

At Winlock the Methodist Episcopal church held a district Ministerial Association which was well attended. Mrs. Mattie N. Graves, state secretary of the Y. W. C. T. U., was invited to occupy one hour on the program. Her subject was, "The Relation of the W. C. T. U. to the Church." The lecture was received with applause. Mrs. Graves has addressed a number of meetings, presenting our work and especially urging the franchise department. As superintendent of that department she sent out fifteen copies of the petition throughout the county in accord with the advice of the state superintendent. The petition met with good success. It did all over Western Washington and we lost the election franchise by only two votes. The matter came up early in the session of the legislature before many of the petitions were in.

Centralia union has held several suffrage meetings. Little Falls union has taken on new life, and we look for good results.

Death has translated one of our honorary members, Mr. Alfred Wilson, a promising young man just entering the ministry, son of our staunch Prohibition brother, Rev. W. H. Wilson, and dear sister Wilson, superintendent of securing homes for homeless children. Our hearts go out in great sympathy to the bereaved family. Brother Wilson and wife have founded an orphans' home at Winlock, known as the Crown Jewel Home. The L. T. L. of Winlock have given eight dollars towards placing a beautiful cradle in the home. They also gave a handsome lounge to the new Baptist parsonage in Winlock, and this Legion is less than two years old.

A Prohibition paper has been started in Lewis county called Lewis County Beacon, edited by M. M. Miller, of Winlock.

For over two years the Prohibitionists and the W. C. T. U. of Centralia have united in a prohibition prayer-meeting in the W. C. T. U. hall on Sunday afternoons. These meetings are blessed with the presence of the Holy Spirit, are doing much good, and increasing in attendance. Great has been the opposition, but the few faithful are undaunted in courage, and God is blessing their endeavors. The Prohibition Club have regular business meetings once a month, and are slowly gaining ground.

Three saloons in Centralia on election day had the effrontery to print small handbills and scatter them all over the town, asking the people to come there that evening to get the returns, as they would receive them from our own state and many other states holding elections the same day.

Dr. Frances A. Cady, of Portland, Ore., Mrs. Helen D. Hanford, Oregon's capable recording secretary and her devoted L. T. L. superintendent, Mrs. Ada W. Unruh, have all been helpful in this county where they are beloved for their labors.

Centralia union held a beautiful memorial service for Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge. The hall was tastefully decorated with evergreens, flowers and the white ribbon. The reports given in The Union Signal of her life and labors were read by five sisters—several songs and two solos were rendered. A short address by Rev. D. A. Trundle. The program closed by Mrs. F. R. Clark reading Mrs. Hemans' sweet poem, "Passing Away." There was a large audience and all went away feeling impressed with the thought that it was good to remember the noble deeds of the departed and to emulate their virtues.

Mason county is unorganized, but they have an active union at Shelton, holding regular meetings with a larger average attendance than ever before. Particular attention is paid to department work. Considerable reading matter is sent to the lumber camps. The press superintendent keeps a column in one of the local papers supplied with temperance items. They are planning to send a box to the White Shield Home. Their treasury is not empty, which speaks well for these times. Dr. Frances A. Cady lectured on "Health and Heredity." The ladies were deeply interested, and those who missed the treat speak of asking her to return.

Pierce county held its annual convention in Armory Hall, Tacoma. It was one of the best, if not the best convention ever held by this organization in this county. Peace and good will reigned and everything passed off harmoniously. In the absence of the county president, Mrs. Ella J. Fifield, state president, occupied the chair. Mrs. Abbott read a Scripture lesson and led the devotions; after the usual committees were appointed, all joined in singing "Blest be the tie that binds." Mrs. S. E. Shorthill delivered the address of welcome in behalf of the local unions of Tacoma. Miss Anna Sitton, Grand superintendent of juvenile work of the I. O. G. T., gave an address of welcome in behalf of that organization. Mrs. Dudley, of Puyallup, responded in behalf of the visitors. After an executive session lunch was served in an adjoining room by the local unions.

During the evening session Dr. Ella Fifield gave a short talk on "Equal Suffrage" which was well received. Mrs. Clark and Miss Walker sang a duet so pleasingly they were recalled and responded by singing "The Rock that is higher than I."

Mrs. E. P. Spinning, state superintendent of franchise, read a paper on "Equal Suffrage, Past and Present." The paper was carefully prepared and revealed much study in its preparation. Dr. Osborne read an excellent paper on "Young Women in Politics."

The following telegram was sent to the senate at Olympia: "Greetings. We beseech you help these women."

In the afternoon session memorial services were held for Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge and Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap.

At the evening session Mr. T. A. Shorthill explained the Demorest medal contest and a contest was held. The contestants were six young people from twelve to fourteen years of age. Willie Osborne, "Saloon City Government"; Roy Conger, "Not Dead nor Dying"; Cora Knitz, "Noble Christian Womanhood"; Mamie Fifield, "You can Stop if you Will"; Alice Rice, "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union"; Maud McKay, "Two Fires."

Miss McKay was awarded the medal. Miss Anna Sitton made the presentation speech. Mrs. S. J. Lindsey, of Orting, recited "Why I Wear the White Ribbon." The exercises closed with the doxology.

I received a pleasant letter from a sister in the far east saying our Western Washington reports gave her much pleasure as she was formerly a resident of this state and knows most of the workers personally. I trust many a weak or discouraged union finds strength and encouragement in the "news from the field." It is a good place to look for new methods for success.

News in a Nutshell.

In Pipestone City, Minn., there are thirty-two W's and thirty Y's working in eight departments.

Sterling, Ill., has been having Major Hilton, to the great benefit of its work and membership.

Pierce county, Wash., W. C. T. U., held an interesting convention at Tacoma during the winter.

Appropriate memorial services have been held at San Diego, Cal., by the Central W. C. T. U. for our departed leaders.

The Battle Creek, Mich., W. C. T. U. is planning for a grand state convention early in June. Mrs. Benjamin, the president ad interim, will preside.

First district Illinois W. C. T. U. will hold an all day conference on April 16 at the Oakland M. E. church, corner of Oakwood Boulevard and Langley Ave.

Waterbury, Conn., W. C. T. U. meetings are well attended, and are especially helpful in evangelistic results. Gospel meetings are held every night at the rooms.

Humboldt, Ia., has had the benefit of that experienced worker, Col. C. J. Holt, in a series of live temperance meetings. A new free reading-room has been started.

Many new members were added to the West Harlem, N. Y., union, at its entertaining second annual meeting, March 18, at the home of the president, Mrs. E. T. Westerfield.

Mrs. Woodward's recent visit in Fremont, Neb., added many friends to temperance. The noted singers, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Beveridge, helped with their taking songs.

The wedding of Miss Matie Woodward, daughter and assistant secretary of our National superintendent of railroad employés, Mrs. C. M. Woodward, and Mr. Alfred J. Stewart, occurred March 19, at Seward, Neb. The Union Signal extends congratulations.

From ten to sixty-three is the record of Neapolis, Va., W. C. T. U., organized only last September. On March 28, their new building, the gift of Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Roberts, was dedicated. It is to be known as the Elmer Roberts' memorial, in memory of their son, and is a very handsome brick structure, devoted to the work of the W. C. T. U. and other temperance societies of Neapolis.

For Coughs, Asthma and Throat Disorders "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are an effectual remedy. Sold only in boxes.

Newton, Kan., W. C. T. U., heartily recommend Dr. N. W. Tracy, who has recently held a series of temperance meetings there, during which from 1,000 to 1,200 signed the pledge.

The superintendent of the purity work of the Wilmington, Del., W. C. T. U., writes concerning a recent visit of Mrs. Charlton Edholm to that city. Much good was done, and an arousement on this subject was wrought in the hearts of many who heard.

Mrs. Mary D. Tomlinson, National W. C. T. U. superintendent of parlor meetings, is very ill at her home in Plainfield, N. J., with an attack of erysipelas. The prayers of National and local white-ribboners are constantly raised that she may be permitted to continue her life of usefulness.

At the executive meeting of the fourth district, Illinois, W. C. T. U., held in Willard Hall, Chicago, March 27, a resolution was passed, commending the parlor lectures of the state superintendent of mothers' meetings, Mrs. Jessie Brown Hillton, to the white-ribbon sisters of other districts, and urging them to embrace the opportunity of having this series of lectures.

A Battle Creek, Mich., correspondent writes to correct the statement made in The Union Signal that Mrs. Lucy Thurman, National superintendent of work among colored people, was president of Mrs. Lathrap's district in Michigan (the third). To Mrs. Nancy A. Brown, of Jackson, belonged that honor for years, now gracefully borne by Mrs. Irene S. Clizbe, of Coldwater. Mrs. Thurman was superintendent of her department in that district, and also county president.

Many delegates to the last three National Conventions will recall the bright stenographer who has reported the conventions for the Daily Union Signal, but all do not know that it was Mrs. R. Howard Kelly, whose modest card appears in another part of the paper. Mrs. Kelly is the president of the Chicago Court Reporters' Association, composing probably the most expert body of reporters in the world, because there are no official reporters in Cook county and the heavy competition has developed great skill.

Mrs. Sarah A. McClees, now in her thirteenth year of service to the N. W. C. T. U. as superintendent of work for sailors and soldiers, is lecturing in California on the aims and methods of this great department. Subjects for lectures outside of the department embrace Bible readings on historical characters—Moses, Samson and others; to mothers, on "The Care and Training of Children," "Temperance Education," "Social Feasts of the Old Testament"; and for literary circles, "A Summer in England and Scotland" and "A Winter in Switzerland and Italy."

The railroad men passing through Seward, Neb., on March 21, over one hundred in all, were pleasantly connected with an auspicious event (the marriage of Miss Woodward, whose mother is National W. C. T. U. superintendent of railroad work) by gifts of wedding cake in boxes tied with white ribbon and wreathed in smilax. The bride had been four years her mother's secretary in this important department. This is a good suggestion to all railroad temperance workers. The "boys" like to be remembered.

The W. C. T. U. of Dexter, Mo., assisted by the Y's, gave an enjoyable "birthday reception" at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Ladd, for the benefit of their work, March 1. The cards of invitation bore the following explanatory rhyme:

This birthday reception is all your own,
Nothing like it ever was known,
The ladies will give you something to eat,
And entertain with a musical treat.
With this we enclose a little sack,
We hope you'll send or bring it back,
With cents as many as years you're old.
Don't be alarmed, 'twill not be told.
Best wishes and greetings to you we extend,
Your birthday reception we hope you'll attend.

The attention of the sisters of the W. C. T. U. is called to the annual publication of the report of the New York state Woman Suffrage Association, which is soon to be issued. It will be called "A Record of the Campaign," and will give a full history of the suffrage work of last year which centered upon the State Constitutional Convention. The part of most interest to W. C. T. U. women will be the report of the special work of their organization, and this is given in a fair and entertaining article by the state superintendent of franchise, Miss Vinnie R. Davis. The work done by the volunteer committee of New York city under the leadership of Dr. Mary Putnam-Jacobi, is graphically described by her own pen. The price is twenty-five cents. Send to Isabel Howland, Sherwood, N. Y.

Miss Ida Clothier, who has been at the bedside of her friend, Mrs. Maude L. Green, at the National Temperance Hospital in Chicago, would like to make a few engagements during April and May in the vicinity of Chicago. Mrs. Green has improved sufficiently to enable Miss Clothier to leave her for a short time only. Y unions in Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan and Iowa should take advantage of this rare opportunity to secure Miss Clothier for a lecture or a new organization.

During the recent town election at Mayville, N. Y., much to the surprise of the liquor men, no-license candidates were elected. This result was largely due to the efforts of the temperance women and the bright thought of the secretary of the local union, which crystallized into an earnest, poetic plea to the voters. While the women were praying in the church and tolling the bell, the poem, telling what the women were doing, was distributed among the voters. It had its effect, and another victory was scored for those who said

"We cannot help by ballot,
But we can toll the bell."

Summit City union, McKean county, Pa., would like to tell, for the benefit of other unions, the success they have had with monthly parlor meetings. Each member takes her turn in entertaining, and they have become so popular they have been invited and have held their meetings in a number of houses where the hostess did not wear the white ribbon. Devotional exercises are held and the roll-call with a Scripture text. The minutes of the last meeting are then read. Then singing or instrumental music. Reports of superintendents for the past month, recitation by one of the Loyal Legion or a member. Occasionally they have a delegate from the state or county convention read her report, and even the grand National mothers' work is brought before the meeting and freely discussed by the mothers they are entertaining, and by all who are interested. Last but not least the dime collection is taken up by the treasurer. The twenty-third Psalm or the Lord's Prayer is repeated in concert and the meeting is over. They are then invited to partake of a five o'clock tea prepared by the hostess.

The first W. C. T. U. of Texarkana, Tex., was organized last August. It has grown to one hundred in membership. A Y. W. C. T. U. was organized in November and the present enrollment is eighty. Both societies have a large number of honoraries. The city is reputed to have over 15,000 population and is located in the two states of Texas and Arkansas, hence the name Tex-arkana. The state line almost equally divides the city. The W's affiliate with Arkansas state work, and the Y's with Texas. The W. C. T. U. hall is a triangular building at the intersection of the two states and almost at the Union Depot. Since organizing, whisky has been voted out of Miller county, Ark., (of which Texarkana, Ark., is the county seat), and after one of the hottest anti-whisky campaigns ever fought, they succeeded on March 6, in putting whisky out of Bowie county, Tex., the county in which Texarkana, Tex., is situated. The W's edit a column in the daily Texarkanian, published on the Arkansas side, and the Y's edit a column in the daily Inter-State News, published on the Texas side. Reading rooms and other lines of practical work will be undertaken soon by these undaunted and earnest white-ribboners.

FACTS AND THEORIES.

Remember, that the twenty-second annual convention of the National W. C. T. U. will meet in Baltimore, October 18–23. Remember, that we intend to gather with a grand increase of membership; that not less than 250,000 is the goal of our ambition. Remember, that states making the largest increase of membership, in excess of five hundred, are pledged an address by Miss Willard at their annual convention. Remember, that the states securing five hundred new members are to have a grand benefit night at the Baltimore Convention, the program to be arranged by their respective presidents. Remember, that the date for reporting increase of membership is set for September 20. Remember, that only six months remain in which to work up that grand total. What are YOU doing about it?

I trust these italics may be eloquent with meaning, and inspire to renewed effort. We must increase our membership, not for the mere purpose of having a large membership, but because of the increased working efficiency which will come to the organization and to the cause, for every member gained.

Some one asks, "What if more than two states secure above 500?" In that case, we will gladly pledge some special "plum," to be decided later. Do not be afraid to try lest you should fail of the greatest prize, but, in the language of the immortal Mr. Boffin: "Run your eye along the [official] shelf, and if you see what you want ask for it." Your request will be granted if within the limits of possibility.

Once more I must impress upon all county, district and state presidents the importance of holding their respective conventions at as early a date as possible; also upon local and state treasurers the necessity of a prompt payment of dues. So far as the showing at Baltimore is concerned, it will be the same as if new members had not been secured if they are not reported in the only official way, through the payment of dues. Mrs. Barker will hold her books open till the last possible moment, but the golden harvest time is now, and the work should not be delayed till the last moment.

The literature department is cordially co-operating in the plan to secure a fund for the free distribution of literature, to be called the Mary A. Woodbridge Fund. To this end it has adopted a plan used in other years, with some slight difference in the working. A four-paged card is to be issued with Mrs. Woodbridge's picture on the front and a statement and appeal upon the last page. The two inner pages are left blank for signatures and amounts subscribed. We are asking our literature superintendents and all others interested in the distribution of literature, especially those who were among Mrs. Woodbridge's personal friends, to send for these cards and to give them the widest possible circulation. Half the money raised is to be used in local literature work, the other half sent to Mrs. Barker, who is the custodian of the fund. We ought to raise hundreds of dollars within the next few months, and can if we take hold of the matter with determination.

I want to give an extract from a personal letter which has just come to a friend:

"Hip! Hip!! Hip!!! Hurrah!!!! for B——, B——,the place where a W. C. T. U. could not even be thought of, much less talked about; B——, the impregnable, has a living, breathing W. C. T. U. of sixty-six members with a vice-president from every church in the city except one, including the Catholic. . . I have been glad over a new union before but never so glad and thankful as for this. Four years ago I began praying for a union in B—— before I had ever seen the place or ever expected to, and from then until now I have carried that burden. I have prayed for it, talked for it and worked for it until sometimes I have wondered if I was becoming insane on that one subject, and at last it is a fact."

Sisters, if the secret of success in W. C. T. U. work is not told in this paragraph I wonder what is. If more unions were born of prayer their power would be increased an hundred fold. If more white-ribboners took such burdens upon themselves there would be before us no closed doors. "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence and the violent take it by force."

Treasurer's Corner.

EN ROUTE IN KENTUCKY.

I was very sorry that a belated letter prevented my filling an appointment in Lexington, Ky., which the ladies had kindly arranged. At Louisville Mrs. Watts received me into her pleasant home and made it mine for a couple of days. I also met Mrs. Caroline Leech, but was disappointed that Mrs. Munnell was not able to be out to the two meetings at which I spoke. The audiences were not as large as they would have been but for the funeral of Dr. Broadus held the same day. Mrs. Watts, Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Beauchamp are planning and pushing for better organizing work and Kentucky will, I am sure, roll up more than five hundred new members.

At Glasgow, my next point, I found an active, aggressive union that has doubled its membership since the five hundred call went out and they now number fifty-seven intelligent workers. Mrs. Kilgore, the president, is a thoroughly consecrated woman and has the hearty support of all the women and many good men as well. Mrs. Murray and Mrs. Terry are her enthusiastic and efficient lieutenants. I had large and appreciative audiences here, and our ladies' meeting almost filled the church on a very rainy day. Many new members were added. Mr. and Mrs. Murray entertained me and I found him a brother indeed. He is an ardent suffragist and has been for years.

From Glasgow I went to Owensboro, but was obliged to stay over night at Russellville. As I was entering a carriage to go to the Forrest House, a gentleman said, "I am looking for Mrs. Barker." I was greatly surprised as I did not suppose any one knew me here. The good friend was Prof. Murphy, president of the Girls' College. His wife is president of a new union organized by Mrs. Beauchamp and they had learned from Mrs. Brown that I was to pass through and so kindly took me to their home, where I had a long visit with Mrs. Murphy, who will make a good leader of the work there.

At Owensboro, I was glad to find my old friend of World's Fair days, Mrs. Sue Phillips Brown, the corresponding secretary of the Kentucky W. C. T. U. Mrs. McJohnston was my hostess, and a mother could not have done more for the comfort of a weary worker than she did for me. A large audience gathered in the court house for the evening address, and much temperance sentiment exists in this lovely Kentucky town.

My stay was very brief here as I was obliged to leave that night for Chicago, which I did, feeling at the close of my month's work that I had wonderfully lengthened out my list of friends and trust some good will result from this month's very hard but exceedingly pleasant work. I find by consulting my note book that I gave forty-seven addresses, and held thirteen ladies' meetings, organized three unions and added two hundred members and I trust encouraged many others.

Since my last report of office receipts, Ohio, Wisconsin, Connecticut, North California, Colorado, New Jersey and Rhode Island have sent dues. In next week's Corner I shall report other receipts up to date and have something to say about our literature fund.

Organizers' Corner.

MISS CARTER AFIELD.

Early in January I turned my face southward, intent on finding a warmer clime, and at the same time spreading the gospel of temperance. It was pleasant, indeed, to revisit four places in Arkansas where I had been several times before, and to find at each a warm welcome and a large audience. The meeting at Little Rock was especially fine. It was held on Sunday afternoon, and the large audience was composed of representatives of all the young people's societies in the city, with older people not a few. Twenty new members were that day added to the Y. W. C. T. U.

Three weeks were then spent in Texas, where I traveled from its eastern border across its hundreds of miles of prairies and plains to El Paso, thence to San Antonio and north again. I did not find the sunny south I anticipated, for I encountered more weather there than ever before in the same length of time. Northers and blizzards of every description did all they could to interfere with meetings, but in spite of them I lectured thirteen times, held three day meetings, organized a union at De Kalb and a Y at Dallas, gained fifty-five members and forty-one honoraries, had a good time and met many of the best workers of the state, both Y's and otherwise. The best token of success is that I am invited to return and "do" the state again at a more favorable season.

From Texas I came north through the Indian Territory, speaking and organizing a Y at Vinita, where a reception was given me. From there I was compelled to return home, canceling several engagements in Missouri, on account of a severe cold and hoarseness contracted on the way. After several weeks of much needed rest, I began, March 15, a campaign in Missouri, having engagements for every day in the fourth, fifth and seventh districts. I organized a union at Rockport last week, with twenty members. The town is a whisky stronghold, and the women see the need of work. May 1, I shall attend the Mississippi Valley Congress at St. Louis, and will then probably go to another state, as I have several invitations for May and June. I have found much this year of encouragement, and believe at our next National Convention we shall find that our membership has greatly increased. To that end will be the labors of

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

I wish to call attention to the fact that April 21 is the date upon which occurs the next Bible temperance lesson in the International Series. I urge that special attention be given to pledge signing on that day. With the hope of stimulating this effort I have sent suggestions to our state workers and earnestly hope to awaken and renew the interest in this particular line of Sunday-school temperance work.

Pledge cards should be furnished to the Sunday-schools free of charge, by the local W. C. T. U. wherever it is possible, and committees sent to the various schools to aid in the work. Send to the W. T. P. A. for pledge cards, one dollar per hundred, and for rolls of honor, price twenty-five cents, to contain the names of those who have signed the pledge. Let these adorn the walls of every Sunday-school room as the gift of the W. C. T. U.

A word more. Beginning with May, it is the season for holding Sunday-school temperance rallies. I have prepared a "rally" program which, I believe, can be used with good results in every locality. It is received with great favor and seems to fill a want of our workers.

Send stamp for sample copy. Begin now to plan for your annual Sunday-school temperance rally, and may the Lord bless you all. Yours for service,

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CONVENTION CALL.

The thirteenth annual convention of the Southern California W. C. T. U. will be held in Riverside, May 21–24. An excellent program is being prepared, and we hope to have a good attendance.

$100 Reward, $100.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

A YOUNG minister, unexpectedly called upon to address a Sunday-school, asked, to gain time, "Children, what shall I speak about?" A little girl on the front seat, who had herself committed to memory several declamations, held up her hand, and in a shrill voice inquired, "What do you know?"

Our Library Table.

THE POWER OF AN ENDLESS LIFE. A strong exposition of the commonly-quoted, and, it is to be feared, carelessly spoken phrase which forms the title of the book in question. The author, Rev. Thomas C. Hall, pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian church, Chicago, has used the probe of spiritual insight to show his readers the essentials of power and the difference between a "form of Godliness" and the "power of an endless life." His discourse is broadly helpful.

AIRLIE'S MISSION. By Annie S. Swan (Mrs. Burnett Smith).

Annie Swan's writings are characterized by spirituality and helpfulness. This story is simple in construction—a young orphan girl, whose father was a missionary in Africa, goes to recuperate a shattered constitution in her aunt's home. By quietly and brightly living her religion she brings noble purposes into the lives of her cousins. The ending of the story may prove unsatisfactory to many but it is truer to life than the more felicitous one the author might have chosen.

THE CARE OF CHILDREN. By Elizabeth Robinson Scovil, superintendent Newport Hospital.

Since many a young woman receives her first baby into her arms with but scant knowledge concerning its many needs, a book like the above is well in demand. The author's experience in hospital work has given her a wide outlook on this important subject, and she has written most helpfully for mothers. The twenty-five chapters of the book cover baby's life from birth to school days, briefly but comprehensively and sensibly.

THE CHURCH IN THY HOUSE: A Manual for Home Worship, with Scripture Readings for a month. By Rev. Rufus W. Clark.

In many families lack of training and diffidence are large factors in the omission of family prayers; yet there is no other religious exercise which, properly conducted, would so militate to the elevation and salvation of the home. The streams of devotion will rise to no greater height in the church than they do in the home, where, to a great extent, they find their sources. Dr. Clark's book should do much to aid in the establishment of family altars—especially in new homes, where it is so essential that the new family life should be "well begun."

GOD CARES FOR OUR DEAD. GONE BEYOND THE VEIL. THE POWER OF AN ENDLESS LIFE. Three Sermons by David Swing.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Talcott, personal friends of the great-hearted preacher, who not quite six months ago penetrated the mysteries "beyond the veil," were comforted by him in their bereavement and were desirous of giving to the world his gracious words and healing messages. He gave his permission in these words: "If any hearts know what words are full of comfort, your hearts must be stored with that sad ability." These three sermons, a new edition of which have been published since David Swing's death, are overflowing with faith in God and love for the Father who "cares for our dead." The little volume would make an appropriate Easter gift.

THE INEVITABLE AND OTHER POEMS. By Sarah Knowles Bolton.

To the readers of Mrs. Bolton's biographical and sociological writings all over the country this little collection of her best poetical work will be very welcome. Some of these poems have been copied far and wide; others will for the first time appear in print. There is here as in all her work the same ideal of high-minded and simple living; the same sympathy for earnest endeavor wherever it indicates the striving after something nobler and truer. Her love of nature and keenness of observation are everywhere evident. If to these qualities Mrs. Bolton owes any of her unusual success as a biographer, this new book of poems will but emphasize the thoughts which have given her other books their power. The excellent portrait which serves as a frontispiece is from a picture taken in London not long ago; it has never before been reproduced.

TWO VALUABLE BOOKS FOR MOTHERS.

1. CONFIDENTIAL TALKS WITH YOUNG WOMEN. By Lyman B. Sperry, M. D., with introductory notes by Frances E. Willard and Mary Wood Allen, M. D.

"Dr. Sperry," says Miss Willard, "brings not only an adequate scientific preparation but a pure mind to his high task." "And," says the National superintendent of our purity department, "he speaks not only with the earnestness of a friend, but with the authority of a physician."

It is just such a book as will be found helpful to mothers in bringing to their daughters the necessary instruction upon a subject concerning which every girl is, mentally at least, asking questions. Price 75 cents.

2. THE SCIENCE OF MOTHERHOOD. By Hannah Whitall Smith.

All the world is beginning to think with Froebel that "we must cultivate mothers," and the aim of this suggestive little book is to give a true idea of scientific motherhood. "We women," says the author, "should study this science as carefully and intelligently as any other, and make of ourselves 'mothers of understanding' as well as mothers of instinct. # 5 POPULAR BOOKS.

We will give for one new subscriber, free of all charge the five books named below, written by

CHAS. H. SPURGEON,
HENRY DRUMMOND and
T. DeWITT TALMAGE,

The greatest modern writers on religious topics. Their works are justly famed, and these have all had an enormous sale both in this country and abroad. The books are clearly printed on good paper, and each is as complete a book as though they were bought in five separate stores, and all are bound in attractive, heavy paper covers.

No. 71. John Ploughman's Pictures. By the late Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon, the great London preacher and evangelist. This is one of the most original and popular books of the age. The author states in the preface that its object is to smite evil, and especially the monster evil of drink, and it is safe to say that the plain talks of John Ploughman, couched in Spurgeon's quaint sayings, his wit, his logic, his power for good, have accomplished more than any similar publication. This book can be read by every member of the family over and over with increasing pleasure and profit, and every mother who has a son that must face the temptations of the terrible curse of drink, will place a good weapon in his hands when she induces him to read this work. Illustrated.

SERMONS BY T. DeWITT TALMAGE.

No. 74. Talmage on Palestine. A book containing a series of sermons, by the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, about his recent and noted travels through Palestine, telling what he saw and learned there. They make such delightful reading, and so instructive and entertaining, that the book is immensely popular. On the days he delivered these sermons in his church in Brooklyn, which seated 4,500 people, thousands were turned away from the doors for want of standing-room inside the church. Even to read the book makes one thrill through and through.

LECTURES BY HENRY DRUMMOND.

Prof. Henry Drummond is without doubt the most popular writer of the age. It is with much pride that we are enabled to offer three of his most popular works. If you read one, you will want all; and if you read them once, you are almost certain to read them over and over.

For simplicity, truthfulness, gentle yet mighty force in statement, and loving loyalty to God, they are unequaled by anything ever written on the subject. They will be angels of mercy to every home that gives them a welcome place on the reading-table.—Quarterly Review.

No. 64. The Greatest Thing in the World. By Henry Drummond. This book is on love as taught by Christ and the disciples; and if any one doubts that love is the greatest thing in the world, and if they want to be made stronger in their love for all things, they must get this book, by all means.

No. 63. Changed Life. By Henry Drummond. If you want a practical solution of the cardinal problem of Christian experience, read this book on "Changed Life." You will be drinking at the fountain of eternal life.

No. 62. Peace Be With You. By Henry Drummond. This book might be called a short treatise on Rest, Joy, Peace, Faith and Light. It is so simple, yet so grand and so clear, that you lay the book down feeling that a new and brighter day has dawned in your life.

The Massachusetts legislative committee on liquor law, as expected, brought in a unanimous report against the Norwegian system of regulation. Apropos of this the Boston Transcript pertinently says: "The system came so near to adoption last year that the people were aroused to look into it, and now that it has been looked into it does not appear to be just the perfect thing it was represented to be. Merits it has, no doubt, but the underlying objection, public connection with the liquor traffic, does not commend itself to the advocates of temperance, and naturally the liquor interest opposes it for business reasons. So between the two opposing forces, the temperance workers on one side and the liquor-sellers on the other, the Norwegian system is likely to be squeezed to death."

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS

Of Mary A. Woodbridge.

There are throughout the country, doubtless in every state in the Union, "Woodbridge" unions and "Woodbridge" Y's, for many a local W. C. T. U. in the long list which Mrs. Woodbridge helped to bring into existence is proud to call itself by her name. Doubtless most of these already possess portraits of this beloved leader, and it goes without saying that those who do not are desirous of supplying this lack immediately. Hence we call attention to the cabinet photographs we have on sale. They are excellent likenesses and we commend them not only to "Woodbridge" unions but to all unions and to all friends of Mrs. Woodbridge.

DEAR FRIENDS:—Will you kindly read with care the notices which are found each week at the head of this column? We cannot fill your orders without your full address. We cannot give you proper credit without your full address. There are among our thousands of subscribers and patrons many bearing the same name. We do not wish to credit Mary Smith, of New Town, with the money belonging to Mary Smith, of Old Town, and vice versa, but how can we know where the respective Marys live unless they state the town or city and state? Among our numerous orders this week we have some for discontinuance, some for renewal, without the least possible clue to the sender but the name. We must urge again upon our patrons the importance of addressing all business matters to Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, The Temple, Chicago, and that it is equally important that the full name and address of sender should be given.

We were weary when we reached the cozy little flat we call "home"; the lifting of a pen seemed a burden, the least brain effort a pain, but on our table lay the first copy of "A Wheel Within a Wheel, or How I Learned to Ride a Bicycle," by our beloved Frances E. Willard.

I shall never ride a bicycle: my avoirdupois would not admit of the venture, but the name of the author was magnetic, and as I casually opened to page 57 and read the words, "Let go—but stand by," my weary brain felt the electric impulse to fathom the meaning of the words, "A wheel within a wheel," and I began the fascinating book, read from "preliminary" to "moral," and sought my couch as refreshed as if I had bowled along the boulevard for an hour on the magic cycle.

Would you catch a glimpse of the "moral"? "Let go, but stand by,"—this is the golden rule for parent and pastor, teacher and friend! the only rule that at once respects the individuality of another, and yet adds one's own, as far as may be, to another's momentum in the struggle of

'A wheel within a wheel" has a higher mission and a broader aim than teaching the mastery of the "silent steed." It is interesting to read the story of the gradual overcoming of difficulties, the evolution from mounting, pedaling, turning, dismounting, to the independent control of "the ingenious and inspiring motor," but deftly interwoven are the "reflections" of the author, which will be to many a reader the charm of the book. Devotees of the healthful and exhilarating exercise will welcome this little volume, which contains not only Miss Willard's wise suggestions, but seven fine half-tones, which alone are worth more than the fifty cents expended.

The "Business Outlook" gladly lends its space for presenting to its readers the Mary A. Woodbridge Literature Fund Card. This card is devised by the superintendent of the literature department in order to give the widest possible opportunity for contributing to the Mary A. Woodbridge Fund. The fund itself is Miss Willard's thought, and is the most appropriate monument which could be reared to the memory of the great leader who has so recently been promoted.

The cards are of very attractive appearance, with an excellent half-tone picture of Mrs. Woodbridge, and will be sent out by Mrs. Stevenson to all who desire them. This fund ought to swell to a magnificent sum-total within the next few months.

Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson, president of the regular staff, will deliver the address.

IN a letter dated Reigate, England, March 29, Miss Willard writes: "We received a cable dispatch last evening telling us of Mrs. Williams' home going, and we wish it were possible to reach you earlier with an article for THE UNION SIGNAL about the dear, blessed, faithful heart than whom no one could have been more devoted to the interests we love and cherish." In a letter to Mr. Williams she says: "Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Gordon and I find ourselves by this great loss, following so closely upon that of Mrs. Woodbridge, the only acting general officers of the World's W. C. T. U. This most unusual providence impresses us deeply, and touches with tender pathos all our thoughts and plans for the great Convention of next June. We had often pictured your dear wife present with us when the Polyglot Petition should be brought before the people, and I had anticipated the pleasure of introducing the president of the Dominion W. C. T. U. to her English sisters and the ideal treasurer to our delegates from all parts of the world. From the first day I saw Mrs. Williams, years ago, until to-day I have always regarded hers as one of the most electric brains, loyal hearts, ready, skillful hands that God had given to the cause of home protection. What losses are piled upon us, and there is no end, but in heaven there is a new beginning!"

THE direct veto bill, the English temperance measure, was introduced by Sir William Vernon Harcourt in the House of Commons, April 8. The law is of a local option nature and provides that a vote shall be taken on the request of a tenth of the number of parochial electors. A majority of two-thirds would carry prohibition, the law to come into effect the 1st of January ensuing upon the expiration of a year from its passage. No compensation is provided for saloon-keepers, the Chancellor pointing out that similar laws in the United States and the Scandinavian Peninsula carried no compensation. The latter elimination is an improvement on the previous bill which afforded a three years' compensation to publicans. A plain majority would, to our thinking, ensure greater results for actual prohibition and increase the effectiveness of the measure as an object lesson.

"THAT hard-faced child," as Anna Gordon calls the beautiful bronze maiden which is the evolution of her own bright brain and the pluck and toil of the children of the World's Loyal Temperance Legion, is at last to take up her final position near the entrance to Willard Hall, and to be known as Willard Fountain, to the city of Chicago. It was intended, as our readers will remember, that the exercises connected with this presentation and dedication should take place during the Columbian year, but so many unique events were crowded into Chicago during that most notable year it is not strange that the bronze child should have been crowded out. Since then, owing chiefly to Miss Gordon's absence, but also, in part, to the many convolutions of municipal red-tape, it has seemed impossible to arrange for the great event until now. On Saturday, April 27, at 10:30 a. m. the exercises connected with the presentation will take place in Willard Hall. Mrs. Helen G. Rice, National L. T. L. superintendent, will be present as mistress of ceremonies, and will also make the address.

ON page 5 is a bare outline of the business and public career of one of the most active and successful lives of this century, the late W. Jennings Demorest. It is, however, as a Prohibition agitator and educator that the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL are particularly interested in Mr. Demorest. In this respect he was one of the broadest and most persistent workers. He early saw the necessity of a Prohibition party, and ever after was an uncompromising Prohibitionist. When the high-license craze swept over the country he gathered the strongest facts and arguments, and spent thousands of dollars in sowing them broadcast. When, a year or two ago, the state control system was proposed, he fought the delusion with all his might. Mr. and Mrs. Demorest have been steadfast friends of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and constant attendants at our state and National conventions. "This organization," he once declared, "is doing more than any other single agency to educate the American people on prohibition, and I feel sometimes like concentrating all my efforts in furthering their plans." Nearly ten years ago he said, "If we are to win this struggle, we must win the young people." The junior movement, and the various juvenile organizations, all received his hearty indorsement, but it was particularly through the medal contest system that his great work in this direction was accomplished. While Mr. Demorest was always aggressive on the line of prohibition, he was not forgetful of other great issues. He was an ardent advocate of woman suffrage, and took the side of the people every time on the issues of transportation, tariff, currency and kindred questions. In the death of Mr. Demorest, the young people lose an organizer who knew how to make them a wonderful power in the greatest contest of the century; the Woman's Christian Temperance Union a generous supporter and sincere friend, and the Prohibition party one of its most resourceful workers and safest leaders

A RUINED LIFE.

BY ANNA H. WOODRUFF.

Behold! at manhood's massive portal standing,
A noble youth, with earnest, eager face,
Who knocks with quick, insistent touch demanding
An entrance to the place.

We see him enter, all his pulses leaping
To join the stirring strife for power and place,
Ambition, Pride, the spurs, while Caution sleeping
Deserts him in the race.

Hope beckons from afar, a radiant brightness
The untried future gilds, his bounding heart
Leaps to its fate, no ballast to its lightness
Till pain has done its part.

Alas! Temptation subtle and ensnaring
With luring wile at every corner set,
Her victim lulled with wine and song despairing
Awakes within her net.

How should he know the wine-cup simply tasted
Through custom-friendship, would on fire set
The evil spark within, till, life all wasted
He drinks to drown regret?

Where now those roseate visions of the morning?
The darkling sky with clouds of vain regret
Is shadowed o'er—no hint of Hope's adorning
That sun of life has set!

Must greed of gain destroy our fairest flowers?
Should Hope but rise to set in dark despair?
How long shall Evil triumph and the powers
Of Darkness rule the air?

No good was ever gained without endeavor!
No wrong was ever righted without pain!
Was ever foe so cruel—crafty? Never!
No quarter should he gain.

REVEREND BALAAM BULL'S NIGHTMARE.

In Five Chapters.

BY JEAN CALVIN.

Chapter I.

The Reverend Balaam Bull, being of a very contented, complacent disposition and now considerably past middle life, had arrived at a certain sense of sureness concerning all things vital to existence whether of a temporal or spiritual nature. His sermons, if sometimes a little dull, were generally suited to the occasion, simple, methodical and faultlessly orthodox.

At the moment our story opens he was not preaching, but sitting in the home of one of his neediest parishioners, making a pastoral call in company with his wife. He was trying to comfort away the distracting cares of good Mrs. John Smith, who was herself sitting uneasily on the edge of her chair with a six weeks old baby in her arms, two older babies—twins—clinging to her skirts, and one or two livelier children playing about the room, whom Mrs. Bull was endeavoring to keep out of mischief for Mrs. Smith.

This dear little Mrs. Smith whom Mrs. Bull had known and loved from childhood, had a family of eight children, the oldest nine or ten years old, and a husband who had been out of work for the most part throughout their ten years of wedded life. Mrs. Bull had said to her friend only a day or two before the wedding, that it was all a mistake, that John Smith had not the energy to earn a living for himself, and certainly would not for a wife too.

Now John Smith knew that Mrs. Bull had said this of him and he had slunk sullenly out of the back door when the front one was opened to admit the pastor and his wife. He never faced Mrs. Bull if he could help it.

Noticing the uneasiness Mrs. Smith betrayed in spite of her courteous manners, after the first fifteen minutes of their call, Mrs. Bull's housewifely instincts told her that there was something demanding the speedy attention of this overworked little woman, so she said, "Balaam, dear, you know we are in a little haste this afternoon." But her husband had caught, he imagined, the signs of lack of spiritual peace and rest in Mrs. Smith's manner, and all his ministerial instincts were aroused to keenest pitch. Was he not a preacher of a gospel of peace to the careworn? It was his duty as Mrs. Smith's pastor not to leave her until all was composure within. "My dear Mrs. Smith," said the pastor, "the mysteries of Providence are sometimes inscrutable, and why He should have burdened you who have so large a family, with straitened circumstances, is not for you to know."

"But she does know," exclaimed Mrs. Bull, impatiently to herself, "and that the fault is not Providence, but John Smith, and she defied Providence, as she said to me the other day, in marrying him against the advice of all her best friends." And then, in order to hear no more of her husband's conversation, which really irritated her, she seized upon an open book which the retreating John Smith had left on the table and began to read. It was a life of the mother of the Wesleys, and by strange coincidence the first words she read was a complaint of that worthy woman's husband: "'Twill be no great wonder that when I had but fifty pounds per annum for six or seven years together; nothing to begin the world with; one child at least per annum, and my wife sick for half that time, that I should run one hundred and fifty pounds behind." Mrs. Bull closed the book with a slam that caused Mrs. Smith to give a nervous little jump, and said, impatiently, "Come, come, Mr. Bull, we really must go."

On the way home Balaam Bull remarked: "I am sorry to see a complaining sort of spirit developing in Mrs. Smith of late. I had hoped that adversity would only refine one of so gentle a nature and genuine an experience as she possessed, but I am beginning to fear that she is losing ground spiritually."

"Good gracious, Balaam!" exclaimed his wife, "what can you expect under the circumstances? Married to that shiftless fellow! What a pity she didn't know when she was well off and stay single!"

"Come, come, my dear," interrupted Mr. Bull, "you are the last woman, I am sure, to make hasty remarks that would reflect upon marriage."

"It depends upon the marriage," she replied. Balaam Bull glanced at his wife with surprise; she had never spoken so testily to him in all their twenty years of wedded life. They had never quarreled, and had always held the most congenial views on every possible topic, until, strange to say, the coming of the Smiths into the neighborhood. They had not quarreled since then, but in Balaam Bull's opinions his wife's extremely loyal traits of character and her wild sort of sympathy for Mrs. Smith had brought them dangerously near a most unpleasant topic. He had heard his wife make reckless remarks on the marriage question which really were hard to bear because of the possible inference they might convey to the effect that she herself was not happy.

He had noted that of late she seldom denounced in the same vehement manner as formerly, the tendency on the part of young women to remain unmarried; and it had been now a long time since he had heard her repeat what he was accustomed to denominate "that masterpiece of logic on the woman's rights question," which was always pleasing to his ears, namely, "I have all the rights I want. My husband never interferes with my liberty!"

And it is quite likely that Mrs. Bull would have obtained nothing that she had either taste or inclination for, by the most sweeping alteration in the customs and laws of the country to suit woman suffragists, for the reason that Mrs. Bull was not progressive, and then Mr. Bull was most admirable in domestic life. Contented by nature, perfect physical health made him the best of companions, and if he was a little old-fashioned in his views as regards women he combined those opinions with an old-fashioned gentleman's courtly manners, which found expression in uniform chivalrous regard for all women, most especially for his wife.

No more was said that evening concerning Mrs. Smith's trials. But Balaam Bull had decided on a topic for his next Sunday morning's discourse, and that very evening he opened up his carefully arranged case of pigeon-holed sermons, and after a little search produced one that by the date marked on the back showed him that he had not had occasion to use it for over ten years. Alongside the date was the simple word "good." Mr. Bull understood better than any one else what that meant. He was accustomed thus to make a memorandum of his wife's opinion of the sermon at the date of its delivery. The sermon was entitled "The Three Classes of Subordination Established by Divine Ordinance;" the text, "The powers that be are ordained of God."

On the following Sunday morning Balaam Bull grouped his remarks under three grand sections, namely:

1. The subordination of man to God.
2. The subordination of wife to husband.
3. The subordination of servant to master.

As it was the second section of this sermon which occasioned the first and last quarrel that ever arose between Balaam Bull and his wife, it is necessary to give his subheads under that section.

Firstly.—The consequences of Eve's sin: "Thy desire shall be unto thy husband and he shall rule over thee." Gen. 3:16.

Secondly.—Woman's subsequent position in the church. "Let the women keep silence." I. Cor. 14:34.

Thirdly.—Ambition and insubordination in women receive just punishment: "Miriam became leprous, white as snow." Num. 12:10. "Dogs eat the flesh of Jezebel." II. Kings 9:36. "Vashti [shall] come no more before King Ahasuerus." Esther 1:19.

Fourthly.—The ideal of womanhood: "As Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord." I. Peter 3:6.

Now recent experiences in helping Mrs. John Smith in her perplexities had carried Mrs. Bull much farther from the "old landmarks" than she had dreamed of. She was amazed to find that this second portion of her husband's sermon, to which she had listened, she remembered, with hearty approval in the past, really annoyed her so much that she drew a sigh of relief when he passed on to the consideration of the servant's subordination to his master.

Balaam Bull exalted simplicity rather than originality in preaching; indeed, to his mind the test of orthodoxy was largely familiarity of expression. That could be safely taught which had been most frequently repeated in the pulpits of his denomination. He had a holy horror of things too new and untested by mature experience and frequent theological discussion.

The remainder of the Sunday was full of pastoral duties, but at bedtime, after the lamp was out, and all was quiet for the night, Mrs. Bull knew the time had come for her to give her customary Sunday night comments on her husband's morning sermon. She was trying to screw up her courage to face any discussion she might be led into if Mr. Bull insisted on drawing out her thoughts. At any rate she would say to begin with, that the sermon was delivered in excellent style and all the points clearly set forth. Hesitating for a moment for words to express herself guardedly, Balaam Bull anticipated her remarks by the question, "Sarah, I hope you liked my morning's discourse?"

Now why Mrs. Bull did not after all say what she intended to, she could not have told, but as a matter of fact she blurted out:

"My dear, I must say I didn't like it altogether; it seems to me you male theologians act the part of King Rehoboam. If Scripture chastises Eve for her sin with whips, why must you chastise all women with scorpions? You say to them, 'Our little theological finger shall be thicker than the Scriptural loin—in teaching female subjection!' It's a shame."

Balaam Bull lay quite silent; he was so amazed that he could think of nothing to say. What had come over his wife? Had she actually come under the influence of some woman suffragist? He knew such a woman, fully equipped by a college education and natural eloquence for a most mischievous career. He had heard her give one of her pretentious lectures to a crowd of silly men and sillier women. He went as a matter of information and he did not dream until he saw it with his own eyes, how one misguided woman could lead a whole audience astray. Should he ask his wife if she had been to hear her too? No, that would be to recognize that the creature might have influence over her and he would not wish Mrs. Bull to think that. Mr. Bull at last concluded it would be better just to wait patiently for his wife to break the silence by a further explanation of her extraordinary words.

Now at first Mrs. Bull had felt horrified at her angry explosion, but it was a relief from pent up wrath and really made her feel better; and after it had been said she could not very well take it back. As these two had neither of them ever spoken an angry word to the other before, it was no great wonder that they knew nothing of the art of "making up" gracefully, hence in no spirit of hatefulness but from sheer ignorance as to what next was the proper thing to do, Mrs. Bull turned over in bed and with a single sigh fell asleep.

THE "FREEDOM" OF WOMEN WAGE-EARNERS.

BY FLORENCE KELLY.

(Illinois State Factory Inspector.)

The recent decision of the supreme court of Illinois in the so-called "eight hour cases" covers two provisions of the Factory and Workshop Act of 1893. The decision sustains all of that act except the provision for the salaries of inspectors and Section 5, which read, "No female shall be employed in any manufacturing establishment, factory or workshop longer than eight hours in any one day nor more than forty-eight hours in any one week."

The decision does not abolish the office of the inspectors. On the contrary, the child labor and "sweatshop" provisions are sustained, and it is stated that the inspectors are "state officers or officers of the state."

It is necessary to emphasize this because The Union Signal, in common with other papers, has been misled into referring to the law as void and the inspector as "factory inspector under the former law." The law is in force, and the inspectors are inspecting.

The loss of Section 5 leaves thousands of women and children "free" to work not ten hours instead of eight, but twelve, fourteen, and in some cases twenty and even thirty or more hours at a stretch, as the following examples may show.

Before the Eight Hours Section went into effect, there worked in one of the largest binderies of Chicago an unusually intelligent set of American girls. One morning a "rush" order having come in, a reward was offered to the girl who would hold out longest without resting from work. It was also hinted that the girl who first quit work need not come back. The girls thus urged, worked from 7 a. m. on Monday all through that day and night (coffee being served at midnight) and until 4 p. m. the next afternoon, Tuesday. Then a girl fainted, and the rest, panic-stricken and hysterical, left their work in a body and went home. No law was violated, for where an eight hours law is unconstitutional, any other restriction of hours is unconstitutional and the hours of work are unlimited.

A girl boasting to me that she had once earned eighteen dollars in a week in a cloak shop, her fellow workmen produced time books and pay slips and showed conclusively that to earn this money she had worked eight consecutive days (two of them Sundays) during sixteen hours each day. She had then fallen ill and had worked no more that season.

In one of the large garment factories of Chicago, on the day following the publication of the recent decision, the foreman announced to the girls that their Saturday half-holiday was henceforth unconstitutional and that they ought to be very glad to be able to earn another half-day's pay. When they received their pay slips later on they found that they were getting no more for sixty hours than they had been receiving for forty-eight.

In one of the candy stores of Chicago a child thirteen years old was employed from seven in the morning to midnight on Christmas eve, then sent away to walk across the worst district of Chicago, to reach her home and her frenzied mother at twenty minutes to one o'clock on Christmas morning. This was lawful for mercantile institutions then; similar cruelty will be lawful henceforth in the factories also.

A young woman returning from one of the great printing establishments where she had worked from seven in the morning to eleven o'clock at night, was assaulted almost upon her own doorstep. This was before the law was enacted. I called upon her employer for the purpose of urging him to establish more humane hours. He insisted that there was no necessary connection between her work and this dread experience; for it might have happened as she was going home from a theater or a party. But respectable working girls do not go home late at night alone as a matter of daily habit. And she was compelled to take this risk every night. The connection still seems to me a close one.

Throughout the twenty months during which the law was in force, less than a dozen cases of discharge of women or girls because of their compulsory eight hours working day were brought to my notice, though I was naturally constantly upon the lookout for them. In some places the hours of the men were not changed by reason of the change in the hours of the girls. This was notably the case in the great Western Electric works, where the girls worked eight hours and the men nine. There were other places where the men had already obtained the eight-hours day while the girls had made a practice of working longer. Here the girls were placed upon an equality with the men by the enforcement of Section 5. In a few places where the work of the men and girls interlocked, both obtained the eight-hours day. This was strikingly true in the sweat-shops where both men and girls were eager and zealous in notifying us when Section 5 was violated.

It is characteristic that the rejoicing over the vindication of the right of women to work unlimited hours, comes from the employers, their attorneys and friends. The wage-earners with whom we come into contact very constantly mourn over their newly restored "freedom" and would gladly be rid of it.

THE ANGEL OF THE FINNISH PRISONS.

BY KATE LUNDEN.

Far, far away, washed by the waves of the Gulf of Bothnia, lies "the land of a thousand lakes," the Suomi of the Finnish tongue, otherwise known as Finland. It is a land of memory and song, where Swedish bards have mingled their notes with the liquid tones of *Kalevala, the echoes of which still linger among the birches mirrored in the blue-eyed lakes.

It is a daughter of this fair but ill-fated land, a daughter of this faithful and patient yet passionate and imperious people, the writer wishes to portray in a few hasty strokes. From a sketch in a Swedish journal, over the signature "—hl,—" we borrow the outline.

"The angel of the Finnish prisons" is a bright star in the galaxy of those self-sacrificing men and women who have made it their life work to gather jewels for the crown of their king inside the prison doors. Her noble birth and aristocratic environments have been no barriers between her and the poor prisoners, whom she loves with a devotion that has won their hearts and tamed the wildest natures.

Mathilda Wrede, youngest daughter of the late Governor Wrede, of Finland, was born 1864. At an early age she lost her mother and was brought up under the care and supervision of her father, a noble scion of a famous house. Barely nineteen she was led to the Saviour through the instrumentality of a seamen's missionary in Vasa, Finland, and shortly afterward she found the work for which she has proved herself so eminently fitted.

Her first introduction to the unfortunates, among whom she is so faithfully laboring, was in her home in Vasa. Her father was at that time warden of the prison in that city and one of the prisoners was sent up to her room to fix a lock. She spoke a few kind words to him and found to her surprise and joy that he was a Christian. When he bade her good-bye he said, "Would you not kindly come down and speak to the other prisoners sometime?" She promised to do so, and after receiving proper permission she started on her first round escorted by one of the gendarmes.

The blessing she received from this first visit filled her soul with a new longing. In return for what had been given to her she yearned to bless others. Her father, who thought that this new departure was only one of his daughter's youthful fancies which would perish with its novelty, gave her permission to visit the prisoners as often as she chose. Thus the first door was opened, and through her intimate friendship with the wife of the governor general, the gates to every Finnish prison soon swung ajar. It can truly be said that she has been granted the freedom of her country's penal institutions, for she is allowed to visit and talk to the prisoners at any time or under any circumstances, in private or public, and a free pass on every railroad controlled by the government enables her to carry on her work more extensively than otherwise might be possible. The maiden's "youthful fancy" passed, but its passing was ever onward, until to-day its power is felt throughout her land.

What this loving, sympathizing heart has done for Finland's unfortunate sons and daughters cannot be detailed here; only a few glimpses given. The title of the sketch, a name conferred upon Miss Wrede in gratitude and love, tells better than the most elaborate biography her life's story. "—Hl—" has well said that she considers herself happy, indeed, to count this "prison angel" among her friends, and that she looks back upon this acquaintance as one of the most blessed and inspiring in all her life.

For Miss Wrede to spend a whole day, from seven in the morning till six or seven at night in some prison is not uncommon. If the wardens do not "command" her to accept of their hospitality, the thought of rest or refreshments does not even enter her mind. Censured for "burning the candle at both ends," by her utter disregard of herself, she once replied: "How can I eat delicacies when I know what kind of food the poor prisoners receive?" The nights are often utilized for letter writing, for she has an extensive correspondence with her "dear prisoners," as she calls them. Many a time does she speak of them with tearful eyes and they in their turn have an unbounded confidence in her and the influence she exerts over them is phenomenal. They tell her their secrets, and the unconverted have equally learned to love and trust her.

One day when Miss Wrede passed a certain railroad station she was approached by a poorly clad man who asked under tears: "Do you not know me?" She told him that she was unable to recognize him. He then explained that he was one of the recipients of her kindness and how somebody had told him that a lady who distributed tracts had passed the station. He guessed who it was and although living about ten miles out in the country started immediately for the depot to watch for her return. During four days he had searched every passing train for the familiar face until at last his faithfulness was rewarded and he had the joy of meeting his good "angel" once more.

On one of her visits to the well known prison, Kakkola in Abo, she stumbled and sprained her ankle. It pained her exceedingly, but reflecting that if she did not stay that day the prisoners could not see her again for six weeks, she summoned all her strength and dragged herself up the long stairs to the second story. There she held reception all day. Among the prisoners was one who had once been known as "The terror of Osterbotten," but who was now a meek and faithful follower of the gentle Nazarene. He was a shoemaker by trade, and asked the privilege of making her a pair of shoes. Forgetting her sprained ankle she reached out her foot to have her measure taken. The prisoner turned pale when he saw its unnatural size, and demanded to know the reason.

"Ah," she said, "I had forgotten! I sprained my ankle this morning when I walked upstairs. You had better wait till it gets well."

"No," answered the former "terror" with enthusiasm, "I shall make a pair of shoes that will fit the feet you have injured for the sake of the prisoners." And he made a pair of big, big shoes, which she always wears on the anniversary of this occurrence.

Of a modest and retiring nature, Miss Wrede shrinks from all publicity, and the record of the greatest part by far of what she has accomplished is only written in the books above and in hearts which have no intercourse with the outside world. But a noble, self-sacrificing Christian life is always inspiring, and deeds of love and words of kindness need not always be seen or heard to make their impress upon hearts open to the good and the true. A subtle influence, undefinable, perhaps, but none the less real, is always exerted over kindred spirits by every one who has drank deep of the Living Fountain, and unconsciously, as it were, we are led to follow. If through the example of this daughter of the North some loving thoughts should go out to our forgotten brothers and sisters behind the prison bars it would only be a fitting tribute to her who has left a life of ease and comfort, counted for naught the advantages of birth and training, to shed some ray of light and hope in the souls of neglected outcasts.

A DROP OF ALCOHOL IN A MICROSCOPE.

BY J. F. COWAN.

"Walk right up this way and see the wonderful magnifying glass, which reveals to the astonished gaze a thousand animalculæ in a single drop of water!"

The street fakir whose cry this was, caught my eye fixed upon him, and hastily dipping into a vessel of water one of the little tin tubes which had inserted in it a magnifying lense, he deftly placed it in front of my eye, proceeding with his parrot-like lecture to the audience gathered around him.

"A drop of pure water! And yet this magic instrument discloses to your astonished gaze myriad infinitesimal forms of life sporting in this tiny ocean as in a bathtub. Step right up and take a look and satisfy yourselves. Then buy one to amuse the family. Only ten cents apiece. Guaranteed to magnify objects a thousandfold!"

I nodded to the man as I handed back the glass, and ventured thus far to be familiar: "How would a drop of beer or whisky look placed in there?"

He eyed me sharply for a second, and, evidently satisfied with the innocence of my intentions, seized upon the suggestion as a text for a new display of oratory with which to amuse and hold his crowd. "Yes, ladies and gentlemen," he broke out afresh, "little drops of water are not the only things in which this miraculous invention discloses forms of terrible monsters. Suppose we put a drop of whisky under this powerful magnifier. What do you see? Why, ladies and gentlemen [he went through the same motions of pretending to fill the tube and holding it before his eyes], I see a bright-faced, winsome little boy on his way to school, his lunch basket in his hand. He is neatly combed and brushed, bright as a pin, fresh from his mother's hand, the warm breath of her good-by kiss upon his cheek.

"A well-dressed gentleman beckons to him and offers him a piece of silver to run an errand. It is an easy way for him to earn what appears to him a fortune for spending money, and the gentleman seems so respectable. He darts away. There is plenty of time before the school bell rings. The note is directed to a room in a stately building on the main thoroughfare. As the boy timidly enters his eye is dazzled by the glitter of plate glass mirrors, of beautiful pictures, of polished wood and nickel and brass. It seems like a palace to him. It is filled with well dressed gentlemen sitting at the tables, sipping from their glasses and chatting together.

"'Is Mr. Smith here?' he asks, holding the note up to the gaze of the white uniformed attendant.

"'Yonder at that table.'

"'Ha! my boy! What's this? A message from my partner. Good news! You shall have a quarter for being the bearer of it. Wait here! You've been running fast; you must be tired; sip this. What's the matter? Do I look as though I would harm you?'

"The boy goes on his way to school, his pulse beating double time, quickened by wine and money. The next time he passes that place he feels a strange longing to taste again the sparkling stuff. He has money of his own, why not? He enters. He stops often after that. He is noticed and encouraged and treated. He makes friends. He secures a position and money. He dresses well. Has a graceful manner, develops into manly beauty, weds a beautiful maiden, sets up an elegant home, leads a gay, careless life. Children come, and the wine flows freely at their christening. It makes their hearts beat fast; fires their blood. There are words between the husband and wife. After that he drinks more deeply. The next day he sleeps it off; but when he arises a change has come over him. He is reckless and desperate.

"Ladies and gentlemen, I look again into this drop of liquor. I see a middle-aged man, seedy and faded, with an unsteady gait, a red nose and watery eyes. He is hurrying with nervous, unsteady steps down the street to get something to brace him up. His wife has gone to the dogs. His children are growing up vagabonds around him. He has nothing to live for, but the intoxication of his cups. His friends are gone, his credit is gone, his ambition is gone. The windows of his house are filled with old hats and bundles of rags. His front gate is down and the roof leaks. At the door of the magnificent palace where he drank his first glass of wine, he pauses. An attendant greets him as he opens the door, with a stern 'Move on!' and a motion of his finger toward the policeman on the opposite side of the street. I see all this, ladies and gentlemen, in the same drop of liquor.

"Yes, a little more. The battered and degraded man, who was once a bright-faced school-boy, is turned penniless upon the street. A patrol wagon drives away with two of his children; one living, the other bleeding from a death wound. The headlines of the morning paper stare him in the face. His wife, living under an assumed name with another man has committed suicide. The agent of the tenement clicks the cold steel of the door lock in his ear, holding everything he had in the world for back rent, and he is a beggar on the street.

"The realization of his awful situation sobers him. He sees an advertisement offering a chance to make some money easily. He applies. He invests his last dollar in an article to sell upon the street corners. He stands here before you to-day, ladies and gentlemen, gazing into this wonderful instrument which is offered for sale to you, that the profits may keep him from starving. Thank you. Thank you for your kindness. I have a few left yet at the low price of one dime.

"But, ladies and gentlemen, I have not told you all. I see in the drop of liquor in this microscope, a pitiful wretch spending his last cent for fiery drink to quench his craving thirst. In some low dive or covered alleyway he hides himself from the world. Horrible visions begin to burst upon his gaze. He starts; he pulls his hair, throws out his hand to thrust invisible monsters from him. He screams; he shrieks; he covers his face and shudders. He is suffering untold torments in the paroxysms of delirium tremens. Don't start back, ladies and gentlemen, until I tell you the rest. There is an open grave in the potter's field. The bones of a nobody are jostled into it, and that, you say, is the end of the beautiful fair-haired boy. But no. Across the mystic chasm there arise shadows of dancing lurid flames and fiendish visions with glaring eyeballs and poisoned darts to torment the last miserable victim of strong drink sent down to hell."

Some of the standers-by shuddered, some laughed coarsely, others looked pitiful. The microscopes had been selling like hot cakes. Was the man in earnest, and had he been rehearsing to us the pathetic history of his own life, or was it a well-conned tale designed to enrich his coffers, and he only a clever play-actor? His looks and dress fitted him well for the character he had described.

Something drew me toward him. "My brother," I accosted him, after the last of the crowd had sauntered away, "I've no doubt your picture was a true one in many, many sad instances. But there is hope that any one this side the grave may blot out its terrible sequel. Human sympathy and the grace of God can do wonders."

He looked at me sharply. "I don't know what came over me," he said, apologetically. "I never told that tale before. What you said got me started. But it is true, it is true! God knows it is only too true!"

"God knows," I hastened to say, "that I want to join hands with you, that the unrealized portion of it may never come true. It need not; it must not be completed."

A little more persuasion induced him to dine with me, and I succeeded in winning his confidence. To-day there is an agreeable, popular, successful salesman in one of the large retail establishments down town, who, though prematurely old, and whose manly beauty is forever marred by early dissipation, yet fulfills far better the promise of the fair-haired, blue-eyed school-boy than the terrible fate which the street fakir pictured of himself from the drop of alcohol.

It is a blessed secret, this of living by the day. Any one can carry his burden, however heavy, till nightfall. Any one can do his work, however hard, for one day. Any one can live sweetly, quietly, patiently, lovingly, and purely till the sun goes down. And this is all that life ever really means to us—just one little day. "Do to-day's duty, fight to-day's temptation, and do not weaken and distract yourself by looking forward to things you cannot see, and could not understand if you saw them." God gives us nights to shut down the curtain of darkness on our little days. We cannot see beyond, and we ought not to try to see beyond. Short horizons make life easier, and give us one of the blessed secrets of brave, true, holy living.—J. R. Miller, D. D., in The Building of Character.

LADY SOMERSET AS A LANDOWNER.

Dear Union Signal:—The fact that Lady Henry Somerset has by her example and honest hard work put total abstinence and the local veto bill on a higher plane than they have ever heretofore occupied, alarms the liquor traffic and as soon as her back is turned to leave America the enemies of temperance have rehashed the old falsehoods about her as a landowner. In reply let it be once more stated that her estates are entailed; she has only a life-use of her property, no right to sell it, but whenever any lease expires she drives out liquor selling and its attendant abominations. The London county council will testify that no landlord has met their efforts to ameliorate the conditions of the slums so promptly and cordially as Lady Henry Somerset.

She is opposed to the House of Lords and has not hesitated to let it be known. She is disliked by the aristocratic classes who look upon her as a recreant, and yet she goes bravely and gently on her way, doing good and not evil all the days of her life. We know all these things to be true and we must "tell them out" to the great world.

Yours for the defense of the faith and the faithful,

Frances E. Willard.

CLOSE OF THE ANTI-OPIUM CAMPAIGN IN ENGLAND.

Dear Union Signal:—I have previously mentioned a great campaign, which has been in progress during some past months throughout this country, with relation to the opium question, and consisting of a series of great meetings addressed by Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate C. Bushnell. The campaign has now been brought to a most successful close by the holding, March 22, of by far the greatest meeting of the series, in London. On that occasion the Queen's Hall was filled by an audience of some three thousand persons, fully half of whom had paid for tickets of admission, and who assembled for the double purpose of welcoming Lady Henry Somerset on her first public appearance in London after her return from America, and to hear Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell on their Oriental experiences.

The meeting was not only great in numbers, but was marked by deep feeling, and even indignation, at the iniquities of which the speakers told, and by enthusiastic indorsement of every suggestion made in the direction of remedy. As has been the case at all the preceding meetings, the recital by the two heroic women of the story of their investigations into the facts relating to the opium habit and trade, not only conveyed entirely new information, but was in the nature of a revelation to most hearers as to the sanction officially given under British rule, not only to the horrors of opium itself, but also to the closely related vices of other kinds. This, indeed, has been the key-note of the campaign, as showing how deeply the questions treated are women's questions, in the fullest and most wide-reaching sense.

The investigations made by Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell in China, Hong Kong and the Straits Settlements deserve to rank and will rank equally with those they made in India a couple of years ago, into the operations of the villainous Cantonment Acts, and their exposure in this latter case has been no less thorough and searching than it was in the former one—nor have the facts stated been any less appalling or demanded in any less degree a drastic remedy. Occasionally objection has been made to the public discussion of these questions, but if the story has been painful to hear, it must have been infinitely more painful to recite, and immeasurably more painful still to the victims of the system, who had to suffer the horrors which have made the story possible. Obviously therefore, the promoters of the campaign were right in taking the ground which, when set before the great meetings held, has always been cheered to the echo—that the things spoken of, so far known but to the few, and only whispered with bated breath, ought to be proclaimed from the house-top in order that the public mind should be informed, the public conscience roused and the shame now resting on the British name and nation, done away.

Every meeting of the campaign has adopted, in every instance by unanimous vote, a strong resolution for transmission to our Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for foreign affairs, for India and for the Colonies, and also to the members of the House of Commons. This resolution has declared the firm conviction that the opium habit is both a moral and social evil of the gravest nature, expressed the deepest concern at the connection of this country with the opium traffic, involving as it does national complicity in a great wrong inflicted on unwilling peoples, contrary to morality and righteousness, and on these grounds calling for the suppression of the opium trade between India and China and the placing of the retail sale in India and other British possessions, as is already the case in England, under restrictions as a dangerous poison. These meetings have been most opportune, as has the reiteration of the resolution, for the reason that this country is just now expecting the issue of the report of a royal commission which has been taking evidence in India on some aspects of the opium question; since whatever the commission may report nothing can alter the facts or successfully dispute the evidence given by Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell.

For twenty years past efforts have been made in this country, looking towards the suppression of the opium traffic, and a great deal has been done by the anti-opium societies of which there are four or five, in the way of public agitation and Parliamentary action, but it is perfectly safe to assert that there has never before been made any single effort comparable to the recent campaign, as a means of reaching the masses of the people, and of bringing home to them the gravity and importance of the question. The holding of the campaign was due to what must have been an inspiration on the part of Lady Henry Somerset, and it could not have assumed the dimensions it has done, nor have been brought to the successful issue achieved but for her ladyship's generosity and her intense interest in all efforts in behalf of the oppressed. In all, twenty great meetings have been held in the largest halls of our principal cities. They have averaged over fifteen hundred people each. Everywhere great interest has been excited in totally new circles, and influential support secured for the object in view, wide publicity being secured by reports of the meetings in the principal organs of the press, besides many editorial comments—in only one instance of an unfavorable character. Thus this effort on the part of the two W. C. T. U. missionaries, whom many of your readers know and all honor, may be expected to leave a permanent record upon the minds of the English people and to have an ultimate, if not an early effect upon the legislation so urgently needed.

A TRIP THROUGH THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

Dear Union Signal:—I spoke in fourteen towns of this Province: East Farnham, Knowlton, Granby, Waterloo, Richmond, Coaticooke, Sherbrooke, Windsor Mills, Danville, Quebec, Montreal, Ormstown, Point St. Charles (a part of Montreal), Lachute, and Ottawa and Toronto in Ontario. We had some stormy days, and the roads in country and town were sometimes impassable, and impossible, too, yet we had good audiences in almost every instance.

The Canadians are delightful to talk to, very attentive, and not too dignified to give expression to their appreciation by hand-clapping and the hearty "Hear! hear!" Our white-ribbon sisters "across the line" are "up and doing." Unions are in good condition, and they are holding more public meetings in proportion to numbers, than unions in the states. The Canadians prepare for winter, and their winter homes are models; so warm, cozy and comfortable.

In two counties, Broome and Drummond, where some meetings were held, they have driven out the saloons, the bars, the blind tigers, and all animals of that disreputable class, after five years of constant battle. The results show that the long fight was effective.

In Richmond, four times a year, all churches close on Sunday night, and a great mass temperance meeting is held in the Town Hall, all congregations and pastors taking part. This example is worth copying.

In Ottawa, Lady Aberdeen has interested herself in many noble causes, but not in temperance, yet a member of the Woman's Council who is a staunch white-ribboner as well, told me that her gracious highness was showing interest in the W. C. T. U. as an organization, and that in the very elaborate reception given by Lord and Lady Aberdeen at Halifax recently, no wines were served. Civilization moves in its highest, as in its lowest circles.

My last appointment in the Dominion was at Toronto in the great Pavilion under the auspices of the Canadian Temperance League, which for six years has held weekly Sunday meetings, running from November to April. These meetings are very largely attended and are highly educational. Thousands sign the pledge year by year. If there be a W. C. T. U. in Toronto, it is overshadowed entirely by other temperance societies. I have been there three or four times but have not known of the W. C. T. U.

Dear Mrs. Youmans lives at 19 Metcalfe street, shut away from the world in her prison of pain and disability. A devoted niece and trusty nurse have all the care of this suffering sister. The home is very comfortable, indeed, but long and expensive sickness has consumed the fund that in health would have been ample for all purposes until the end. So to great physical pain must be added solicitude over money matters.

It grieves me to the heart to know these things. After years of such heroic service as Mrs. Youmans has given, I am sure there are in the Dominion and the states, enough sympathetic hearts, and enough open hands to lift and scatter this cloud from that humble home and that loyal soul.

Thousands of our white-ribbon women could and should buy Mrs. Youmans' book. The biography of her life, so simple, quaint and straightforward in style, and the two addresses, "Homan's License" and "Nehemiah Building the Walls," are worth many times the price of the book, which is low. In the states it may be obtained of the W. T. P. A., The Temple, Chicago; in Canada, of Mrs. Youmans herself, 19 Metcalfe St., Toronto, Ontario.

Another thing white-ribboners who have known Mrs. Youmans personally may and should do, write her often.

"'Tis sweet to be remembered;
So hard to be forgot."

Will white-ribboners in the states and in Canada remember?

Mrs. Sanderson, the able and worthy president of Province of Quebec, buried her husband only a few days after I saw her in Danville. He was then very sick. I did not see Mrs. Williams while in Montreal. Her husband promised to telephone me if she was able to see me, but no message came. Her last letter to the union paper was written only two or three days before she went away, and spoke very cheerfully of herself. On both sides of the line we have sustained sore loss. Our valiant and trusted are gone. Who shall take up the work they have laid down?

Clara C. Hoffman.

ANOTHER OPINION.

Dear Union Signal:—I wish to make a few short comments upon an article in your issue of the 4th inst, entitled "A National Reform Party," by E. E. Evans. He there suggests and urges the union of the Prohibition party and the Populists. If I understand the Populists they advocate perfect free trade and not only free silver at 16 to 1, but also irredeemable paper money, as also do many of the so-called Prohibitionists, as shown by their party platforms. Now, I am a firm Prohibitionist, but I will not support free trade or free silver 16 to 1 or worthless paper money for the sake of a distant hope of prohibition. My prohibition means crushing the liquor traffic: it does not mean any of the above dangerous measures, and I represent thousands, as the result in Vermont and other prohibition states last fall fully shows. When the Prohibition party gets the wisdom to reject all those national issues and confine itself to the two state issues of prohibition and woman suffrage and aim at carrying or influencing state governments, letting those much disputed national issues go, with every one free to vote as he pleases thereon, so he votes correct in the state and local canvass, then we can come together, but never, no, never, on the present prohibition and so-called reform platforms.

Yours, C. K. Richardson.

W. JENNINGS DEMOREST.

BY MRS. C. B. HOPKINS.

Another devoted Prohibition leader has fallen. W. Jennings Demorest, after an illness of about a week, died at his residence in New York city, 21 East 57th street, on Tuesday, the 9th inst., at about two o'clock in the morning. He was conscious to the last, and talked constantly of the cause to which he has given so much of treasure and energy in recent years. "I had hoped," he said, "to see Prohibition prevail, but though this privilege is not granted me, I have the utmost confidence in its ultimate triumph."

Mr. Demorest's interest in prohibition work has increased, if possible, during the past year. He realized, and frequently said, that he could last but a little while longer, and he was anxious to use every opportunity to further the cause. On March 29 he attended a Prohibition conference at Newburg, and spoke earnestly of the need of aggressive agitation. He came home with the chills, which developed into pneumonia, and after a short illness resulted in his death.

The funeral took place at the Reformed church. Fifty-seventh street and Madison avenue, at ten o'clock Friday morning. The services were conducted by his pastor, Dr. Abbott E. Kittredge, assisted by Dr. J. A. B. Wilson, of the Eighteenth Street Methodist Episcopal church. There were delegations from Sorosis, the Typothetæ Society and Kane Lodge of Masons. The pall-bearers were J. J. Little, Mr. Demorest's partner in business for twenty-five years; John Lloyd Thomas, secretary of the National Constitutional League, of which Mr. Demorest was president; Prof. Samuel Dickie, of Michigan, chairman of the National Prohibition Committee; Dr. M. Downing, of Poughkeepsie, chairman of the New York State Prohibition Committee; A. C. Bechstine, of this city, and Rev. H. B. Hudson, of Long Island. The body was taken to Kensico Cemetery for interment.

He is survived by a widow and four children: Vienna W., wife of Dr. J. M. Gano, of New York city; Henry C., William C. and Evelyn L., wife of Alexander Rea, of Philadelphia. Mrs. Demorest, his wife, is well known as an enthusiastic white-ribboner and an earnest worker in many charitable movements in this city.

W. Jennings Demorest was born in New York city, June 10, 1822. His parents, both natives of New Jersey, were long time residents of New York city and lifelong members of the Methodist church. He was educated in the public schools of his native city, but for many years after he began to earn his living he was a close student. He was early inclined toward the ministry but he finally abandoned this ambition and plunged into business.

He first became identified with the dry-goods trade, then became interested in numerous inventions and later engaged in the publishing business. In 1860 he edited and published the New York Illustrated News. About this time, too, with the assistance of his wife, he started the Mirror of Fashion which later was merged into the Demorest's Family Magazine, which has since won a national reputation. Mr. Demorest's publishing interests led him, some years after, to found, in company with J. J. Little, the widely known printing house of J. J. Little & Co., one of the largest and most completely equipped printing and book-binding firms in the United States. The shrewdness and sagacity with which he prosecuted his various business enterprises placed him in possession of means far beyond what these enterprises required and his surplus was largely invested in real estate.

Throughout the anti-slavery struggle Mr. Demorest was an ardent Abolitionist, an intimate associate of Beecher, Greeley, Seward and other great leaders of the movement, and was a generous supporter and indefatigable worker. At the time of the issue of the Emancipation Proclamation he had instituted in the courts a case, intended to test the constitutionality of slavery, and had carried it nearly up to the United States supreme court. When the great struggle ended he was one of the first to "forgive and forget."

In the presidential campaign of 1884, Mr. Demorest joined the Prohibition party and enthusiastically supported Governor St. John. In the state campaign of 1885, he was nominated for lieutenant-governor, and in 1890 he was also his party's nominee for mayor of New York city. In the national Prohibition convention of 1892 he was enthusiastically supported for the nomination for the presidency.

Immediately following the St. John campaign he established the National Prohibition Lecture Bureau, and later organized the National Constitutional League, through which he was pressing a test case up to the Supreme Court to establish the unconstitutionality of a license of the liquor traffic. In 1886 he inaugurated the medal contest system which has been extended in recent years all over the world.

Since identifying himself with the Prohibition movement there has been scarcely a call for local, state or national funds, which did not receive a generous response. He was a strong believer in the press, and in the early days of the Voice gave liberally in support of its various funds. When the financial success of this enterprising paper was assured, he turned his attention toward the state papers, and in various ways rendered them and the cause great assistance.

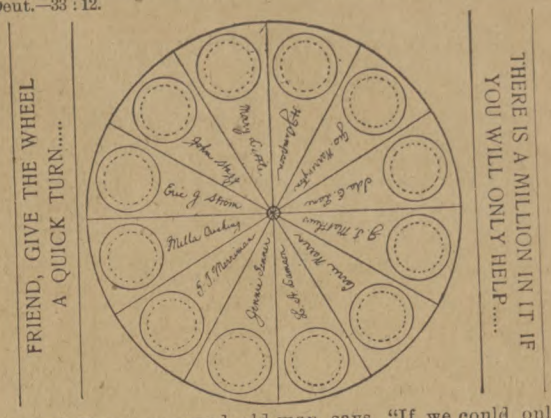
BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Prayer.—Be thou my strong habitation whereunto I may continually resort.—Psalm 71 : 3.
Promise.—The beloved of the Lord shall dwell in safety by Him; and the Lord shall cover him all the day long. Deut.—33 : 12.



Neal Dow, our grand old man, says, "If we could only inspire the W. C. T. U. with enthusiasm, the object for which the Wheels are intended would be speedily accomplished." He sends three dollars to pay for sending them out. Hon. Elijah Morse, Canton, Mass., sends ten dollars for the same purpose. The first order for a Wheel from across the water came from M. Louis Frank, Brussels, Belgium, and one of the first large orders for Wheels was received from Mr. Albert T. Hall, a New York merchant, who ordered them for his wife who is the president of the Mary Lathrap W. C. T. U. of New York, of which he is an honorary member. Mr. Hall wrote a most kind letter full of encouragement. He is very sanguine in regard to the success of the Wheel. It is most encouraging to receive our brother's words of cheer and aid in this matter.

"Mrs. Joseph Cook returned the first filled Wheel of the hundred I am placing among my friends," writes Mrs. Emily L. McLaughlin, President of the Boston, Mass., W. C. T. U. She adds, "You cannot think what satisfaction there is in the thought that I am helping even a little to lift the burden that has lain so long on your heart and hands." One of the first Wheels filled in Denver was taken to the State House by Mrs. Teetor and filled by one of the sergeant-at-arms, Miss Olive B. Frink. Thus the chain starts westward. It has also taken its lodgement away in the sunny South. Mrs. J. H. McBryde, Mobile, Ala., was the first to send a filled Wheel from that city. She says, "The Wheel with the pictures is a fine way of advertising the Temple work. I kept mine on the mantel in our living-room and nearly every one who came in asked about it. Enclosed please find stamps for two more Wheels."

Ethel Stout, the bright little editor of The Midget, has not been heard from for a long time, and we had come to the conclusion that the hard times had caused the suspension of The Midget. But not so. Both Ethel and her paper survive, as the following cutting inclosed in a letter from her will testify:

"You remember that two years ago The Midget readers sent so many pieces that we thought to have a silk quilt made and sell for the Temple. There were not enough pieces, but 'our Ruth' has made a lovely silk afghan for a baby's cab or cradle, and I will now offer it as a prize to the one sending the most names for a Baby Band by May 1. It costs one dime to have the name of any little one under five years of age enrolled in the Temperance Temple. All who compete for the prize must send at least thirty names. I have a nice present for all who send that many, whether they win the silk afghan or not."

Ethel says in her letter: "We have all been busy trying to establish a school to be called Pine Mountain Institute, near Warm Springs, in Western Georgia, but we trust the hardest will soon be over, so I can again send an occasional mite to the beautiful Temple. We are ever praying for your success. Please find inclosed $1. I am trying to raise some more Baby Bands. Stewart's name will head the list."

"And a little child shall lead them." It looks as though this prophecy was going to be verified in regard to the Temple. The children certainly are taking the lead in filling the Wheels. Some most touching letters have been received from them. "My mother died when I was five years old," writes little Della Price, Wyman, Ia. "My father was a drunkard and I want to do something to put down the liquor. I was placed in the home and now I am living with a temperance woman. I will take a Wheel and try to fill it." "I am the oldest of six little French sisters," writes Leona Searway, Fort Fairfield, Me. "I am a member of the L. T. L. We are blessed with very small means, but I desire to do something to help the Temple. Please send me a Wheel. I begin with one and hope to want more." Jesse Lyle Vance, Newman, Ill., is the kind of boy we want to handle the Wheels. He writes: "I started out this morning at half-past seven and had my Wheel filled at half-past ten. I am five years old. I want premium No. 4." No boy has beaten that record.

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1113, The Temple, Chicago.

MY AMBITION.

BY NELLIE GOODE.

Some ask for power; many ask for gold,
Some for wreaths and monuments of stone,
These crave I not, but this one thing alone—
That when my work is all completed here
And when the measure of my days is told,
One of "the least of these" may shed a tear.

THE MOTHER'S INFLUENCE.

BY MARY B. CLAFLIN.

In this day of interest in divers educational movements it is pleasant to be able to record a successful experiment, and I do it here for the benefit of mothers who may be seeking light upon a very difficult problem.

Calling on a fashionable woman of society not long since, a friend inquired for the baby, who was three or four months old. The mother replied laughingly, "I suppose she is well, but really I have not had time to go to the nursery to see my baby for a week. The demands of society are very pressing just now."

An accomplished and cultured woman complained that she could not teach her little girl to use language correctly, because at every attempt she was confronted with the remark, "Nurse says so and so, and brother says this and that."

Two young women who had been schoolmates had met for the first time after ten years' separation at the seashore in a little town on Cape Cod. They had married and each had two children. One of these mothers had what the other called "very peculiar notions" about the training of her children. In reply to certain inquiries, the "peculiar" mother said to her friend, "I resolved in the beginning of my motherhood that I would always be the trusted friend and confidante of my children, and also that I would give them such associates that I should not be engaged every moment they were in my presence in correcting what they had learned when I was obliged to be away from them. I believe that power is delegated to us for the purpose of training the minds of our children so that they shall grow and strengthen with their bodies, and that they should be so trained as to make them independent and capable of forming their own judgments.

"I shall never forget my emotions when for the first time I ventured to dissent from some opinion of my mother's. I had been at school away from home and had taken some notions and ideas from my studies in mental and moral philosophy—doubtless they were crude and it may be they were false notions—but I was very much in earnest and entirely conscientious in expressing my views; I thought, too, that my mother was the one to whom I should confide everything. So I poured out my soul to her; and she, no doubt as conscientious as I, instead of giving me her sympathetic guidance, fell to denouncing my teacher, of whom I was very fond, and accusing him of teaching me error and leading me astray.

"I said to myself, 'I will treat my children differently. I will give them all possible liberty and explain to them the whys and wherefores. They shall investigate and form their own personal opinions. They shall have the best literature and keep the best company in order to decide all things intelligently.'

"My second little boy came to me when his brother was four years old, and I determined then to find an educated, refined young woman to preside over the nursery.

"I said to my husband, 'She shall see that their bodies are well cared for. She shall use with them the best language, and select for them the best reading. She shall walk and talk with them, and turn their thoughts in the right direction. And when I can be with them we are to talk over together what interests them.'"

"All very well," the friend interrupted her here. "Your scheme was a beautiful one, but it strikes me as a little chimerical. Such a woman would have to be made to order. I am positive no such person exists."

"I was just as positive that I should find her," said the mother with a smile. "My husband had as little faith as you, however. He said to me, 'Supposing you find her, what will you do with her? Do you intend to have her always at your elbow, at your table and in your drawing-room? How are you going to adjust the social relations of your educated, refined young woman?'

"I assured him that I intended to treat her exactly as I should expect to be treated were she the mother and I the children's companion; that the young woman I intended to find wonld not take such a position for social advantage or aggrandisement; that I should designate her duties and position so definitely that there could be no misunderstanding; that she would have various good pleasures in connection with her duties,—taking the children to places of amusement and instruction, and sometimes going upon little journeys with them; that she was to join us at the lunch table with the children; that she was to take her breakfast and dinner with them in a pleasant room I should allot to them; she was to join us in the drawing-room and at dinner when she was invited; that she and I were to be trusted friends—she in her place and I in mine; that I intended to find a woman endowed with that very rare gift—common sense."

"And was it all as you planned it should be?" asked her friend.

"It was," answered the mother. "Of course I did not expect the woman who was to be my friend and my children's constant companion to attend to the ordinary duties of a nurse; that is, I required no more of her than I myself would do had I the power and the capacity to fill a dozen positions at one time. The washing and ironing and cleaning and scrubbing incident to the nursery were done by less skillful hands than I required to form and mould the minds and morals of my children."

"And the minds and manners of your little boys?" inquired her friend.

"Some years have passed since I began my experiments. My boys are now respectively five and nine years of age. They are not 'prigs.' They are always ready for what fun and frolic there is, and I have in many forms daily evidence of the wisdom of my plan. The effect of their reading, and of intelligent discussion of what they read, is very satisfactory to their parents, if I may say this. The people in the Iliad are all real cronies for my boys, and they allude to them in ordinary conversation in a way that is sometimes bewildering. In visiting a museum not long since I called Jack's attention to a cast of the Apollo Belvedere, which I greatly admired. My enthusiasm did not prove contagious, and, all out of patience with my boy, I said, 'It is beautiful, Jack, and you must admire it.' 'Beautiful or not,' came the quick reply, 'he helped the wrong side, and I don't want anything to do with him.'

"My little five-year-old boy came to me one day just before Christmas. 'Mamma,' he said, 'I have decided what I shall send auntie for Christmas.' Upon my asking what the gift was to be, he said: 'Well, mamma, would you like me to tell you a very interesting story? It is about the Star in the East, and I have been making it, and I am going to send it to auntie. You know the Star in the East was a great while ago and a great way off, but I like the story Miss Barnes told me about it so much that I have been making one on perforated paper with colored silks, and I know you will like to hear the story.' Then followed the story.

"Of course my plan has not been carried out without some vexations, some annoyances. But I am entirely satisfied with the mental training of my boys, and what counts even more than the mental training, is the character making, which has been equally satisfactory. They are manly, truth-loving little fellows, and their mother and their companion, whom they love and respect, are their confidential friends.

"They have never had the attendance of a nurse in their lives, yet they have lacked nothing in the way of needful care and attention. They have learned to help themselves. They have learned to be mindful of the wants of those about them. They have learned to be respectful to their elders and courteous to their companions. Their summers are spent in the woods and fields, and I am sure their knowledge of natural history will be a pleasure to them all through life."

"The trouble with mothers," said her friend, thoughtfully, "would be to find a Miss Barnes."

FARMERS AND THE W. C. T. U.

BY MARGARET KENNEDY.

There are certain hymns, which though sung by a paid choir accompanied by a costly pipe-organ, strangely and irresistibly sadden. They recall to some of us little country churches and the sad, spiritless faces within. As I listen I am a little child again. All around me are the country matrons in calicoes and cheap lawns, the larger girls with cheap gaudy hats and dresses to correspond; the wailing tune seems to express all the pathos and hardship of their lives. My childish heart is relieved when the song is at last ended.

If you go to the homes of these country people and live among them for a few months you will not need to be told that their pitifully small incomes are in inverse ratio to the hard work done. One who had just read Hamlin Garland's "Six Mississippi Valley Stories" said, "It is too sad!" But those who have tried farm life there know that his pictures are only too true. On the average farm every member of the family who is large enough, works "from early morn to dewy eve." Yet from actual experience and observation I do not see how at the end of the year—even when there is no proverbial mortgage—there is a dollar left even though the plainest, coarsest clothes have been bought and a hundred things done without that really seemed necessary.

The farmer takes his produce to market and humbly asks, "What will you give?" But he says in purchasing, "What will you take?" It is always the town resident who fixes the price for both buying and selling. If the farmer attempts to ship he may not only fail to receive any returns but be called on for money to pay freight and commission. A fruit-grower of California went to Chicago to see for himself why his fine fruit profited him nothing. He says, "There are from five thousand to ten thousand retail dealers in Chicago. In an upper room the fruit was sold at auction, only forty-eight persons being present, and yet outside were the retailers in throngs. The members of the Fruit Buyers' Union, who form a ring at our expense, alone were in the room. Peaches that sold at sixty-five cents were on the stands next day at a cost to the retailer of $1.75. The same is true of cherries and other fruits. All the retailers I talked to said they were anxious to have a bid, but under the buyers' ring they could not."

In short, the farmer is at the mercy of every trade and profession. If crops are good the prices are always "down"; if crops are poor and prices "high" he has little to spare for sale.

What can the W. C. T. U. (ever ready to champion the cause of the oppressed) do for this vast number of people, and what in turn can they do for our beloved organization? They have the numbers, we have the knowledge; cannot the two be combined? There are comparatively few farmers who are not temperate. They are more willing to admit the equality of the sexes than most classes, for do they not realize from everyday life the value of women on a farm? They only need to really understand our work to become interested; especially if we will take an interest in their affairs and show a disposition to help them. If our workers could more often reach country audiences great good would be done; they would find bright young people eager to hear of the outside world, and happy to learn that they themselves are really of some value and may be useful to that world of which they know so little. They have never been surfeited with mental good things, and have the vigor and clear brains which come from outdoor life and a simple, healthful way of living. Could we show these people how to help themselves in the legislature and market that they may have the just reward of their honest toil; help them to form Chautauqua Circles, Mothers' Associations, Loyal Temperance Legions, and "neighborhood libraries"; give them the names, addresses and characteristics of the best magazines and journals; help them to find ways and means to pay for some of these periodicals; what might not be the result? Many W. C. T. U's could be formed, for country people will take far more trouble to obtain recreation and information than those who are accustomed to have such things at their doors.

Why might not each member of a local union in a town or city obtain the name and address of some bright woman in a rural neighborhood and send her The Union Signal as soon as read in her own home and if possible make her a call to "talk it up"?

As John G. Woolley makes his campaigns through the states how many of our W. C. T. U. women have invited their country friends and relatives to come in to town and hear him?

Perhaps some of us could take two or three bright farmer girls under our "wing." We could teach them small but important items about dress and manner, lend them good books, help them form a taste for the best literature, invite them in to a concert or lecture occasionally (their appreciation will often put to shame our city daughters), thus inspiring them to make the very most of their lives. We may rest assured that even though we can help but one she in turn will aid and cultivate the other girls around her.

From the State Grange of each state can be obtained the addresses of the secretaries of the local Granges, who would cheerfully aid in distributing any temperance literature sent them. The same might be said of the Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association and all kindred organizations among the farmers.

No other class of people can be so easily induced to become not only out and out Prohibitionists but also suffragists. Nearly all of them are natives of this country, their tastes, environments and healthful life all tend in the same direction. Let us win and educate their vote, and we shall have an added power in our own efforts for humanity.

PUSSY-WILLOWS.

Dainty children of the spring,
Pussy-willows, thee I sing.
Darkly brown thy branches are,
Swinging gently to and fro
Soft and velvety thy fur;
Where the murmuring waters flow.

Children hail thee with delight,
Hold thee 'gainst their faces bright,
First-born blossoms of the year,
For thy early coming dear.

Soon will come the wood-flowers true,
Snowdrops, crocus, violet blue,
Dainty ferns of palest green,
But before them, thou art seen.

Pussy-willows, soft and fair,
Blooming in the crisp March air,
How I love thee bending low
Where the murmuring waters flow.

THE CROOKED STAIRS.

[A true and recent incident, contributed to an English paper by the little boy's father.]

Playing at shop together—
  Buying and selling their wares—
Two little boys were sitting,
  Perched on the crooked stairs,
Just where the winding stairway
  Twisted around in a curve:
A dangerous situation,
  If one or the other should swerve.

The elder was weighing the raisins,
  When his playfellow just below—
Angry at not being shopman—
  Suddenly gave him a blow;
Down fell the scales in a moment,
  And scattered were all the wares;
A dangerous situation,
  On the narrow and crooked stairs.

Would he strike in retaliation?
  One blow in return, and then
His playfellow, tumbling backwards
  Might never rise up again.
But he only stood for a moment
  And opened his large brown eyes,
As he looked at his little playmate,
  With a new and a strange surprise.

He was only a little fellow,
  But old enough, just to know,
That a soldier of Christ should never Return a blow with a blow;
So up the stairs he scampered,
  And his mother stroked his head;
"Did you hit him again?" she asked him.
  "I'm a soldier of peace," he said.

A NEW ENGLAND GIRLHOOD.

BY M. L. S.

[This good essay was written by a school-girl. Will not other boy and girl readers send us short and interesting articles for Our Children?]

"A New England Girlhood" is an autobiography of Lucy Larcom.

At the death of Lucy's father the family was compelled to leave their old home and move to Lowell.

The mother thought this the best plan, for she could make a living by keeping a boarding house for the mill girls.

Lucy attended school for awhile, but in 1835 began her work in the mill, glad to help earn money. It was such a little; only a dollar a week, besides her board, but it helped her mother. Writing verses was her pastime. She made small account of it, thinking, "they were in everybody's mind and anybody could write them who chose."

She began while in the mill to fit herself for a teacher, or to write as the way opened. Her sister Emilie worked also in the mill and was a great help to Lucy as she was a close student, always having a book about her. She suggested the little fortnightly paper, The Driving Bell, to be made up of contributions, all without name, by the mill girls. It was soon understood who wrote the verses.

Two magazines at the mill were the outgrowth of literary societies within the churches. The Operatives' Magazine was finally merged in The Lowell Offering. Emilie and Lucy both wrote for these magazines.

In later years Lucy was assistant editor of Our Young Folks, and for a year or more its editor-in-chief.

The years between 1835 and 1845, spent at Lowell, had been improved by reading and study in every moment of leisure.

Her sister Emilie had married, and, her husband's health failing, they removed West, asking Lucy to accompany them. Lucy was very much pleased, and accepted the invitation.

Here, at Monticello, Ill., Seminary, she was a student three years, defraying her expenses at first by helping in the domestic work, and afterwards as a teacher in the preparatory department.

What she wrote was published with grateful thanks. Her first pay for her writings was five dollars for a poem in Sartain's Magazine.

Lucy Larcom closes her autobiography by saying, "I have always regarded it as a better ambition to be a true woman than to become a successful writer."

A JAPANESE GIRL'S LETTER TO MISS WILLARD.

My Dear Precious Lady:—At the "children's hour" yesterday I was sitting in my room thinking if you shall come to this land this year. What a joy it was when the two letters were handed to me, the one from you and the other from Lady Henry Somerset. Whenever I receive your letters I feel something unspeakable, and kneel down and thank to Him. You do not know what a goodness you are doing by your kind letters to me. He, the fountain of love and purity, is surely abiding in your heart, and makes you flow such a tender stream that makes the human soil fertile. How lovely it will be to meet you face to face.

I am glad my photograph and a little package found you. I pray you shall come to this country as soon as you can. I am eagerly waiting for you, making some little tokens of my love.

Lady Henry Somerset warmly welcomed me to England this summer if I could come. Oh, how I wish to go! How nice it will be to travel abroad and enlarge our knowledge.

Many of our brothers are lodging in the cold region of China, and many were slain on the field of honor. I am proud of their bravery, and always pray that this war may end in a good will of Providence. We are all very grateful to the kind feeling of your country toward Japan. I believe Japan has a great mission for the world in the coming century, and the women must be first purified to share the work. I will try my best to do something good for the humanity. Please remember me in your prayers that I may grow as a noble woman and fight manfully on the field of right and wrong.

"Fair are the meadows,
  Fairer the woodlands,
  Robed in flowers of blooming spring;
  Jesus is fairest,
  Jesus is purer,
  He makes our sorrowing spirits sing."

God bless you in all of your welfares.

Ever yours, I remain in love and respect,
Your little girl,
Tokiwa Kimoto.

Dear Boys and Girls:—If you knew that on a certain night a thief would break into your homes, what would you do? You would be ready to capture and prevent him, would you not? And you would think a person very careless who, knowing thieves were about, went to sleep and left his door unlocked.

In your Sabbath-school and your L. T. L. meetings you are told about certain thieves who will try to rob you of your highest treasures, your purity of character, your peace of mind and soul. These are as real valuables as silver and gold and the thieves are as real as the burglars who frequently are caught and put in jail. Yet knowing this, there are careless boys and girls who leave their doors open and unguarded, in spite of the fact that they are warned just how and when the thieves will come. For these bold thieves do not wait for darkness only, but are active by day trying to enter the open doors—your eyes, your ears, your lips, to your heart and steal its purity.

God's book says, "Take ye heed, watch and pray," and He has supplied each one with a faithful watch-dog, a conscience, to give warning when the thieves try to enter through the doors. When your eye catches an impure sight, conscience bids you avoid it. Ears are soon taught to refuse to listen to wrong words and anything that would linger in the memory and blot out good thoughts.

Most of all the door of the lips is the one where conscience may be caught napping. Unkind and hasty words are very apt to be uttered and the evil spirit finds the tongue a great help in breaking the bonds of goodness.

Your pledge is your safeguard at this door of the lips. Intoxicating drink is a most terrible thief. It steals away all that is best in a person, even overpowering conscience itself and making its victim lose his most priceless jewel, his soul. This enemy comes concealed as a friend, in a glass of innocent-looking cider or of bright, red wine. The watchman must be ready to protect the lip door from this worst enemy.

Then, too, you must remember with all your care that Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain.

Christ is your Captain, as valiant soldiers, without loitering or yawning but with steady eyes, nerves and muscles

Take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand.

THE MORAL ASPECT OF EXPEDIENCY.

It is quite a common thing for persons who are worsted in a debate over the rightness of a question, to retire behind the bulwarks of what they are pleased to call "expediency" and argue that however good and right the thing may be in itself, yet it is not at present, at least, expedient. Throughout the ages expediency has seemed to be the touchstone of all things political.

One great argument against a Democratic form of government used to be that questions of state could never safely be made public, for, especially in dealing with foreign affairs, deception was a recognized necessity. The Historian Green who regards Elizabeth as one of the wisest sovereigns that England ever had, nevertheless says that, "Had Elizabeth written the history of her reign, she would have prided herself, not on the triumph of England or the ruin of Spain, but on the skill with which she hoodwinked and outwitted every statesman in Europe during fifty years." And in this respect Elizabeth was simply a representative of her times, a product of her environment.

With the growth of democracy, the management of state affairs by representatives of the people, secrecy, even in foreign affairs, has steadily diminished and necessarily deception has diminished in precisely parallel ratio. "Statecraft," technically so called, has become a thing of the past, so far as our own land and the great "royal republic" of England are concerned. Whatever ills either is suffering from at present, we assert with no fear of contradiction that they are none of them due to the loss of this accomplishment.

Our experience thus far goes strongly to prove that in the dealings of nation with nation the honest, straightforward policy is also the best policy. In other words, in this case the right seems also to be the expedient. Along other political lines, however, we have not come to a recognition of the fact that the terms right and expedient are synonymous, provided right is put first. Most so-called statesmanship is, as it always has been, a mere question of expediency, "What will be for the nation's advantage?"

Political parties are altogether too profound and astute to conform their policy to the simple law of right; that may do for "women and children" but great statesmen, who take a broad view of all human affairs, cannot decide questions by any such narrow standard. Most of the great issues which are pressing for solution could be settled at once, if we applied to them the simple test of right, but when the question of expediency is brought up we are introduced into a labyrinth of doubt through whose mazes it will require an astute philosopher indeed to thread his way.

Nor are politicians the only persons who take expediency as the difficult guide to their conduct. Too often reformers, Christian individuals and Christian churches follow this will-o'-the-wisp to be landed in the bog. There is an old, old Book which has some very definite and explicit statements on this subject. It says without any modification that "righteousness exalteth a nation," and all history confirms its truth. It declares that "the wages of sin is death," and again all human experience pronounces this a law as immutable as the law of gravitation. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you," says the same old Book which speaks with strange, unhesitating authority in striking contrast to the Scribes and Pharisees of modern politics.

But the world has persisted in seeking "all these things" first and—has succeeded neither in attaining "these things" nor the kingdom and the righteousness of God. The need, the great crying need, of the present generation is to realize that the only question with which human beings have to do is the question of right. In regard to any matter under the sun, be it personal, national or international, our sole business is to do what is right, to take care of the results is God's business, not ours; we cannot control them if we would. But we may be assured that if we attend to our part in the transaction He will not fail to attend to His. History proves on its every page that right and expediency in the end coincide. Their conflicts are only seeming, and he who sacrifices known right to apparent expediency finds sooner or later to his own undoing that the Ruler of the universe is just and that the laws of His universe bring sure reward to right doing, inexorable destruction to wrong.

It is true that it is not always easy to determine in any given case what is the right course and thoroughly good and conscientious people differ concerning it. Nevertheless, it is always easier to decide what is right than what is expedient, for once having found the right we have no need to calculate results; expediency, on the other hand, is not a mere question of the present. The action that seems expedient now carries into the eternal future forces which shall never cease to act. Until we can calculate their effects with infallible precision we can never know to a certainty that any line of action is expedient.

We temperance people are much given to condemning the political parties because they refuse to take up prohibition or any other great moral question on the ground that it is not expedient to do so. We have need to remember that what is a sin in politicians is not a virtue in reformers. The reformer who so conceals his views on one moral issue as to deceive men concerning his real opinions lest he prejudice the cause for which he is specially working, is no whit better in that respect than the political party that refuses to put a temperance plank into its platform lest it alienate the liquor vote. We do not mean by this that it is necessary at all times and at all places to flaunt our views without provocation in the faces of our opponents, but whenever any question of right comes up and we are called upon to declare our principles we are traitors and hypocrites if we evade the issue. "He eateth with publicans and sinners" was the repeated complaint of those high in authority and influence.

Some modern reformers would have argued that it was folly to run against popular prejudice in this way. While they might have done these people some kindnesses, they would have urged that not until the great movement which they had at heart was fully under way, not until the Scribes and Pharisees had been won would it do to take any such radical measures. Once won over, they would gradually be educated up to these advanced ideas. Not so reasoned the Master. It almost seems that He went out of His way to show His aversion to the bitter prejudices of His time. No more intense race hatred ever existed than that between the Jews and the Samaritans, yet He deliberately chose to make a Samaritan the one who showed kindness to the man who fell among thieves.

In the end straightforward honesty of purpose commands respect, and the respect which we win for our own character and life tells in favor of the causes which we are known to champion. There is nothing which does more to turn the tide of opinion in favor of any cause than to have that cause advocated by persons of noble character. It is therefore not only the right but the expedient thing for us to stand squarely and without equivocation for everything that we believe to be right and just. We shall not thereby permanently injure any cause, but will in the end further everything that we believe in by the weight of our own character.

FURTHER SUGGESTIONS FOR AN OCEAN VOYAGE.

Most people look upon seasickness as inevitable and hence regard all preparations and remedies useless. This is a great mistake, as fully one-third of a ship's passengers usually escape mal de mer, and often those most positive of intense distress, are entirely free from it. It is worse than foolish for any white-ribboner to deprive herself of the delights of the voyage and the pleasures of the Convention and sight-seeing in foreign countries through fear of the ocean. June is an ideal time of the year for the journey, and it is possible that not a soul on board may be really sick. Surely if any body of tourists deserve a kind reception from old Neptune it is a party of white-ribboners who, of all people, have sung the praises of "water, cold water"!

But "to be forewarned is to be forearmed," and lest our delegates may not share our confidence concerning their special providence, we will give a few simple suggestions for preventing and alleviating seasickness.

The first and most sensible, as well as simple, suggestion is to rest for several days before the journey. If you go aboard the ship utterly tired out you will almost inevitably be sick. Nothing is more conducive to disorder of the stomach than extreme fatigue and excitement. As a means to this rest we would advise our delegates and all passengers of the steamer Berlin to reach New York at least the Saturday before the sailing of the steamer on Wednesday and stay quietly in their rooms most of the time. Of course we would not deprive them of the charming reception which our New York friends are arranging at Prohibition Park, but we implore the reception committee to shorten the program and the catering committee to cut down the menu! This last appeal brings us to the other fruitful source of seasickness—overeating. Not more than one-half the usual quantity of food should be taken for two or three days previous to sailing. Abstemious people, as a rule, escape all nausea, whether on sea or land. The simplest possible diet during the last forty-eight hours on land and for the first twenty-four hours on water, with the fresh deck air, will make almost any traveler proof against the dread malady. A little self-denial in this direction brings reward a hundred fold.

But suppose one is distressed, what then? Don't get alarmed and resign yourself to a voyage of misery. "Brace up" (excuse the parlance) and use your will power; it will never serve you to better advantage. Have on hand a few of the simple remedies recommended here, and take them faithfully out on deck!

Sometimes the stomach is slightly disturbed by the gentle rocking of the steamer as it lies anchored to the pier, restless to be off on its long voyage. The juice of an orange, lemon or lime will often settle such disturbance at once, so do not neglect to put a dozen of these good friends in your bag. After taking the lemon, do not snuggle down in your dark cabin, as you will be strongly tempted to do, but stretch out your steamer chair on deck and lie in it with your eyes closed and your face turned up to the full blast of the pure breeze. In a few moments you will have forgotten the little episode.

If you feel a "symptom" as you repose in your berth, lie flat on your back and inhale deep, regular breaths, keeping your thoughts as remote from yourself as possible.

One of the secrets of avoiding nausea while promenading the deck, is to conform your own motions with those of the vessel rather than to resist them. Of course this is not easy to do, especially in the case of sudden lurches, but there are regular rocking motions to a steamer which can be learned and followed in the position of the body. Every sailor does this unconsciously, consequently he is never seasick.

We believe more heartily in getting the system in good condition before leaving home than in employing drastic measure on shipboard. Perhaps the most remedial agent that can be used is bromide of sodium taken thrice daily in a teaspoonful dose, for one or two weeks previous to sailing. But as every one is not successfully "bromided," we would recommend a physician's advice concerning this.

We have tested with excellent results an English remedy that may be purchased in any good American drug store—

Enos Fruit Salts. This is a pleasant effervescent drink, with laxative effect, and may be taken both during and before the voyage.

Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset highly recommend Georgia Water and Brush's Prophylactic Elixir.

The limits of the article forbid the mention of many minor practical points on which our readers have asked for information. These will be given next week. In the meantime, let any one with a question on this topic present it, and we will answer to the best of our knowledge.

THE SALOON-KEEPER AS ALDERMAN.

The growing conviction among the better class of citizens that saloon-keepers should not aspire to aldermanic honors and the outspoken manner in which the press is giving editorial expression to this sentiment is naturally commented upon somewhat severely by the liquor papers. And, indeed, we think that those persons who advocate the exclusion of saloon-keepers and bartenders from our municipal councils certainly do lay themselves open to the charge of injustice. The ground of our criticism, however, is different from that taken by the champions of the saloon. The latter assert that "the keeper of a saloon will make just as good, if not a better alderman than a fanatic or temperance crank"; we maintain that there should be no saloon material in the body politic out of which to make aldermen.

The civic reformer—of a certain class—would, in the interests of good government, make it impossible for a saloon-keeper to become an alderman; so would we—by making it impossible for any man to become a saloon-keeper. We believe this to be the first step toward permanent civic reform.

What a farcial aspect is given to government when our governors, the people, not merely tolerate but systematically build up a business so disreputable as to render the men engaged in it unfit to perform the duties of citizenship! For it stands to reason that if a man is too vicious and corrupt to sit in the city council he is also too vicious and corrupt to be entrusted with the ballot.

"The business of saloon-keeping is recognized by the city, state and national governments as being a legitimate occupation; heavy taxes are imposed, taxes out of all proportion as compared with other lines of business, yet these municipalities afford no protection of the personal liberties and rights of the saloon men . . . And now comes the last straw in the shape of an endeavor to prevent the saloon man from holding office."

Thus does a leading liquor paper voice the protest of the cause it represents—a protest, it cannot be denied, both just and reasonable. We are glad that the liquor interest is calling attention to the inconsistency of a government which appropriates a goodly share of the profits of the drink traffic, giving it in return legal recognition and protection and then proceeds to "constantly pick at the business and hound and roast the saloon-keeper and declare him unfit to hold a city office."

Liquor selling is not a crime under the law; why therefore should the liquor seller's civic privileges be abridged? Is it not clearly unconstitutional to do so? Then again, why discriminate? Why close the doors of our council chambers against the man who sells liquor by the drink over the bar and throw wide open the doors of our legislative halls, municipal, state and federal, to the millionaire brewer and wine merchant? Is it replied that it is because the saloon is the demoralizer, the destroyer of character? Then the remedy is plain—the saloon must go.

It is hardly necessary to say that no one would rejoice more than white-ribboners to see saloon-keepers debarred from aldermanic honors, but we would accomplish it by shutting up the saloons and taking both saloon-keeper and government out of the liquor business. To place the ban of law upon the traffic itself is the only way by which saloon men can be justly deprived of the citizen's right to hold office.

"Of the two classes in the city council, the saloon man and the temperance crank," says a liquor organ, "the former is the best, because he votes untrammeled; he is not swayed by bigotry and prejudice; he minds his own business." That is just it—he minds his own business, and that is the drink business. He cares nothing for party as party; he is swayed not by partisan prejudice, but by the demands of the liquor interest. Good government or bad, it is all the same to him if only his business is protected. He minds his own business by voting every time with the party whose policy tends most powerfully to the perpetuation of that business. For the name of that party he cares nothing. If it happens to be a "reform" party or a party of "moral ideas," so much the better, for the very respectability of its "regulation" methods gives to the rum power a firmer hold on the people and increases enormously its own permanence and stability. When civic reformers quit helping to "mind" the liquor business and go to minding their own as faithfully as do the saloon-keepers, we may hope for city councils in which the saloon man is a minus factor.

TREATMENT OF CONFIRMED INEBRIATES.

There is a movement in England under the leadership of Dr. Norman Kerr, whose name stands so high in the regard of temperance people throughout the world, the object of which is to enact such laws as will make it practicable to place confirmed inebriates in industrial homes where they will be free from the temptation to drink, and at the same time will be self-supporting, rather than a curse to their relatives and homes. Parliament has appointed a commission to consider the subject, and its report is altogether favorable; so that although the subject has been agitated as long in our own country as in England, we are likely to have an example set before us that will put to shame our procrastination in dealing under state laws with almost unmatched evil, by which tens of thousands who are practically lunatic victims of alcohol are continued as inmates of households in which women and little children are at their mercy.

Much attention is being given in England to the practicability of treating inebriates by means of hypnotism. Surprising cures are reported, and a home on a small scale will soon be founded by enlightened co-workers of ours, who wish to watch for themselves the development of this method of treatment. Thus far, no intelligent conclusion seems to have been reached, but we are among those who desire to hold their minds open to light from every quarter on this most baffling of all problems.

The Indian commissioners have reported that a most deplorable state of affairs exists in Indian Territory. Instead of the wise self-government, excellent schools and courts and ideal civilization supposed to exist, the courts are pronounced to be utterly corrupt, and crime goes unpunished; the public school system is inefficient, and the public lands are largely usurped by a few enterprising half-breeds, regardless of others. The keynote of the whole situation is struck in the recommendation that legislation be enacted to prevent the sale of intoxicants to the Indians. How can we expect elevation in character and citizenship among a people whose lives are cursed and debased by the irresistible power of an evil deliberately urged upon them? Yes, let us have the legislation against the sale of liquor, and let it not only protect "the poor Indian" in the western territory but every family and every home from ocean to ocean.

We have just received a most fervent appeal from drouth-stricken Nebraska, voiced by Miss F. Bernice Kerney, superintendent of Loyal Temperance Legion work in that state. She writes us that over three hundred fifty thousand boys and girls "are hungering and thirsting for want of the temperance and purity food of the L. T. L." Warm hearts and open hands have responded to calls from Nebraska all through the long, hard winter, but we are sure the storehouses of God in the homes of His people are not yet emptied and that money and L. T. L. supplies will find their way Nebraska-ward. The great dearth is for literature. Through the winter, Sunday-schools and L. T. L's were closed because of lack of fuel to warm the rooms, but now that the warm weather has returned, if there were printed helps the work could go on. Worn copies of "Questions Answered," "Marching Songs," temperance leaflets, and periodicals will be most acceptable, besides any money that can be contributed. Send all gifts to Miss Kerney, Plattsmouth, Neb., as she knows better than any one how to distribute the supplies to the best advantage.

The Hon. Chauncey Depew is a man whose purity of life and character have secured for him the respect and confidence of good people everywhere, and for this reason we here give his clear-cut utterances on the pending question of woman's franchise. He has signed the petition in our favor and when asked whether he had always been a friend of the movement, he replied as follows:

"Well, I think I must be content to be in the light of a convert. I have seen the error of my ways. That is, I think that times have changed. The position of woman has changed. Woman herself is different in some respects to what she used to be. She owns a large amount of property upon which she is taxed. She has become a great industrial factor. She has a right to say how she shall be taxed, and under what laws she shall conduct her business. I think the beginning of my change of opinion was in Wyoming a few years ago. I was traveling through the state and met a great many of the prominent men. I asked them about the workings of woman suffrage, and heard nothing but praise for it. I found out that my old ideas about all the horrible things which would happen to the home were unfounded. I think that woman has a right to the suffrage, and that giving it to her will do good rather than harm; so when the question was pending in New York state I signed the petition in favor."

It has been well said that when a man is unpopular with every dog in the neighborhood his heart is not right toward God. When a man's poor spavined horse does not know that he has "joined meeting" as the Friends say, it makes very little difference how consecutive he is in holding family prayers. It is in considering the lilies, feeding the sparrows, rubbing a lame horse, protecting an abused cur, defending a lonely needlewoman, looking after the comfort of domestics and errand boys, that some very acceptable religion can help to "show forth the Lord Jesus until He come again."

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, the author of the Battle Hymn of the Republic, should be a happy woman, "sitting in sunshine calm and sweet." She is herself the most celebrated of her remarkable family and her name is associated with everything noble and good. Her husband was a great philanthropist; her nephew, Marion Crawford, is a famous novelist; her daughters, all women of remarkable gifts and in the same lines to which their mother has been devoted; and her only son, Henry M. Howe, of Boston, is rapidly becoming a celebrated scientist. He has just received the Bessemer gold medal, the highest prize to which metallurgists may aspire. It was awarded him by the British Iron and Steel Institute. Mr. Howe received the medal for his writings and investigations concerning systematic methods of steel making. Only the best known scientists in this department of study have ever been thus honored.

Just now incidents concerning China's great statesman are of special value. Li Hung Chang's wife, Lady Li, as she is called, was taken seriously ill several years ago; the leading physicians of the Empire gave her up to die. A woman medical missionary was called and was happily successful in restoring to health the wife of the famous viceroy. In gratitude Li Hung Chang fitted up a dispensary at Tien-Tsin and presented it to the mission; a little later Lady Li established a second dispensary for women and placed in charge the lady physician who attended her.

It is pleasant to be appreciated, especially from a country which has given us much criticism, both merited and unmerited. In an English exchange I find a letter from our friend, Dr. Henry S. Lunn, from which I extract this paragraph:

"I return from America marveling how it is possible for Englishmen to have any other feeling than that of profound admiration for, and pride in the achievements of, their kinsmen across the seas, and the boundless possibilities which lie before that young but already mighty nation. That God may guide and direct the leaders of this English speaking republic in the solution of the many problems that must arise in the development of their national life ought to be the earnest and unaffected prayer of every true, patriotic Englishman."

In a recent enumeration of famous people over eighty years of age, only two names of women appeared—Harriet Beecher Stowe and Lady Burdette-Coutts. If the rules laid down by Susan B. Anthony had been followed by all public women, we would have more octogenarians on our side. In her seventy-fifth year, Miss Anthony is as "hale and hearty" as most women at fifty. She recently said to a reporter: "I attribute the secret of my good health to the fact that I never abused it. I have always made it a rule of my life to be regular in my habits. I have a time for everything. I live on simple muscle and brain giving food. I have not broken down in my campaign life simply because I never would indulge in dissipation or late suppers after a lecture. I do not eat a hearty dinner before speaking in public; on the contrary, I eat very lightly. After my lectures I do not accept invitations to swell suppers. I go straight to my rooms, take a bath and drink a cup of hot milk and eat a cracker. I think if I lived down in New Orleans I would merely eat an orange and a cracker before retiring after a heavy evening's work. Another thing, human nature demands a certain amount of sleep. Women need at least nine hours' sleep out of the twenty-four. If you go to bed and wake up in the morning without feeling refreshed, then the human machinery is out of gear, and the equilibrium must be restored or nervous prostration and a general breakdown is the result."

On Duty.

NOTES FROM THE PROVINCES.

MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, of Missouri, has been lecturing through the Province of Quebec with much acceptance. While in Montreal a reception was tendered to her by Mrs. Gault, who threw open her fine house with a graciousness that made one think how much good can be done in a social way by those who have the will to depart from the beaten track of conventional hospitality, and give mental food to those whom they so kindly welcome under their roof.

Mrs. Hoffman's informal talk was like a necklace of bright, many-colored beads, held together by the string of questions showered on her by the interested ladies present. In answer to the question, "Should one leave an old family grocer, satisfactory in every other respect, because he sells liquor?" Mrs. Hoffman was very decided. "Without doubt; the women of Montreal, or any city, could, without clash of trumpets, dissociate the liquor and grocery business by simply giving up dealing with any but temperance grocers." Ministers and Sunday-school teachers who use wine and who smoke were denounced in a good-humored but decided way. Mrs. Hoffman urged young ladies especially to take a stand, and show their gentlemen friends that they were not afraid to declare in favor of all that is true and pure and clean. "Do not fear that you will be less popular because you are more respected."

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

The W. C. T. U. of Westminster, B. C., have taken up a branch of work which many a larger union would shrink from on account of its magnitude. The president, Mrs. James Cunningham, with her executive, resolved upon meeting the pressing need for a hospital for women patients only, especially for those who live in parts not provided with a resident medical man. After many alternations of hope and fear a suitable building was rented and necessary alterations made. A large room on the ground floor is reserved for maternity cases and a similar one above for surgical needs. No infectious diseases will be admitted at present. Grounds around the house are under orchard cultivation. Miss Jones, a graduate of Toronto hospital is head nurse, and she will be assisted by Miss Pearson, of Westminster, to whose untiring energy much of the work of establishing the hospital fell.

The medical men of the city have placed their services at the disposal of the board of directors, but any patient will be at liberty to have the attendance of her own doctor should she so prefer. It is expected that the hospital will be self-supporting in time. This is a grand and peculiarly suitable work for W. C. T. U. women to take up and the good wishes of their white ribbon sisters all over the Dominion will be with the Westminster workers during the hospital's early career, for at first it cannot be expected to pay its way.

ONTARIO.

The unions in Eastern Ontario are still feeling the impetus given to the work by the Cornwall convention.

Ottawa W's and Y's have opened rooms where they give the newsboys hot milk and buns at night after their papers are sold, allow them picture books and games, and teach them to read and write. The boys are reported as very appreciative of the attention bestowed upon them.

Cornwall union has inaugurated a series of parlor meetings.

New unions have been organized in Norfolk, Middlesex and Lambton counties and Picton has started a Band of Hope.

Activity all along the line is indicated by circulars issued by the Provincial president and press superintendent. The former urges greater consecration in the work and the latter calls upon her local reporters to drive in nails with the pen which will hold to all eternity. That Ontario is wide awake to the hope of the future is shown by the increased attention paid to scientific temperance teaching, and the determination to enforce existing laws on that point. In order to secure good men for the making of the laws, the Prohibitionists of Hamilton have nominated W. W. Buchanan, editor of The Royal Templar as their candidate for the approaching Dominion election, and guaranteed three thousand dollars to pay the legitimate expenses of the campaign.

The annual convention of Methodist Young People's Association of Ontario and Quebec at its recent session in Toronto passed a strong resolution condemnatory of the tobacco habit and another recommending the voters who are members of their societies to vote only for pledged Prohibitionists for Parliamentary honors. This should have some significance, as the Methodists are said to represent one-third of the population. They also sent a deputation to the Provincial government urging a reduction in the number of liquor licenses, fewer hours for its sale and a better administration of the license laws.

The official Canadian W. C. T. U. organ, The Woman's Journal, has donned a new dress, which decidedly improves its appearance. Little by little it is drawing nearer to the fulfillment of the oft-repeated wish of its editor, Miss Mary Scott, of Ottawa, that it should be changed from a monthly to a fortnightly issue.

THE EASTERN MARITIME PROVINCES.

Mrs. Edith J. Archibald, president of the Maritime Provinces, issues a monthly letter to her constituency, the one for March being so good that I would like to quote largely from it.

Perhaps it is not generally known what a complicated piece of machinery the president of the Maritime Provinces has to keep in good running order. Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, all have distinct sets of legislatures with distinct sets of laws relating to women. All the strength of the W. C. T. U. has been thrown of late into a great suffrage campaign, and though both in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick the bill has been thrown out by small majorities, never was there a more gallant fight, more earnest, persistent and systematic work, nor a wider and more influential agitation and education on this important subject. Mrs. Archibald says, "We are making public sentiment for woman suffrage."

Prince Edward Island is still in the thick of the fight.

St. John union has lately had great accessions to its membership resulting from a wonderful revival wave. Messrs. Crossley and Hunter held a special service for women under W. C. T. U. auspices, which awakened fresh interest.

The Halifax W. C. T. U., both north and south branches, are engaged in a systematic canvass for the temperance candidate for the mayoralty. Halifax is owned and run by a regular Tammany ring, and the good women of the city have joined hands to try and break it up.

No report has come from Manitoba this month owing to the illness of Mrs. McGillis, who in addition to her other work has kindly consented to take this department for the present.

During the week another member of the Central union has passed away, Mrs. S. M. Walker. The weight of eighty-two years obliged Mrs. Walker to resign all active work but her interest remained unabated to the end. Much sympathy is also felt for Mrs. Sanderson, the president of the Quebec Provincial W. C. T. U., whose husband, the Rev. J. G. Sanderson, of Danville, has been called away after a short illness.

Canada hopes to be well represented at the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in London on June 14. Once more regret wells up that our dear late Dominion president can not represent us as was once hoped. Mrs. Archibald will go as one of the two delegates allotted to the Maritime Provinces. From Quebec it is hoped that Mrs. Sanderson, the Provincial president, and Mrs. McIndoe, of Granby, will go. The other delegates have not been accurately returned as yet.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

THE AGE OF CONSENT.

If legislatures do no other good, it is well that the people are occasionally aroused to consider such moral or immoral laws as the "age of consent." As in other states, so here, public virtue has responded quickly to the "arrest of thought," and the members were made to realize that they were but representatives of a constituency. A letter fusillade from all parts of the state convinced them it would not be well to compromise on sixteen instead of eighteen years. The associated press sent meagre legislative reports to Southern California papers, and from them it was difficult to learn what was being done.

Our suffrage forces are preparing for a two years' campaign in favor of

A CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT GRANTING EQUAL SUFFRAGE.

To men only was the privilege given to decide the matter, therefore, education, agitation, and "influence" continue to be woman's weapons, instead of the ballot she had hoped for.

The anti-cigarette law, passed by the legislature, is sweeping, and will do much good if enforced. It has been signed by the governor.

Maj. and Mrs. E. T. Scott are at Redlands—at least when not in the field. Their work at South Riverside, Santa Monica, Colton, San Jacinto and Perrie was blessed in large audiences, much interest and increased membership. Their last act at Santa Monica was to participate in the exercises of laying the corner-stone of the which occurred February 18. The site for the church was donated conditionally that all members should be Prohibitionists. Rev. George H. de Kay is the pastor, and an earnest, aggressive worker. Besides many ministers, the Good Templars and W. C. T. U. were represented on the program. Mesdames Emma Cash, Anna B. Southwick, Josephine Marlatt and M. A. Kenney represented our W's, beside the local union, and Miss Parkinson the Los Angeles Y. Mrs. Cash's contribution was a poem inspired for the occasion.

Santa Barbara union accepted Carpenteria's invitation to spend February 15 with them. The hours were given to the presentation and discussion of papers upon our various departments, the Ransom Home and Southern California White Ribbon receiving enthusiastic sympathy and support. Mrs. A. M. Flournoy, the faithful president of Santa Barbara union, who was in Riverside, was sent a loving message. Such neighborly calls not only refute the time-worn statement that women meet to discuss neighborhood gossip, but are wonderful fertilizers for truth's rapid growth.

THE MONTCLAIR CHILDREN'S HOME

at Pasadena is a department of our work under the management of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Townsend. It is a depot for friendless children, where they are mothered until some "empty arms" are opened to receive them. The babies come and the babies go, but the love for the little waifs flows on forever. The Home is supported by free-will offerings, and a number of Sunday-schools have contributed. Mr. and Mrs. Townsend will gladly give further information to any who are especially interested. Address them at Pasadena, Cal.

A greater effort than usual was made to plant seed on

TEMPERANCE SUNDAY.

White-ribboners visited the different Sunday-schools, armed usually with pledges, the use of which they explained to the scholars. A blessed sign of the times is the increased interest superintendents and teachers are showing in the cause, and it is equally blessed that the members of the W. C. T. U. are usually prepared to respond to any calls for help from such officers.

The coming La Fiesta, with its banners of green, gold and red—representing the olive, orange and wine—is attracting much favorable attention from the public and not sufficient opposition from the Christians. Even the W. C. T. U. were asked to contribute financially, but failed to respond. The public school scholars are expected to march in the parade, and figuratively speaking, asked to dance for the amusement of the pleasure-loving and the profit of saloon-keepers, for they, more than any other class of business men, will gather in the dimes.

For a few days we have had the pleasant company of our National sister, Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, of Minnesota, superintendent of Sunday-school work on her visit to this coast. The Central union of Los Angeles gave her at the close of the county executive, and thus many of the county workers had the delight of hearing her. Some of our eastern friends would have been surprised could they have seen the floral decorations, especially the corner filled with calla lilies, but these were forgotten as we listened to Mrs. Irvine's plea for the little ones. At the close we felt that we had been "received" into the inner sanctuary of sympathy with the Master's love for the children. March 24 Mrs. Irvine addressed an audience of Sunday-school workers at Temperance Temple, and won friends for her department. We shall await her return next winter with pleasant anticipations.

Mrs. E. Stephens Matthews was expected to be present and address us also on the 24th, but indefinite arrangements prevented, and Dr. Rachel Reid, of Pasadena, was secured. She spoke upon the theme given Mrs. Matthews, "A Pure Life for Two," and though having been given no opportunity for preparation, and suffering with "the aftermath of a broken arm," proclaimed truths pointed and clear. For emergencies, faithful Dr. Rachel Reid is ever equal.

All over this southland the fallen sisters' cry has been heard and heeded by our comrades, and contributions have been given freely to where the friendless and the erring find refuge and loving, tender care. The girls find it a home in every particular and realize that they are indeed part of the family, of which Mr. and Mrs. Marcoux are the head. But, alas, the same obstacle exists here that has prevented reform work in all places—the impossibility of having the confirmed (or ought I to say, the experienced) sinner with the youthful transgressor, and at present there is no home for the former. Who will be the savior for them?

One valuable temperance plant of Northern California has taken root in Redlands soil, and the union hastened to secure that experienced worker, Mrs. C. R. McCartney, for its president. Already her hand is felt on the helm, and the progress of the union prospered. Our Northern sisters loan to us for the summer their valiant soldier, Mrs. M. E. Teats, state superintendent of purity, whose health we hope will be improved by the delightful climate of San Diego. She pleaded long and faithfully for the bill to raise the age of consent to eighteen years, and now deserves a rest. We of the South realize our indebtedness to her for the successful passage of the bill which means so much of protection to the girls of our state. The National, state and Los Angeles Central superintendents of

WORK FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS,

Mrs. Sarah A. McClees, Mrs. Hester T. Griffiths and Mrs. Knapp held a beautiful service at the Soldiers' Home, Santa Monica, recently. They were met at the depot by the governor and staff and escorted to the hall, the governor and Mrs. McClees heading the procession. As they were about to change their direction Mrs. McClees was told that she must turn a square corner, for "remember there are others following you." (How true of all leaders.) Every courtesy was shown our sisters and many of the old soldiers expressed a deep interest in the temperance cause. It was an "open door" well entered which will repeat its swing in the future for our workers at their request.

Programs for the county conventions are being prepared. Orange county leads off with a convention at Fullerton, April 4 and 5; Los Angeles county at Whittier, April 10, 11 and 12; Riverside county at South Riverside, April 11 and 12; San Luis Obispo county at San Luis Obispo, between April 15 and 20, and Santa Barbara county the last week of April at Lompoc.

Riverside has secured the honor of enterfaining the state convention in May.

NORTH DAKOTA.

"NOT WILLING THAT ANY SHOULD PERISH."

The legislature has adjourned, and our hearts are once more at rest. Our prohibitory law is safe, at least, for another two years. All honor to our noble brothers who so bravely defended our cause and gave to us a victory greater than any heretofore ever won in our state.

Our faithful and beloved leader, Miss Preston, remained at Bismarck during the entire session of the legislature. We had hoped and so planned for our state superintendent of franchise, Mrs. Barry, to be with her, but sickness rendered it impossible, much to our disappointment and regret, for the work fell very heavily upon our president. During the hours when she should have been resting she was busy with her pen, and many were the "white-winged messages" sent forth to her faithful followers. Petitions were circulated, sermons were preached, hours of prayer observed all over the state, and every influence possible was brought to bear upon our legislators, and they stood firm to the last against the devices of the resubmissionists, which were not a few.

The suffrage bill was lost by frequent postponements. It doubtless would have carried in the house had it come some two or three weeks earlier. The resubmissionists linked suffrage with resubmission from the first, and when the latter was lost they determined to kill suffrage. The Equal Suffrage Association of Grand Forks sent Mrs. Emma De Voe, of Harvey, Ill., in the interest of the bill. Mrs. De Voe is an earnest advocate of the cause, and a bright and pleasing woman. The courtesies of the floor were extended to Mrs. De Voe, who made a most earnest plea for the cause of woman.

She was followed by one Col. Plummer, a well known politician in the state, a man having more tongue than principle, whom "the boys" had engaged for the occasion, to speak against the measure. He advanced no argument, but his speech was made up of disgraceful and disgusting ridicule, and as our president remarked: "A speech not out of place in a bar-room." It was simply an insult to every true woman in the state. When the vote was taken the bill was lost by a vote of twenty-five to thirty. Seven were absent and not voting.

Many excellent bills which are a credit to our legislature and the state and a help to our cause were passed. Among them the following: A bill prohibiting the sale and manufacture of cigarettes in the state.

A gold cure bill giving to boards of county commissioners power to send habitual drunkards to a reputable gold cure at the expense of the county, provided the patient is willing to go and not able to incur the expense.

A bill suppressing obscene literature and pictures, and magazines and papers devoted principally to the publication of criminal news, or pictures or stories of deeds of bloodshed and crime.

A most important bill and one which we believe will greatly help hereafter in the enforcement of our prohibitory law, is one defining intoxicating liquors.

In January, Miss Louise Crummy, our state evangelist, began her work, having been deterred from entering the field earlier by the serious illness of her sister. She reorganized the union at St. Thomas earlier in the season. The leaders are earnest Christian women and we hope much from this new union hereafter. Miss Crummy has met with most flattering encouragement and success wherever she has been; the only drawback being the limited time which she can only give each place in order to fill her engagements, so great is the demand for her services. At Tower City in Cass county, she yielded to the urgent request to remain another week, and as a result there were sixteen conversions, all adults. She has the power of touching the hearts of the young people, such as few speakers have. She is a consecrated, earnest Christian and we believe she is truly "called of the Lord."

Rev. E. O. Taylor, the scientific temperance lecturer, began work in the state the 28th of February. He remains in the state until the first of June. Wherever he goes he commands large audiences and most excellent reports are being made of his work, and we hope great good may result therefrom. Arrangements are being made for a grand mass temperance convention to be held in Fargo the last of March. The call for this convention is signed by Governor Allin, a large number of the state officers, legislators, members of temperance societies and citizens of the state—over four hundred in number. The object of this convention is to spread information throughout the state concerning the best plans for the development and enforcement of the prohibitory law, and also to devise plans for carrying on the work throughout the state. This meeting is to be held at the close of a week's lectures by Hon. C. A. Rankin, known as the "molder orator" of Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mothers' meetings are growing in favor in many parts of the state. Wahpeton union has been holding them at the homes of non-members and report interesting and profitable results. Ellendale also reports profitable mothers' meetings. Rolla, during the winter, gave a reception to their honoraries and received three new members. They have a fine L. T. L. of fifty-four members. Buffalo, Wheatland, Page, Church's Ferry and Grand Forks each report flourishing L. T. L's.

Fairview, only a country union, under many trying difficulties, with perseverance, persistence and self-denials, born of true heroism, have accomplished much work during the winter that would put to shame many of our larger unions more favorably located and with a larger membership. The president of this union, Mrs. Porter, has been not only president, but secretary and treasurer, a greater part of the winter, owing to sickness and removal. They are now preparing for a gold medal contest. They were greatly encouraged and strengthened by a visit from their county president, Mrs. W. D. Brown, and state superintendent of suffrage, Mrs. Barry, not long since. Reynolds, Amenia, Grafton, Minnewauken and Fairmount report assistance to our Crittenton Home.

Pembina met with a loss in the removal of their president, Mrs. Ryan, but there was raised up for them another leader, Mrs. Kneeshaw, who has shown herself equal to the occasion.

Pembina Y's are active and doing good work. Grafton raised by birthday bag offering the nice sum of over thirty-two dollars. Maza, a young union, and located in the country, whose members live a long distance apart and who lead busy home lives, have held two public meetings and deserve much credit for their faithfulness and perseverance.

Lisbon Y's are awake to the demands of the hour, and are active in many good works. They held a public meeting not long since. They had for their subject Sabbath observance. The program consisted of fine music, papers and recitations and short talks by the Y's and honoraries. They also have held a reception, having a well-prepared literary program, the subject being narcotics. A paper was read by the superintendent of this department, after which was roll-call, each responding with some quotation upon the subject. Their superintendent of physical culture has organized a class among the Y's which meets twice a week in the gymnasium.

Elliot reports having used the twenty word parliament with very pleasing results. They meet at the homes of the members in the evening. The honoraries attend and take part in the discussions.

Mrs. Carrie M. Allen, our recording secretary, whose home is now in Grand Forks, has recently been made president of that union. They have a gospel mission in East Grand Forks, and other good work is reported.

La Moure county representatives left the question of their vote on resubmission to the people of their district and "voted right" because the W. C. T. U. with their usual activity showed them through petitions signed only by voters what the "people" wanted them to do.

Rancom county is about to lose their faithful president, Mrs. W. D. Brown, who is to remove to Minneapolis. Rancom county will not only lose a valued and faithful leader, but the state a consecrated and conscientious worker, but we feel sure that wherever she goes she will ever be ready to obey the call of duty.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

PURITY IN ART AND LITERATURE.

Twelve years ago this department of reform was organized by the National W. C. T. U., through the influence of our former state president, Mrs. N. H. Knox, and to the watchful eyes and loving heart of Mrs. D. S. Fellows, of Center Sandwich, the mothers of New Hampshire owe many thanks for earnest and successful appeals to the legislature for stringent laws against the publishing and distribution in the state of trashy newspapers, immoral pictures and novels, and the thousand and one ways in which our children are instructed in evil. Mrs. Fellows is still at the head of this department, calling upon the unions and the press for aid, and doing everything in her power to meet this subtle and far-reaching evil; it seems almost impossible to control it entirely, but a brave fight has been made and much good accomplished.

STATE NEWS.

We gladly report from the Wolfboro union (S. E. Bickford, reporter), money raised and sent Mrs. Loyne for a memorial library for a lumber camp; memorial service for Mrs. Lathrap, and a spirited mass-meeting addressed by Rev. A. J. Wheeler, secretary of the Law and Order League of New Hampshire—this since the New Year came in.

The camp missionary reports in his January summary, thirty mill boarding houses and camps visited, eight religious services held, four hundred and thirty miles traveled, many on foot, ninety-two bundles of reading, and many comfort-bags, Bibles and Testaments distributed.

The New Hampshire legislature has just passed a law forbidding the giving of cigarettes and tobacco to minors as well as selling to them. Although much effort has been made to establish high license, the bill has signally failed, and a number of Mr. Renrich's bills to strengthen Prohibition were acted upon favorably, thus showing that friends among the law-makers of our state.

Hampton Falls reports an interesting and instructive lecture by Rev. A. J. Wheeler, upon "Both Sides of the Question."

The Manchester W. C. T. U., after a sojourn of twenty-one years at 31 Hanover street, have moved into the Kennard building, Nos. 204 and 205, where they have pleasant headquarters, and invite their friends who may come to the city for any purpose to give them a call; this is the headquarters for temperance literature for the state.

March 19 the Claremont union appointed a superintendent, as by Miss Willard's request, for the Temple Wheel, expecting to fill one hundred Wheels in a short time.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

SPRING BREEZES.

With the coming of the spring-time new life seems to have come to the W. C. T. U. of the state. Several unions are rousing up to renewed zeal and energy.

Beaufort, under the leadership of a new president, has gone to work again with all its old-time faithfulness. This is one of our strongholds and one of which we are justly proud.

Winnsboro is another live little union with a wide-awake president, Mrs. Kitchen.

Spartanburg, after much thought and special prayer, has elected Mrs. Wofford to fill the place left vacant by the death of our beloved president, Mrs. Blake. Several new members have been brought into the union by the personal solicitations of a few. All seem to have gone to work with newly consecrated spirit; some new lines of work will be taken up, such as parlor meetings, factory work, and perhaps industrial school.

But what shall be said of Charleston? The dear faithful band that has borne so much and yet so uncomplainingly, goes bravely on with a round of ceaseless work. When the saloons were closed threats were boldly made against Mrs. Chapin's life; but her Charleston union gathered closely around her, ready to share her danger, wearing their white ribbon. Daniel-like praying with their windows opened to the east.

At the call of the president the state executive board met in Charleston, February 26. On account of failing health Mrs. Chapin desired to be released from the office she had filled for fifteen years. The conference did not feel willing to give her up. Letters were read from different unions all over the state begging her not to think of giving up the office, but to remain president as long as she lives. The sentiment of these letters plainly showed that no one would ever be welcomed to the office of president of South Carolina W. C. T. U. as long as Mrs. Chapin lives.

The state treasurer, Mrs. Traxler, resigned, several ladies were spoken of to fill her place, but have not been heard from yet. Miss Lottie S. Olney, of Charleston, was elected to be general secretary of the state Y's. This was a very hopeful feature of the conference that the Charleston Y's took such an active part in the meetings of the conference, with the aid of their honoraries furnishing music and other little attentions, winding up with a pleasant lunch in the W. C. T. U. rooms. We think Miss Olney will do a great deal of good as secretary of the Y's, and we hope to have much to tell of this department in the future. The Charleston union has for two or three years kept up at great expense and almost no encouragement a W. C. T. U. home. At the inauguration of this home and when several hundred dollars had been expended in trying to clean it up and make it safe a very wise Christian gentleman, looking at the broken walls, paneless sashes and other marks of dilapidation, said: "Who but women would ever undertake to make such a ruin habitable?"

Once one of the hotels of the place, it had passed through the war, through storms and earthquake until it had been left an unsightly ruin, standing in the midst of ruins. The W. C. T. U. leased this building for a home. It has twenty-six rooms, some of these are furnished, and most of them are rented at merely nominal prices to those who cannot afford to pay high rents. Many do not pay rent. Some are supplied with food and clothing as well as lodging. Strangers come almost daily to ask for a meal or a night's lodging.

The drunkard's unfortunate wife and helpless babies have found shelter here, and the friendless sick have been cared for until admission could be obtained for them in the hospitals. Gospel temperance meetings are held in the home chapel every Sunday evening. They have a large parlor comfortably furnished, a piano and table filled with magazines and papers. This home ought to be a bond of union between the city and state at large. It could be made a great blessing if the local unions throughout the state would take an interest in it. I have said so much about this home, in hope of stirring up an interest in it.

The Charleston union has no vacation; they work in season and out of season. They send committees to the almshouse every week, taking with them fruits and flowers and literature. They have given several free air excursions during the year to the inmates of the almshouse and hospital, distributing during the sail ice cream, fruit and cake. During the hot weather iced buttermilk was frequently sent to the car-drivers and hot coffee in cold weather. They keep a society basket filled. Mrs. Dr. Gafferella is president, an earnest, whole-souled little woman.

During our conference we had the pleasure of meeting our National treasurer, Mrs. Barker. Everybody fell in love with her and she was introduced to the audience the night she spoke, by Dr. Cuthbert, pastor of First Baptist church, as "the long-looked for light from the West, the star of South Dakota."

News in a Nutshell.

Mrs. S. H. Webb, De Land, is the new president of Florida W. C. T. U.

An excellent idea comes from the Grant City, Mo., W. C. T. U., who secured a temperance secretary in each Sunday-school. This secretary distributes The Young Crusader supplement and other temperance literature and enrolls the children as pledge-signers.

Dr. George Vibbert has just closed a week's series of temperance meetings in Xenia, O. With marked ability he presented the subject in all its bearings. He strongly indorsed the W. C. T. U. and its most radical measures. Great good must result therefrom.

Mrs. S. L. Oberholtzer, World's superintendent of schools savings banks, who has been in Germany, Austria, Sweden, Denmark and Switzerland studying their educational systems and making home life for her sons (who both return to their native land as Ph. D's) is again at home and ready to take up with renewed zeal the establishment of school savings banks. The North American work has been in the care of a secretary and Mrs. Oberholtzer is putting her hand at once to the wheel, reviewing the piles of letters received and writing to many points in the United States and Canada where desire is expressed to take up the system. She sends through The Union Signal to the many friends of school savings banks cordial greeting and assures all who wish direct correspondence, prompt personal attention. Sample literature mailed on receipt of four cents in postage stamps. Address Norristown, Pennsylvania.

In a recent Union Signal was notice of the receipt of a Temple Wheel with this inscription: "Mother's Wheel; she passed away March 12, 1895." It is fitting that more than a passing notice should be given of the life of Mrs. Mary D. Ayer, of Harvard, Illinois. She was a pioneer woman, mother of the first white child born in Kenosha county, Wis. She had seven children—one, Edward G. Ayer, president of the Field Columbian Museum. She has ever been an earnest temperance worker, being the leader in whatever society was formed to help the temperance cause, and sure of a crowded house when it was known she was to deliver an address. She many times contributed to the county papers on the subject of temperance. Not only in this but in all charitable work in the town her heart and hands were ever ready to carry relief to the unfortunate and needy. To her benevolence Harvard is indebted for its pleasant Temperance Hall building. With her usual thoughtfulness she left a bequest, the income of which is to keep the hall in repair. At the ripe age of eighty-two years, after a life spent in kind acts, she joined the hosts above March 12, 1895.

A Slight Cold, if Neglected, often attacks the lungs. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" give immediate and effectual relief.

Mrs. Martha E. Roote, of Bay City, Mich., has been appointed a lecturer to the department of the relation of temperance to labor and capital.

An Arkansas correspondent writes: "We, the W. C. T. U. of Arkansas, are a 'little folk' but we are at least trying to move. We labored assiduously this year to remove the 'black patch' from our state. After all our labor we were forced to the conclusion that we could not make an Arkansas legislator do what he did not want to do. As one expressed it: 'Our people are more like Texas cattle than any people you ever saw. If they don't want to go you can neither drive them nor lead them.' The scientific temperance bill sent us by Mrs. Hunt was a strong one. They promised and talked, and postponed, each in his turn, and finally acknowledged they could not be persuaded to think favorably of the bill, so it did not even come to a reading. We were much disappointed but had the gratification of knowing we had done our part. But they did give us something. Our bill for 'police matron in cities of first-class' passed the senate by twenty-one yeas to five nays, and the house passed it, yeas 66 and nays 15. This was a bill much needed. We worked up public sentiment last year, and in the face of considerable opposition had the bill passed favorably. Mrs. Bullock will be with us next week and the week following we have our state convention. There we hope to lengthen our cords and strengthen our stakes for renewed work for the coming year."

"How many unions have had the experience of that of New Douglass, Ill., where a minister, of his own accord, 'opened the doors' of the W. C. T. U. at a regular service?" asks a correspondent. "The minister was the evangelist, Rev. R. F. Killgore, who in March conducted, at the M. E. church, revival meetings in which four churches of the town united. Of the twelve days of the meeting, two were given specially to temperance work. Thursday morning he pointed the lesson of the good Samaritan as the man who fell among the thieves of saloon-keepers, and the W. C. T. U.; and in conclusion asked all who would 'fight whisky' to come forward and give him their hand. Many in the well-filled house came. At night he announced that on the next morning he would 'open the doors of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.' At the close of another temperance sermon on the morning in question the opportunity was given; ladies were ready with badges, and a table in front, on which was placed a long roll of paper headed by our National pledge, and the people came quickly forward until thirty-three names were signed. The majority of these were honorary members (because most women had before belonged), all the way from elderly men to boys. With white ribbons fluttering, nearly a hundred now marched, with the minister at the head, from the church several blocks around to the public square, giving an occasional 'three cheers for temperance' with salute of white handkerchiefs. The sight of the white ribbon on his coat gladdened our eyes when we first saw Mr. Killgore. Two pastors of churches here, the Methodist and Christian, are also, and have been, wearers of the ribbon."

ORGANIZATION.

Remember, that the twenty-second annual convention of the National W. C. T. U. will meet in Baltimore, October 18–23. Remember, that we intend to gather with a grand increase of membership; that not less than 250,000 is the goal of our ambition. Remember, that the two states making the largest increase of membership, in excess of five hundred, are pledged an address by Miss Willard at their annual convention. Remember, that states securing five hundred new members are to have a grand benefit night at the Baltimore Convention, the program to be arranged by their respective presidents. Remember, that the date for reporting increase of membership is set for September 20. Remember, that only six months remain in which to work up that grand total. What are YOU doing about it?

So much in earnest have been the general officers to make our watchword for the year of avail, that at their first meeting after the Cleveland convention they each promised to give a month to organizing work in whatever part of the great field should seem most to need their services. Mrs. Barker's successful trip in the Carolinas has already been chronicled. She gave four weeks and more, of the hardest kind of work, organized three unions and added two hundred to the membership of both states. To the great credit of the states, as well as in proof of Mrs. Barker's success, it must be said that the total expenses were met by collections and not a dollar taken from the National treasury. Of course Mrs. Barker's services were given. She was simply for that period the treasurer afield, instead of the treasurer at her desk. Your corresponding secretary is on the eve of a like campaign, which will also lie in the Southland. Most urgent calls have come from Eastern Tennessee, Mississippi and Texas. At the two latter states I shall attend the annual conventions and do organizing work before and after. In Tennessee I shall attend one district convention, and, I trust, organize a second. My trip through Tennessee and on to Vicksburg, Miss., will be along the Queen and Crescent Railroad. It may be possible for me to stop at some points en route, either going or returning. I am hoping that, through thus coming into touch with the actual needs of the work in the field to be able to help it as I could not at my desk. My conception of the work of a general officer has always been that at least part of her time should be given to field work. I am hoping my record on this trial venture may prove the truth of my theory, and that both numerically and financially the trip may not fall behind our treasurer's. I shall be again at my desk, please God, by about June 1st, when Mrs. Barker will start for the World's convention. Mrs. Hoffman will make her organizing tour as soon as she can fit it into her many engagements.

Reports of new members are constantly coming in. Mrs. M. E. Griffith writes from Washington: "We have secured one hundred and sixty new members at and since the Polyglot meetings. You did us lots of good." "You" in this instance means, of course, the Polyglot. She also states that the district union is soon to move into a most desirable suite of rooms in an excellent location, and thus be better housed than ever before. Miss Carter, one of our girl organizers, has just sent in reports of six new unions; Mrs. Skelton, the grand old veteran, of eleven; Mrs. Johnson organized two in Effingham county, Illinois, and so the good work goes on. But don't forget, dear sister, each one who reads this, that you have a personal duty to perform in swelling the grand total of 250,000. Nothing can take the place of hand to hand work. Whom have you asked this week to join the W. C. T. U.?

Mrs. Emily L. McLaughlin, one of our best known National lecturers and president of the Boston union, is planning a trip throughout New York state during the month of May, where she will attend the conventions of Columbia, Orange and Dutchess counties. She is open to dates that she can fill at that time either in New York, Pennsylvania or New Jersey. Those who can avail themselves of her services will be well repaid. Miss C. S. Burnett, who worked so successfully as organizer in West Virginia last year is again state organizer for Ohio and is filling engagements in the southern part of the state. Unions in that section wishing to secure her services should write to her at St. Clairsville, Ohio. Her terms are within reach of all who need help.

Mrs. Leiter, always wide-awake to the interests of her important department, attended the session of the superintendents of the country, under the National Educational Association, which was held last month in Cleveland, O. Plans for summer meetings will be given in next week's issue. Oh! for more space!

THE LITERATURE FUND.

There is scarcely a day that an appeal does not come to Headquarters for literature for a new union that has no money, or some earnest worker wants a few leaflets on social purity, mothers' meetings, aims of W. C. T. U., with an idea of entering upon active work; or some good woman wants instruction as to organization of a union, a Y, or a Loyal Temperance Legion. All the helps have been an outlay to our publishing house in labor and material that must be paid for on the spot. The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association cannot give this matter that in the course of the year aggregates a large sum. They should and must be paid. The National has no free literature fund from which to purchase this matter, and yet it would be so glad to be able to send to needy workers now and again judiciously selected leaflets, that would greatly help the work. Such a fund has been started, called the Mary A. Woodbridge fund, and a few contributions have been made to this fund, Carrie B. Howell and mother contributing one dollar, to be

Where is there a white-ribboner that could not send ten or twenty cents to this fund that would so greatly help our work, without much sacrifice on her part? Dr. C. C. Our hearts were cheered by the following letter: "The Church of Christ in Granby, Mass., sends a little contribution to your good cause." Yours truly,

"Robert C. Bell."

The letter contained two dollars: the good will expressed was worth one hundred dollars. If every church would do likewise we could move the world for temperance.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

TO OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

A prize of five dollars in gold will be given this year by the National department of mercy for the best essay on the following topic: "Does our dominion over animals give us any right to inflict cruelty on them, and what is the effect of cruelty on those who practice it?"

Essays are limited to not less than two thousand and not more than three thousand words.

The age of those who compete is to be from fourteen to eighteen years inclusive.

Essays must not be signed, but name and address and age of writer written on a separate sheet must be sent with the essay in a sealed envelope. Enclose stamp if you wish your essay returned.

All essays must be sent by August 15, 1895, to Mrs. Lou E. Rall, 61 South Jefferson St., Huntington, Ind., to be examined by a committee appointed for the purpose. No essays will be accepted after August 15.

It is hoped that our young people, especially those who are members of the L. T. L., will join in this contest, remembering that though only one can win the prize every one who does the thinking and reading necessary to participate in this effort will have done much to promote in his or her own heart fixed principles of justice, love and mercy which will develop and improve the character and be productive of a higher and more permanent type of Christian conduct. I will mail specimens of suitable literature as a help to any young person sending name and address.

We desire to again call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Winters & Sommers, that appeared in our issue of March 28. The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Habit is the beneficent harness of routine which enables silly men to live respectably, and unhappy men to live calmly.—George Eliot.

To my thinking charity is the New Testament told in a word.—Edgar Saltus.

God has made us to feel that we may go on to act. If, then, we allow our feelings to be excited, without acting from them, we do mischief to the moral system within us. —J. H. Newman.

Deeds determine destiny.

Take care what you say before a wall, as you cannot tell who is behind it.

In old age one sees farther and clearer than younger people do. It is like living on a hill-top, from whence the ups and downs of life appear in their just proportions, and every way one looks, one beholds, as it were, "the crooked made straight, and the rough places, plain."—Miss Mulock.

There is a good story told of a Hertfordshire farmer. A few nights ago he went home late, and drank a pint of yeast in mistake for buttermilk. He rose three hours earlier the next morning.

Our Library Table.

Few men of science can write on their favorite themes in so popular and untechnical a way as Garrett P. Serviss, who contributes one of his bright articles to the April number of The Chautauquan on "What the Stars Are Made of."

In the Review of Reviews for April the editor discusses recent political events, especially the doings of the fifty-third Congress, the appointment of delegates to an international monetary conference, the election of United States senators by various state legislatures, the deadlock in Delaware, the constitutional convention in Utah, the arguments before the supreme court on the constitutionality of the income tax, the change in the administration of the post-office department and other incidents of the month under review.

The treatment which should be given the original American has long been a problem to the present inhabitants of the new world, and many are the arguments which have been used against all attempts to civilize the Indian. Capt R. H. Pratt, who served long and faithfully on the frontier during the Indian wars, studied carefully the character of the aborigines, and it is of his work toward civilizing this savage race that O. P. Super writes so interestingly in his "Indian Education at Carlisle," in the April New England Magazine. This article is most fully illustrated.

Miss Alice Zimmern, an English woman who has closely studied university life all over Europe, writes in the April Forum about "Women in European Universities," telling of the progress made by women in England, France and Germany, toward securing admittance to the universities on equal terms with men, the privileges they have already obtained, and other valuable information. Mr. Justin M'Carthy, the Irish journalist, politician, historian, and novelist, contributes an article of uncommon interest on "Lord Rosebery" as a sportsman, author, after-dinner speaker, and politician, and thinks he need only depend on himself to become a great English Prime Minister.

The Atlantic Monthly for April contains installments of the two serials now running: "A Singular Life," by Mrs. Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward, and "The Seats of the Mighty," by Gilbert Parker.

Fiction is further represented by the second part of "Gridou's Pity," by Grace Howard Peirce, and a touching single-number story, by Annie Trumbull Slosson, entitled "Dumb Foxglove."

George Birkbeck Hill contributes the first of his papers, "A Talk over Autographs," which promises a most interesting series.

An atmosphere of spring is given to the issue by a delightful paper on "Flower Lore of New England Children," by Alice Morse Earle. Two papers of educational interest are "The Expressive Power of English Sounds," by Professor Albert H. Tolman, and "The Basis of our Educational System," by James Jay Greenough.

Following is a "sample" paragraph from an article entitled "When Crossing the Ocean," which appears in the April issue of Jenness Miller Monthly: "To thoroughly enjoy an ocean voyage one must be properly dressed to be at ease and comfortable under any and all circumstances. One learns much by experience in traveling, whether at home or abroad, and one always starts upon a trip across the water better equipped the second time than the first, unless some kind friend sets her right in the beginning, when from lack of experience the neophyte is apt to burden herself with too much baggage and with numberless unnecessary articles of clothing that will add to rather than relieve the discomforts of travel.

"We are now at the time of year when longing eyes are cast toward European shores, for the tide of summer travel Europeward always sets in by April or May. To many women one trip abroad constitutes the anticipations and remembrances of a lifetime, and it is important that such a trip should be made with every condition favoring."

Perhaps you may think that Scott's Emulsion is only useful to fatten babies, to round up the angles and make comely and attractive, lean and angular women, and fill out the hollow cheeks and stop the wasting of the consumptive, and enrich and vitalize the blood of the scrofulous and anæmic persons. As a reference book it stands in the front rank. As a dictionary it meets every demand.
Rev. G. W. Rogers,

The Encyclopædic Dictionary opens the dictionary war which may involve the Century, the Standard, and the International.—New York World.

Has many distinctive claims to superiority. Such a work has long been needed by the business man, the active student, and in the home circle.
—Philadelphia Inquirer.

My library contains the Century and the latest Webster, but I have found much information in "The Encyclopædic" not in either of the former. I regard the work as invaluable. Frank W. Owers,
Judge 5th Judicial District, Col.

I consider The Encyclopædic Dictionary superior to Webster, Worcester, Century, or Standard. For the busy lawyer, who wants to know things quickly, no better reference book could be had.
Benjamin F. Hughes,
Attorney and ex-State Senator, Philadelphia.

I have Webster, Worcester, and the Century, and for encyclopædias I have the Britannica and Appleton's. It is but simple truth to say that the Encyclopædic Dictionary is a magnificent substitute for all of them. J. H. Atwood,

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS

Of Mary A. Woodbridge.

There are throughout the country, doubtless in every state in the Union, "Woodbridge" unions and "Woodbridge" Y's, for many a local W. C. T. U. in the long list which Mrs. Woodbridge helped to bring into existence is proud to call itself by her name. Doubtless most of these already possess portraits of this beloved leader, and it goes without saying that those who do not are desirous of supplying this lack immediately. Hence we call attention to the cabinet photographs we have on sale. They are excellent likenesses and we commend them not only to "Woodbridge" unions but to all unions and to all friends of Mrs. Woodbridge.

Signal Notes.

Saloons were closed in Honolulu during the reign of martial law. So beneficent have been the results that a movement is on foot to continue the policy. A majority of the members of the Central Union church favor prohibition and will petition the coming Hawaiian legislature.

In view of the recent supreme court decision exempting rents from taxation, it is interesting to note from the last United States census that among 106 farm families, on the average 34 per cent hire the farms, 19 per cent own their farms with encumbrance, and 47 per cent without encumbrance.

The third Indian national convention of the Y. M. C. A. met at Madras last winter, attended by seventy-five delegates, European, Eurasian and Indian. As a result a national union of the Y. M. C. Associations was formed, The Young Men of India was adopted as its official organ and a stimulus was imparted to the growing movement.

The London Times' correspondence from Gothenburg has aroused considerable interest in temperance circles by its report of the workings of the Scandinavian system of government control. The law applies only to the sale of distilled spirits and not to wine or malt liquors. The result is, of course, the increased sale of the latter in far greater proportion than the decrease in the former, the amount of drunkenness remaining about the same. The result of the inquiry naturally is that the cure of drunkenness is not to be found in the Gothenburg plan of regulation.

The Christian Union of Bay City, Mich., is a compact of all the churches of the city, irrespective of creed, for the purpose of promoting Christian charity and toleration toward all. Fraternal meetings are to be held, and public lectures on pertinent topics are to be delivered by priests and ministers. A committee of clergymen and laymen in equal numbers, Protestant and Catholic, first examines the papers to be read, for the purpose of erasing from them any expression judged to be offensive to either party. This union movement will doubtless promote harmonious and united effort.

A conference of Populists and Prohibitionists was recently held in Lansing, Michigan, to discuss the possibility of a union between two groups of political workers. From the remarks of those present it appeared there was no real difference between the two parties on any national question except Prohibition. The duty of the Populists was made plain, namely: That by the adoption of a Prohibition plank in their platform the two movements would be united. A committee was appointed to organize union clubs throughout the state having this end in view, in the hope that the campaign might be one of union in 1896. The Lansing State Democrat, the Populist organ, has the following manly words in reference to this conference: "We hope this committee will act vigorously. Let the war-cry be union. And let the Populists remember that Prohibition is as certain to come as truth is to conquer. And let all Prohibitionists remember that finance reform is now here, almost at the door. Republicans and Democrats see it; both parties, all parties, except the Populists are divided on the financial question. There must be a union, an amalgamation of those who think alike; the old parties must either adopt new principles or give way to new organizations."

It seems that saloons, too, have felt the effect of "hard times," reminding us of the old adage that it is "an ill wind that blows nothing good." The Chicago Herald in a recent editorial on the city's finances for 1895 expresses itself commiseratingly thus: "The revenue from saloon licenses this year is estimated at $3,187,591. This is $81,000 less than last year, a loss of licenses from 162 saloons. This reduction in number has not been the only effect of the hard times on saloons. They have felt the evils of low wages, of idleness among laboring men, and small profits or no profits in business, as severely as any other class in the community. Their 'slate' accounts are enormous. Not one in five, perhaps, of the saloons could continue in existence but for the fact that the brewers and wholesale whisky houses whose goods they handle pay their licenses." Yet despite the financial depression, only a little over two per cent of the saloon "business houses" have retired—a strong testimony to the lucrativeness of their legalized pursuit and the moneyed power of their backers. The pity of it is that few trades or classes of reputable dealers can show an equal resisting power under financial storms.

Publisher's Notes

HEALTHFUL WOMANHOOD AND CHILDHOOD.

BY HENRY BIXBY HEMENWAY, A. M., M. D.

is a book containing plain talks to non-professional readers, and is the outcome, as the author himself states, of requests for a book which should tell in plain language those things that every woman should know about her physical being and the care of children. Dr. Hemenway believes that "the proper study of womankind is woman"; that purity will result from light, truth and knowledge, and that impurity, with its consequent suffering, is largely the outgrowth of ignorance upon questions concerning the physical organism and its relations. This very necessary knowledge the author aims to convey, and to convey in such a manner as shall give to the reader a more exalted conception of the bodily functions. He emphasizes the importance for both mother and child of the study of creative life; points out the prominent part a woman's dress plays in the production of disease and unhappiness; discusses marriage from the standpoint of a physician rather than that of a moralist or poet, and gives invaluable advice in the bringing up of children.

This book in the hands of an intelligent mother would, we think, prevent much needless sickness for herself and her children. It has been Dr. Hemenway's wish "to write a book which might be profitably read by all classes of society, and that, being read, it would help each to lead a more perfect life." And we think his wish finds its consummation in this volume of nearly 300 pages.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

An arbitration bill has passed the Illinois house.

The valley of the Connecticut has been visited by a destructive flood.

The Greater New York bill has been reported favorably by the senate committee.

The Supreme Court has been petitioned for a rehearing of the income tax case.

Utah's constitutional convention sustained equal suffrage, Thursday, by rejecting a motion to reconsider.

The Universal Peace Union celebrated the second annual observance of Peace Day in America at Philadelphia, April 18.

College graduates representing fifteen leading American institutions met at New York city last week to discuss improvements in graduate study.

The fifth international convention of the Young Women's Christian Association opened in Pittsburg, Pa., Thursday, with two hundred delegates in attendance.

A solid surplus of net earnings above dividends amounting to nearly two million dollars is last year's record of the American Tobacco Company (the tobacco trust) while the earnings of the tobacco devotees have gone up—in smoke.

Secretary of Agriculture Morton has been investigating the cause of the unaccountable rise in the retail price of beef when freight rates are at their lowest and the cattle-sellers receive small prices. He finds that the beef packers through combination are holding up the price to the consumer.

MORE good news has come from the Empire state this past week. A telegram dated April 18, announces: "Both houses New York legislature have just voted to submit a woman suffrage amendment. Vote in assembly: eighty to thirty-one; in senate, twenty to five," signed by Martha R. Almy, chairman legislative committee. This is the first laudable result of the suffrage agitation in the constitutional convention of last year. Everything now depends upon the votes of the men people and the "influence" of he women peop le of the grand old Empire state.

A LETTER from England, bearing date of April 4, says: "Jessie Ackermann has arrived by the steamer Paris, and comes to Reigate to-day. The telegram announcing her arrival says: 'I am fairly well.' We shall do all we can to build her up." It is good to know that our brave, but sadly overworked comrade is to have such rest and care before the World's convention.

THE latest misapprehension concerning Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset is that they are helping to edit a "Woman's Bible." The facts are that they agree to be members of a committee to prepare an exegesis of those passages in the Bible that relate to woman's position in the church and state, with the understanding that Miss Elizabeth W. Greenwood and a number of women evangelists should be associated with themselves and other leading women in the undertaking. This will undoubtedly be done, but the arrangements have not yet reached a stage where they can be given to the public.

THE Loyal Temperance Legions of Chicago and vicinity will be present en masse with their banners and inspiring songs, at the dedication of Willard Fountain, April 27, and it is expected that a street march will be one of the features of the day. The fountain is to be presented to Mayor Swift by one of the Legioners, and to Mr. J. G. Shortall, president of the Illinois Humane Society, in whose care the fountain is to be placed, by little Dorothy Horning, Mrs. Barker's granddaughter. The well-known orator, Luther Laflin Mills, will respond. It will be a wonderful object lesson to those who are permitted to be present, and we are sure that at that hour the hearts of white-ribboners and of Loyal Legioners all round the world will be turned towards the Mecca of their hopes.

MANY of those interested in the forthcoming Convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union to be held in London in June next have inquired whether it would be possible for Dr. Lunn to make any concession where parties are organized. Although the terms under which the tours are offered have been made to cover the necessary expenses by a very small margin, Dr. Lunn has announced that he will make certain reductions on the tickets of those who will immediately organize parties, and these allowances are to be proportionate to the size of the party. It is to be hoped that such an arrangement will aid many delegates to the World's Convention to avail themselves of the journey who would otherwise be debarred by the cost. For particulars address Pilgrimage Secretary, 13 Astor Place, New York city.

ON last Sunday, another pioneer in the temperance reform was called to join the rapidly swelling ranks of kindred spirits in the heavenly mansions. Mr. J. N. Stearns, whose name for half a century has been associated with the temperance movement of this and other lands, died suddenly from heart disease, April 21, at his home in Brooklyn, N. Y. Born in New Hampshire in 1829, Mr. Stearns joined the Coldwater Army when but a lad of seven years, and followed up this good step by connecting himself with every temperance society in the country, until he held the unique and enviable position of being the only person in America who was a member of all the leading national temperance bodies. Mr. Stearns' latest, and probably his greatest single work, was the preparation for the World's Temperance Congresses during the World's Fair in 1893, and the editing of the volume containing the full report and addresses of the Congresses. But for many years he has performed prodigious labors in temperance education, as publisher of the National Temperance Advocate and manager of the National Temperance Publication House. Bands of Hope and young people's temperance societies all over the world have used his literature, and have abundant cause to render praise for such a life as that of John N. Stearns.

THE statutes from Belgium indicate that the revenue from the liquor traffic which in 1851 was four million francs, is now thirty-three millions. During the same period the public houses have increased from fifty-three thousand to one hundred and seventy-five thousand. The annual consumption of spirits is at the rate of twelve litres per head for the entire population, or forty-eight litres per adult. From 1851 to 1888 the criminality increased at the rate of two hundred per cent and insanity one hundred and twenty-eight per cent. Of every hundred deaths of males eighty were traceable to alcoholics. Insufficiency of food, doubtless, had much to do with this terrible showing. The fact is, the temperance and labor questions must go hand in hand.

THE program of the third biennial convention of the World's W. C. T. U. and nineteenth annual convention of the British Women's Temperance Association to be held in London, June 14 to 21, is already issued, subject to alterations. Friday, June 14, is the world's executive meeting, which is not open to delegates. Saturday occurs the British executive meeting, also not open to delegates. Sunday is the B. W. T. A. devotional day. Through the efforts of Miss Gorham, National superintendent of the evangelistic work in the British Women's Association, one hundred pulpits have already been secured for temperance meetings. On Sunday afternoon, at 3 p. m. there will be a large meeting in City Temple, Holborn Viaduct, and afternoon and evening meetings will be held in over two hundred places of worship and halls in various parts of London. On Monday and Tuesday will be held the B. W. T. A. meetings, called the "National Council," at City Temple. Tuesday evening is devoted to a great mass-meeting in Queen's Hall. Wednesday will be the World's W. C. T. U. all-day convention in Queen's Hall, and on Thursday evening occurs a grand demonstration for the World's union in Albert Hall, Kensington. It is confidently anticipated that not fewer than one hundred white ribbon women will be present as delegates, and from the interest manifested and the careful preparations already so far advanced, we can safely predict that this third World's W. C. T. U. will surpass the other two.

IT will be of great interest to white-ribboners to learn that Mrs. Demorest and family have decided to carry on the medal contest work of the late W. Jennings Demorest. Mrs. Demorest and her noble husband always walked in one path in political lines, and she and her children are happy in being able to continue the cherished efforts of the founder of the contests. The extent to which these contests have grown is scarcely appreciated by even the Prohibition public. The first contest was held in New York city, May 9, 1886. In the summer of 1887, Mr. and Mrs. Demorest personally introduced the work on the Pacific coast. The following summer, the contests were adopted in London and Glasgow by the Bands of Hope, and by November, 1889, only two years and a half after the awarding of the first medal, the glorious work had spread all over the United States, and into Canada, the British Isles and even to the remote Orient. Forty thousand contests have been held during these nine years and a small fortune has been invested in the beautiful medals awarded to the successful contestant. Has the investment been a wise one? Let the prohibition sentiment of the country answer. This work is highly educational. The recitations are all on prohibition, and it is safe to affirm that the children who give them if not the parents are forever alert to the ravages and the sin of the drink traffic. The money derived from the admission fee is also a great aid to local temperance agitation, as all above expenses is turned into the home work. We congratulate not only the friends of prohibition but also Mrs. Demorest, upon her noble desire and ability to continue the munificent plans of her lamented husband.

REVEREND BALAAM BULL'S NIGHTMARE.

In Five Chapters.

BY JEAN CALVIN.

CHAPTER II.

Poor Balaam Bull was greatly discomposed by his wife's seeming indifferent heartlessness. She might at least have said she was sorry for her tones if not for her words, before going to sleep. And then that woman suffragist! He couldn't help a most serious depression of spirits as he contemplated the mischief she might inflict upon this world, most of all because she made pretensions of some sort in the theological world. Reverend Savannah Rola, that was her name; he remembered just how it looked on the great handbills announcing her lecture. He had heard her argue that from her knowledge of ancient languages she was sure that there were errors in the English translation of the Bible—even in the revised version which the biased mind of a wholly male theological profession would never be able to appreciate, and yet these things were most vital to women. "As if," thought Balaam Bull to himself, "a body of men given up wholly to the preaching and teaching of the Word would have the slightest motive for misrepresenting that Word. A painful thing it would be for this world if ever iconoclastic women with their lack of logical abilities undertook to interpret the Bible."

After his mind got to running on this subject of "women rights," women preaching the gospel, of course sleep was impossible even to one of Balaam Bull's tranquil temperament. And besides a great domestic cloud seemed settling down upon his own hitherto happy home. His wife seemed passing under some malign influence; she had learned like these women exponents of discord and heresy, to say cutting words and not care. His heart was truly sore, and as soon as the first signs of daylight appeared he thought he should get up and dress and wander forth into the lonely streets. Perhaps when she awoke and found him gone she would begin to realize the extent of suffering she had caused him.

"What man can struggle on and retain his manhood and self-respect with unhappy domestic relations?" said Balaam Bull to himself, as in the early morning he let himself softly out of the front door and wandered aimlessly down the street past the church. Shortly he became so unaccountably tired and sleepy he heartily wished himself back in bed. He had supposed that not only this long night but that many others would have come and gone before the keenness of the suffering would allow sleep, but already his eyes kept closing, so that he stumbled repeatedly, and could only occasionally open them sufficiently to keep from wandering into the gutter of the street. He tried to go home but it seemed miles and miles and miles that he had walked, and yet he had not been able with his half-blind eyes to find a familiar object by which to locate home.

At last full daylight came and the sleepiness melted away with the morning's mist. But where was he? Nothing looked natural. The houses were so very high and the streets so broad and clean. The region looked more like a portion of a great city than his own little village. A stranger came along and Balaam asked, "Whose house is this?"

"Theodora Parker's, sir—Dr. Parker's; she is pastor of the Martha Luther tabernacle on the corner a street or two farther on," and the man passed on, leaving him utterly bewildered by the strange reply.

At the next corner he looked for the name of the street, Monroe street—yes? Then his house must be straight ahead; but he must know the cross street and then he could judge of the distance. What, Vincent street? Could it be possible he was so near home and yet everything looked so unfamiliar? Well, he would hasten home and ask Mrs. Bull for a cup of coffee as quickly as possible, that would take the queer feeling out of his head. Evidently a sleepless night had quite upset him, making him see everything in greatly exaggerated size.

Only a few steps farther on he stopped in utter bewilderment. On the corner of Vale and Monroe street—his own corner—there was neither parsonage nor little chapel, but a gorgeous looking cathedral! "Well, well," said he taking off his hat to wipe the bald spot on his head. Then replacing it, he took off his spectacles and rubbed them vigorously. Readjusting his glasses he looked again, but there was no parsonage—only the cathedral. There came a queer, faint quiver in his heart and he sat down on the curbstone to rest. One or two passed by and he tried to summon up courage to ask—but what should he ask? He couldn't bring himself to ask for Rev. Balaam Bull's house, for he was sure he was known to every inhabitant of the place, and it would sound queer; he did not wonder, however, when every house looked so queer, that every man seemed a stranger, too.

Finally he said to a boy, "This is Parkesburg, is it not?"

"Why, yes, sir," was the answer.

"Well, is there any other Vale street in the town?" he continued.

"No, sir," said the boy confidently.

"Well, is there another Monroe street?"

"No, sir," the boy said emphatically.

"How do you know that there isn't?" asked Mr. Bull.

"Why, if there was I would know it for I drive all over the city with my milk," and the boy went on milk can in hand.

Just then the people began to pass through the wide gateway and enter the cathedral, first singly, then in groups of twos and threes, finally by scores. Then fewer came at a time and lastly one or two stragglers. Balaam Bull was sitting on the curbstone again, but he arose and met the latest comer and asked him, "Can you tell me what cathedral this is, please?"

"Why, certainly," was the reply, "this is a very historic building of the old Contestant church; it has stood here several hundred years—since Parkesburg was a mere village. It is the Martha Luther Tabernacle and commemorates the spot where a little chapel stood which was the first preaching place of the Contestants. In fact, the little chapel itself is preserved inside this huge building because Savannah Rola, first apostle of the Contestants, occupied its pulpit for several years. You must be a stranger in these parts, sir," said the man.

"It seems so," replied Balaam Bull, with a touch of pathos in his voice.

"Many famous women have preached here," continued the stranger, "Savannah Rola, Saint Augusta, Jane Wesley, Helen Ward Beecher, Bishop Mattie Simpson, and of course, Martha Luther herself, chief of the reformers, but come in! come in! you will hear a good sermon this morning, for it is our five hundredth anniversary. Theodora Parker preaches, and you are heartily welcome to a seat in my pew."

"It is the five hundredth anniversary of what?" asked Balaam Bull.

"Why, of the church, to be sure."

"But of what church—the Contestant church, did you call it?"

"Well, it used to be called that generations ago, but there is but one church now, of course."

In his utter bewilderment Balaam Bull could think of nothing better to do than go inside and rest in a pew while he thought his way out of his present predicament. Perhaps by the time the services were over he would have the courage to tell his full story to the man and get intelligent assistance in finding his home.

They were very late, and several turned to stare at them as they entered. A plainly-dressed, matronly woman stood in the pulpit, and was just announcing her text from the gospel of Luke. She read in a quiet, musical voice, with no attempt at elocutionary effect:

Unto what is the kingdom of God like? and whereunto shall I resemble it? It is like a grain of mustard seed, which a man took and cast into his own garden; and it grew and became a tree: and the birds of the heaven lodged in the branches thereof.

And again he said, Whereunto shall I liken the kingdom of God? It is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till it was all leavened.

"On this, our five hundredth anniversary," began the preacher, Theodora Parker, "it will be my duty to give you a hasty historical survey of the church from its rise.

"First, I wish to call your attention to the faithfulness to history in the order and the manner of the putting of these two parables. The male's exclusive policy in the ministry of the Word which lasted nearly two thousand years; and the woman's all pervasive policy which has now lasted five hundred years and which will continue to the end of the world.

"When the gospel was first committed to human apostles, although the Spirit, which endued them with power descended upon women as well as men, and Peter pronounced the occasion the fulfillment of Joel's prophecy—'and your daughters shall prophesy,' yet the male at an early date in the Christian era 'took the seed and cast it into his own garden.' But having the germ of eternal truth in it of course that did not hinder the seed from growing altogether, and it became a tree, fenced up to be sure, but affording shelter from the sun-rays of God's wrath against all unrighteousness, both to the males and to the 'birds of heaven' who lodged in its branches.

"Now, who were these 'birds of heaven'? Women, of course—women of exceptional spiritual perceptions who have arisen in all ages and who seem to belong more to heaven than to earth. These perceived the truth from afar and shut off by a fence of masculine prejudice, they simply mounted on wings of faith over all obstacles of oppression and enforced ignorance and lodged high up in the topmost branches of this tree of life which grew from the gospel seed.

"The Gentile mind of the early Christian era found it exceedingly difficult even to grasp the idea that woman had a soul. Even as late as the fourteenth century when Wycliffe's Bible was printed, a historian describes the peril there was to the church in making an English translation which all could read because the Bible would become 'common and more open . . . to women than it was wont to be to clerks well learned and of good understanding, so that the pearl of the gospel is trodden under foot of swine.'

"But after awhile the males not only learned to tolerate the thought that women had souls but they began even to admire their wings of faith, which betokened the existence of a spiritual nature, and to encourage them to soar on them. Then it was that they began to dwell upon 'the naturally good and religious' disposition that all women possessed. But this did not help women very much for it merely gave expression to the bitterest invectives against all the common sort of women who could not overcome obstacles put in their way, holding them more responsible for the sin they committed than men were for the same sins. A common maxim in the nineteenth century was, 'a fallen woman is a great deal worse than a fallen man, for she sins against her nature, he does not against his.' 'Show your wonderful womanly nature!' cried the male preacher encouragingly. 'Fly the fence and rest in the topmost branches of the tree!' they constantly exhorted women. But how astounding that, instead of admiring the abilities of a few women to soar over their obstacles, they didn't rather blush that they had themselves made these obstacles."

MEN WHO HAVE HELPED US.

I.

Canon Basil Wilberforce.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

At the farewell meeting in Queen's Hall, London, last May, Lady Henry Somerset introduced to the audience a man about fifty years of age, of tall, slight, well-built figure, clad in the garb of a clergyman of the State Church, with a fine head, beneath whose ample dome sparkled eyes keen but kindly, lighting up a face, intellectual, cultured, with mobile lips and winsome smile setting off the firm, square chin that is a part of his inheritance from a heroic ancestry. It was Canon Wilberforce, grandson of the great William Wilberforce, who stood forward in the British Parliament as champion of the slave when the Chancellor of the Exchequer said that his hair-brained purpose would destroy the country. The son of Samuel Wilberforce, Bishop of Oxford, famed as an ecclesiastic and statesman, the brother of another bishop and himself a Canon of Westminster Cathedral, this figure of our great temperance orator is one of the most striking that contemporary English history affords.

On the evening to which I have referred Canon Wilberforce made his first public declaration, so far as I know, in favor of the enfranchisement of woman and her complete participation in the life of the world as well as of the home. If any who oppose this movement doubt its steady onward march, let them reflect upon the change that has come over the spirit of our dream when a leading ecclesiastic of the most famous cathedral of the Anglo Saxon race publicly expresses sentiments that twenty years ago or even ten would doubtless have shocked him and outraged the audience that now applauds his utterances. It has been well said of Canon Wilberforce, as it was long ago said of a great saint, that "his heart was so hot that it scorched his ribs." He is to-day the foremost temperance speaker among men, on the tight little island; he is an ardent champion of the disestablishment of the Church in Wales, and takes a pronounced position against the opium traffic, vivisection and other current abominations.

Canon Wilberforce was educated at Eton and Oxford and was ordained a priest at twenty-five; seven years later his father, then a bishop, appointed him to the living of St. Mary's at Southampton, and twenty years later he received from Lord Rosebery his present promotion to Westminster Abbey. In Southampton he has been a true shepherd to his great flock of working people, giving himself heart and soul to their interests, preaching sermons and delivering lectures and addresses, which if they had been wrought into books and brought before the great public that loves and honors him, would have given Canon Wilberforce an influence in every civilized country to which his great powers justly entitle him.

To my mind this great man is the poet among theologians; in the alembic of his utterance dogmas are transformed into delights; creeds become crystals brimming with brightness, and even ecclesiasticism changes to an exaltation.

To a Non-conformist it looked odd to see a reformer like him clad in sacerdotal garb and escorted to the high stone pulpit of great cathedrals by a verger; to see him turning toward the altar and intoning the prayers with a seven branch candlestick in full blossom behind him. But these outward shows are beyond his power to control and on the very day I witnessed them Canon Wilberforce preached in favor of the disestablishment of the church in Wales with a fervor and a hardihood all the more admirable when one remembers that his Bishop holds toward Dissenters a view diametrically opposed to that of the fearless parish minister. The temperance record of Canon Wilberforce is so well known that I need not dwell upon it. He is a pronounced teetotaler and it is estimated that he has induced over half a million people to sign the pledge. The most noted of his converts is that great writer and speaker, Archdeacon Farrar, chaplain of the House of Commons. It was sometime in the seventies that Canon Wilberforce first made his public declaration in favor of the temperance reform by giving an address at Gloucester which it is stated "electrified all who heard it." In 1876 he scored a still greater success in his sermon, "Sound an Alarm," at St. Paul's cathedral. The sermon was printed and fifty thousand copies of it were sold in a short time. Since then his voice has been heard on almost every prominent platform throughout the country. He stands by those who take a radical attitude on the question; nothing will satisfy him but out-and-out Prohibition. A few years ago he shook from his feet the dust of the Church Temperance Society because it was not sufficiently advanced and the United Kingdom Alliance now has no more zealous advocate. Great as have been his achievements Canon Wilberforce would have wrought out even larger results but for the fragility of physique that has characterized him since his childhood; his spirit shines out like a taper in a Parian vase.

In the fine old canonry at Southampton where Lady Henry Somerset and I visited his family, Canon Wilberforce has been for twenty years delightfully situated as the central figure of an ideal home. Mrs. Wilberforce is a woman as remarkable in her way as her distinguished husband. She possesses great social charm and yields him real companionship, which is saying enough so far as her intellectual equipment is concerned. It was refreshing to see a man of well-nigh unequaled conversational gifts pause on the instant that his wife began to speak and listen to her every word with delightful deference; indeed, he was so unselfish as not to monopolize every moment of the time himself, and had the wit and wisdom to evolve the thoughts of those around him and especially of his gifted wife—a peculiarity which is the more refreshing because so rare. In his recent farewell meeting at Southampton, presided over by the accomplished Hon. Mrs. Elliot York, nee Rothschild, Canon Wilberforce spoke in feeling terms of his only daughter, saying that he hoped she would be his successor in the temperance work. While I cannot help feeling that this was, to use the popular phrase, "a very large order," it rejoices my heart to think that our great orator looks upon women as capable of doing such splendid execution as he has wrought in the temperance reform, and that he hopes his daughter may follow out his work—a hope all the more remarkable that it comes from a High Churchman and a Canon of Westminster.

THE WAY PROHIBITION IS COMING.

BY W. JENNINGS DEMOREST.

[This contribution from the pen of Mr. Demorest was received at THE UNION SIGNAL office but a few hours before the telegram announcing the sorrowful news of his death.—ED.]

The desolated homes, the cries of beggared children and cruelties that shock our sense or claim of humanity with crime, outrage and degradation that no pencil or pen can depict, are clamorous for our sympathy. These, with the rights and privileges of the community, so long and cruelly defied by the mercenary liquor dealers, and the people's business interests, jeopardized and menaced by the enormity of the cruelties caused by this alcoholic poison, for the safety and security of the community will soon be demanding a revolution that will eventuate in banishing this demon of drink into such a complete annihilation as to astonish the world with its effectiveness.

The great question of the prohibition of the liquor traffic, with all its magnitude, overwhelming necessity and promise of good times, is therefore coming before thoughtful, conscientious minds to fire the hearts of the people with all the earnestness and effectiveness of a holy patriotic inspiration, and their just and noble desires and aspirations for deliverance from this incubus now burdening our civilization will not be put aside by the clamor of the victims of drink or unscrupulous liquor dealers, their allies or abettors.

The old parties with their blind, supercilious pretexts for reform may succeed for a time in deluding themselves and others with their sophistical, insidious arguments and pretenses of restrictions and delusive offers of compromise,

> "But right is right;
> And right the day must win;
> To doubt would be disloyalty,
> To falter would be sin."

And while many selfish cormorants on society in the interests of this traffic may combine with money and influence to cajole, frighten and delude the community with odium and pretexts of failure, the people and those in official position are fast learning through the most significant lesson of necessity how to solve this important problem.

The life of the nation and the best interests of society being menaced, the people will be driven to the conviction that the true basis of all lawful authority is the obligation to secure the physical and moral welfare of the community at whatever cost or sacrifice, for, as so clearly expressed by the dictum of the United States Supreme Court: "No legislature can bargain away the public health or the public morals. The people themselves cannot do it, much less their servants. Government is organized with a view to their preservation and cannot divest itself of the power to provide for them."

Therefore from necessity and in obedience to this axiomatic dictum of the Supreme Court, this poison of alcohol must be prohibited for the good of the people and the deluded victims of an appetite for liquor must also be protected from their own vicious passion through a wholesome exercise and exposition of the essence of all law; so that, enlightened by experience and the logic of events, made conscious of the terrible danger to their homes and property and actuated by the force of reason, conscience and real necessity, the better elements of society will unite in an enthusiastic coöperation with the Christian church, and their combined efforts with changed political relations will sweep this whole business of liquor selling into a sea of oblivion.

And because this can be so easily and effectively done, by the exercise of the omnipotent power of the people concentrated and expressed at the ballot-box, this duty and obligation becomes both a privilege and an imperative necessity.

Or perhaps this revolution may come by a more definite dictum of constitutional law emanating from the Supreme Court of the United States, making it impossible to legalize or tolerate the sale of a poisonous liquor to injure the people. In either case the fiat of a progressive and advanced civilization must be aroused to demand the extinction of the poisonous traffic, to save the country from an impending desolation.

"ANDROPHOBIA."

BY VALERIA HANDLEY HIXSON.

The coining of the word "Andromania" seems to have been unfortunate for the reason that not all will use it so charitably as the good man who made that etymological "hit."

The peasant from Europe, whose mother was harnessed to the plow beside the four-footed beast can pronounce the word "andromaniac." The brutal and the vapid, the wicked and the thoughtless may hurl it, not only at those who disgust us with a brainless affectation of mannish ways, but at every woman who keeps pace with Christian evolution, from the modest maid who dons a bicycle suit to the silver-haired saint who proclaims the message God has given her for the people. But since the vocable is now well on its way into the realm of ideas and cannot be recalled, would not "Androphobia" be a suitable traveling companion?

"Androphobia" would be a new name for an old disease and might be defined as "a morbid dread of the mannish," while the variety of views as to what is mannish is sufficient to give ample scope for the use of both terms. The Brahmin thinks it mannish for a woman to go to school; the same view once prevailed in America; perhaps some now think it mannish for a woman to read Greek; and every shade of opinion from these to the most radical assertion of woman's capacities and duties, has now, in some quarter of the globe, its advocate. Every man will say that he admires a womanly woman, but that is indefinite in the extreme, since a man's idea of the womanly depends altogether upon his education and environment. The expression usually means no more than this: "I admire the woman who is agreeable to me," and probably the ideal woman of the average American to-day would have been called an andromaniac forty years ago had the word then been in existence.

One thing only holds good in every case and in every age; the Christian graces, "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance," manifested in the life of woman give her a stronger hold upon the affection and respect of man. But as these are designated by the Scriptures, as "the fruit of the Spirit" greatly to be desired in the character of every child of the race, they cannot be called an element or characteristic of femininity.

If to the Christian graces there be added beauty of form and feature, the favorable surroundings which keep her dainty and pleasing, the polish which good society alone can give, the subtle charm of artistic taste and of culture, then indeed we have a woman whose influence must be great. But millions of women whom God has created find these last named qualifications hopelessly beyond their reach. The gifts are to be appreciated but after all they are only accessory to the charming woman and no essential part of her nature, though they have often been mistaken for inborn feminine loveliness.

Persons afflicted with androphobia seem to labor under the hallucination that woman was created a different genus or species from man, that a woman is something higher and better than her father or her brother, but nevertheless, must be constantly warned and guarded against an inherent tendency to degenerate into a man; all of which is wholly unscriptural and unscientific. If there were a grain of truth in that pretty compliment so often paid our sex, based on the ascending scale of creation, if woman were indeed a being naturally more spiritual, more divine than man, then it should be remembered that no case of atavism known to the world, even among the most degraded races, ever revealed the possibility of man becoming an ape or anything less than a man.

Nature's boundary lines are clearly marked. We do not find it necessary to patrol our coast in order to keep the ocean waves from deluging our land, and the God who said to the sea, "Hitherto shalt thou come and no further, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed," has firmly implanted in woman's nature that which will keep her in her natural sphere. The traditional, the conventional might suffer, but no natural distinction would be changed one iota by granting woman freedom to use untrammeled the gifts and powers Infinite wisdom has bestowed upon her. Whatever Heaven-ordained divergence there may be between the sexes, must be manifested in their different endowments, not in any human modification of the manner in which those aptitudes shall be exercised.

Henry Ward Beecher said, "Where there is power there may also be function. The gift itself is evidence of the divine intention." More than a thousand years before, in the parable of the talents, Christ said the same thing. That this be conceded is all the most rampant declaimer of woman's rights has ever asked.

There may be some foolish or malicious feminine natures that take pleasure in any invasion of the employments once supposed sacred to man, simply because it affords them notoriety or because it spites somebody. These are contemptible, and deserve the name of "andromaniacs." But where there is one such, there are hundreds who work for the same results and rejoice in every such triumph, because they see in it the wiping away of artificial boundaries and the prophecy of a higher civilization.

But these reformers are noisy and self-assertive and aggressive to a degree that jars upon our refined sensibilities! Well, "What went ye out for to see? A reed shaken with the wind?" Their faults are common to all pioneers, and will disappear when the way has been made smooth for the rest of us. "Behold they which are gorgeously appareled and live delicately are in king's courts."

Earth's favored ones are always last to feel the weight of existing evils. The delicately nurtured woman in a home of intelligence and Christian culture must have more than an ordinary endowment of philanthropy if she can realize the need of any better social order than that under which she lives.

How can she know that there are some women to whom little gallantry is extended, because, like Dorlesky, they are "humly and kinder disagreeable"? How can she know that some men are not noble, and that thousands of women find the title, "queen of the home," as bitter mockery as the legend on the cross? Yet, even among those who "live delicately" have been a few noble natures whom the far-away moan of the oppressed has so disturbed that they have been willing, like Christ, to lay aside sceptre and crown and go to the help of the helpless, only to find with glad surprise a new meaning in the words, "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

Woman belongs to the genus homo. All through the animal creation there are two sexes, and when God came to man (using the word in its generic sense) He created two sexes and gave them dominion over the earth. Too much has been made of the fact that the Lord created man, male and female, and not enough of the equally plain statement that He made both "in his own image." It may logically be inferred that in their higher endowments, in their mental, moral and spiritual natures, both are God-like and therefore each much like the other. "A great mind must be androgynous," said Coleridge. The effort to carry the distinctions of sex into the soul life of the race is sensual rather than spiritual—not in its intention, probably, but in its effect. It is an effort to refine and etherealize the animal, rather than a looking away to the divine. It suggests the Mohammedan houri, and those Jewish notions which Christ rebuked when He said, "Do ye not therefore err because ye know not the Scriptures neither the power of God! For when they shall rise from the read they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels which are in heaven." Man and woman are different, of course, but just to what extent woman's femininity pervades her whole personality it is impossible to tell, for never since the primal fall has woman been allowed to develop naturally. When the disabilities laid upon woman by sin have been removed through the triumph of the gospel, man shall behold for the first time since Paradise was lost, a womanly woman.

Christ came to restore what was lost by the fall; yet Uzza seeks with impious hand to steady the ark of God. He assures us it is woman's dependence which appeals to man's generosity and calls out all that is best in his nature. No doubt the weakness of woman appeals to the chivalry of every noble man; but so does sickness or helplessness of any kind. Shall we therefore cultivate disease? After all is man's probable estimate of woman her highest earthly consideration? The whole question seems to have been placed on a low plane. However, the Creator of the universe is abundantly able to maintain harmony and proportion throughout His realm, and if in the progress of Christian liberty woman loses that which was once her charm in the eyes of man, we may be sure the divine mind, which ordered the mental attraction of the sexes, will contrive that man be carried along in that progress and still find a woman a "helpmeet for him."

There has been much talk savoring of presumption about "God's favorite sex" and "God's favorite women." The Word assures us God has no favorite sex when it declares "There is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." Ruth and Esther were beautiful characters; Rachel was a beloved wife; but upon no one of them has God more signally set the seal of divine approval than upon Deborah, the military leader and ruler of Israel.

Concerning Mary, the mother of Jesus, little is recorded. To behold her we must draw upon the imagination, and usually each man, as did each famous painter of the Madonna, gives her the features of his own sweetheart or wife. That she was a holy woman and did well the work entrusted to her, we cannot doubt, but probably the divinity of Christ had more to do with His developing into a Saviour of the world than did the intrinsic excellence or the influence and training of His mother.

Androphobia is the result of pagan poison. Heathen Greece and Rome have largely molded our western civilization. We see it in our art, our literature and our laws. We see it also in much of the current nonsense about femininity. It is not Scriptural; it is as pagan as Venus or Vesta. Nowhere between the lids of the Bible do we find that sickly sentimentality, that hybrid of passion and poetry which regards women as a mixture of piety and "sugar and whey and papier-maché," a cross between an angel and a doll baby. Nowhere do we find that æsthetic abstraction which a strong writer has called "the eternal feminine."

Home has been called woman's sphere. It is a mistake. Woman's sphere is limited only by the extent to which her usefulness may radiate, but every true woman who has a home finds that to be the center of her sphere. There are homes and homes. The clam has a home and the robin has a home. Some home-keepers pattern after the latter and go forth to enjoy God's sunlight and fill the earth with song, only to return with riches for the nestlings; others imitate the snail who carries her home on her shoulders, or the clam, whose house is very beautiful within but who has little to do with the outside world.

The robin would not compel the clam to fly. She simply asks that her own wings be not clipped.

"Peace, then! Fear not the coming woman, brother,
Owning herself, she giveth all the more;
She shall be better woman, wife and mother
Than man has known before."

CORRESPONDENCE

OUR CHAPERON.

Dear Union Signal:—Dr. Lunn is to be congratulated upon the choice he has made in securing Rev. J. T. Docking, Ph. D., of Rhode Island, to accompany the party which is to attend the next World's W. C. T. U. Convention, in London, as a special chaperon. As so many of our sisters will be interested in this gentleman, I will say a few words regarding him. He is a personal friend and near neighbor of mine, a man full of energy, on the alert for good work on all lines, and actively seeking the best interests of the people whose pastor he is. He is a little over thirty years of age. An active enthusiast in the interests of the W. C. T. U., his wife being president of the Y. W. C. T. U. in the town where they have lived several years.

Mr. Docking is a Prohibitionist in politics, having been a candidate for representative on that ticket during a busy city pastorate. As a scholar, Mr. Docking spent four years in the college course receiving the degree of A. B., after which he spent three years in the Boston university and another year as a post-graduate student, taking the degree of Doctor of Philosophy.

The gentleman is a Methodist preacher, having entered the ministry in 1887 and filled important pulpits with credit and remarkable success.

Mr. Docking has had great experience as organizer and conductor of European parties. When the Epworth League was formed in the Methodist church he was one of its founders and for years a member of the general Board of Control. It was just after the organization of this society that the idea was conceived by Mr. Docking that a trip to Epworth, the home of the Wesleys, might prove an inspiration and education to many young Methodists. This idea was warmly greeted by the church at large and resulted in Mr. Docking's organizing and conducting the famous "Epworth League Pilgrimages," the first of which sailed from New York, July 11, 1891, under his immediate management. Last summer in company with nine other Americans of the Epworth Pilgrims, Dr. Docking visited Grindelwald and spent a week there as the guest of Dr. Lunn. Dr. Docking and the American visitors were so princely entertained and inspired by the social and educational gatherings and greatly enraptured by the fascinating scenery of Switzerland, that he knows the route, people, methods of travel, etc.

Dr. and Mrs. Docking will occupy stateroom 91, and will cheerfully render any aid possible to make our journey a pleasure and profit both socially and financially.

As Mrs. Bottome and Mrs. Dickinson, president and secretary of the order of King's Daughters, wrote congratulatory letters to the Methodist young people who were to visit Epworth under Mr. Docking's management, so I send a line of congratulation to those of our W. C. T. U. who are to sail on the steamer Berlin, June 5. Surely no white-ribboner could find herself in more congenial company than will be aboard this good steamship, and receive so much in return for an investment of time and money. To many outside our ranks, the fact that so able a chaperon has been provided will add to its attractiveness.

Any one desiring special information can address Mr. Docking, care of the Pilgrimage Secretary, 13 Astor Place, New York city.

MRS. JANE STAPLER.

Dear Union Signal:—As I read of the death of this noble woman of Tahlequah, Indian Territory, I thought "truly earth is poorer and heaven richer for her going."

A few summers ago I spent a week in her beautiful home, a home of wealth and refinement; as I witnessed her heroic life, her deeds of charity, her kindness to the poor, her ministry to the homeless and afflicted, I felt that she was a veritable Cherokee saint.

The teachers' institute was held in Tahlequah during that week and she entertained free fifteen or twenty of these teachers. She even filled her large parlor with cot beds that they might be comfortably lodged.

"Why do you do it?" I asked; "you have me on your hands and all my temperance meetings; why do you burden yourself?"

"Oh, you do not know the loneliness of these teachers,—some in little log school houses scattered over the prairies, with no congenial society, and now they are brought together and I want to give them a real good time."

When the people were ill or in trouble they always sent for Mrs. Stapler; she never refused to go. She was a real devoted Christian woman without the least pretense or cant.

At our Cleveland Convention last November she told me of the work in the territory and exclaimed, "You organized us as a territory and now we want you again, will you come?" I promised and we parted, but we shall see her no more on earth. To meet her again will be one of the joys of heaven.

SUFFRAGE LEGISLATION IN WEST WASHINGTON.

Dear Union Signal:—Doubtless you will be surprised to hear how near we came to having submitted to the electors of the state a proposition striking out sex as a voting qualification from our state constitution, since we have kept so quiet over it. But "better late than never" for the dear workers who have toiled through our winter's mud and rain in securing names to their petitions, to receive their meed of praise.

We have now in West Washington about sixty-five local and eight county unions. Just about a year ago I began my work of organization and education with a view to petition and legislation work when the right time came. We succeeded in securing forty local and eight county superintendents of franchise, some of which have developed into able, efficient suffrage advocates and workers. East Washington, through its grand suffrage leader, Mrs. Berry and her co-workers, nobly seconded our efforts and in an incredibly short space of time rolled up a petition fully twenty-five yards long. We thought best to present each county petition by itself.

Owing to the unfriendly attitude of the courts toward suffrage legislation enactments, we decided to petition our legislation to submit to the voters of the state an amendment, striking out the word "male" from the article on elections in the constitution. Accordingly a good Populist representative, Mr. Chas. E. Cline, of Lynden, Whatcom county, early in the legislative session, presented our bill before the house, backed by numerous petitions, and an eloquent plea. The bill when passed to its final hearing came within one of receiving the required two-thirds vote. It was reconsidered and lost by two votes. Another bill covering the same measure was introduced into the senate (where it originated) by Mr. E. W. Taylor, a leading Republican of Tacoma, that, to use a common expression, "went through booming." This bill, being a substitute for another senate bill, was late in coming before the house, which time our enemies improved in getting in some of their fine work for the saloon combines, and the "remonstrant" was there also. Under suspension of the rules, the bill was reported favorably by a house committee of the whole, and blocked out to be called up just before adjournment and killed by a vote of forty-seven yeas to nineteen nays. Of the twelve absent four were ayes, fifty-two being the required vote for amendment. So you will observe we just escaped a victory.

Ours was largely a Republican legislature, there being only twenty-four Populists and eight Democrats there. I do not credit to partyism our defeat, for our friends were found in all of them, but I will say that twenty-three out of twenty-four Populists stood by us all the time and five out of eight Democrats. It was the "wheel within a wheel" power that did so much for us. I am quite sure if the women suffragists outside as well as within our own organization had worked for the passage of our bill as hard as did the men, our defeat would have been changed to victory.

Our lobby consisted of our late president, Mrs. M. A. Shaffer, and Miss Emma Page, of Olympia county, president, and a state worker; she did all she could, being blind, and worked successfully on other bills in the interest of humanity. Mrs. Shaffer wrought well. But the two were scarcely able to cope with the opposition in the house. It is to be regretted that our outside friends living in and near the capitol did not interest themselves more in the lobby work of the house instead of absenting themselves when the bills were under discussion. By this I am reminded of the wise suggestions made by our Chieftain at the last National in view of the lack of an added something to our W. C. T. U. machinery to make it possible to run a suffrage amendment campaign without friction. I sincerely hope her views and wishes may be carried out, and methods adopted whereby all suffrage organizations and parties may be brought to work together harmoniously.

From what I know about the growth and popularity of the equality idea in the new parties, and men's organizations, I am persuaded that had the people been given the opportunity of settling this question, our ballot would be restored to us.

"OLIVE SCHREINER'S DREAM REALIZED."

Dear Union Signal:—In The Union Signal of April 4, Anna Carpenter asserts that, "Our common law respecting marriage is based upon the divine law given to our first parents, and never revoked," and she quotes Webster as defining marriage to be, "the legal union of a man and woman for life." I understand her position to be that the Old and New Testaments recognize but one ground for divorce. She quotes "our blessed Lord's" sentence, "What God hath joined together let not man put asunder," and declares that the marital compact of which I wrote January 24, "subjects the most vital interests of the home and of society to the caprice, ambition, jealousy or passion of either party to it." She seems to take it for granted that the man would be the first to break such a compact on a pretext.

I am very glad that Anna Carpenter has brought up these objections, for there is no subject which stands in greater need of free, open discussion than that of marriage and divorce. The fallacy that men are more anxious to break the legal tie than women are is a widespread one. The truth is, that during the twenty years in which careful count was taken of divorce in the United States it was found that "65.8 per cent of the whole number were granted to wives on their petitions for divorces from their husbands," a proportion of nearly two to one. The causes were cruelty, desertion and drunkenness, and I maintain that a man guilty of any one of these three offenses toward a woman whom he had sworn to "love, honor and cherish" could not be trusted in the matter of marital fidelity, no matter whether proof of his defection could be obtained or not.

Mrs. Ellen Battelle Dietrick, a close student of the Old and New Testaments, has called my attention to the fact that (contrary to the thoughtlessly received opinion) the widest possible latitude of divorce is accorded to husbands in the Old Testament, and that the sentence of Jesus may accord perfect liberty of separation, if a couple decide that it is not God who has joined them together. As Mrs. Dietrick pointed out, in Deut. 24, we find this permission given to men: "When a man hath taken a wife and married her and it comes to pass that she find no favor in his eyes because he hath found some fault in her, then let him write her a bill of divorcement and give it in her hand and send her out of his house. And when she has left his house, she may go and be another man's wife; but if the latter husband hate her and write her a bill of divorcement and giveth it in her hand and sendeth her out of his house, her former husband which sent her away may not take her again to be his wife," etc.

Now, there is widest liberty of repudiation accorded to husbands, who are left to be their own judges, or to divorce a wife simply if they "hate her," without any chance for the wife even to make a legal protest! As Mrs. Dietrick showed in her paper read to the Woman's Council at Washington, Ezra used that authority to perpetuate a most cruel and wholesale divorce between husbands and wives, neither of whom wished to be divorced!

It seems to me that, in the face of such facts (which every woman can verify for herself by reading Deuteronomy and Ezra) it is time to cease talking about life-long union as a law of "the inspired word." Marriage, really, is an act, not a state. Marriage is an act of the state called wedlock. If the couple contracting together find themselves truly joined by God, there will be no need to feel alarm at the equal liberty of each to separate. They will not desire to separate. And if they are not truly joined by God, there can be no good results from such union, though every sort of law has tried to irrevocably bind them together. As we have seen, Webster finds no warrant in the "word of God," for defining marriage as "the legal union of a man and woman for life." It is plainly shown in Deuteronomy that marriage in those times was a temporary connection which a man might dissolve according to his own will or caprice. Ezra treated marriage as a union to be arbitrarily broken at the command of a priestly ruler.

"The inspired word," therefore, gives perfect warrant for the juster formula of marriage which I quoted in my letter of January 24, as this formula accords equal rights to each partner in the marital union, and pledges each to fidelity to the other so long as each is worthy of trust by the other. Surely, the common sense of all thoughtful persons will show them that such a contract is far superior to the perfectly free divorce power which the husband held under Deuteronomy.

Dear Comrades:—"Grace and peace unto you from our Lord Jesus Christ," else the battle will press you sore and you will faint by the way!

We have not considered our

SPECIAL DIFFICULTIES

for a little time and the anxious questioners are doubtless waiting with bated breath till the oracle (?) speak. She is wise who can ask good questions. Wise are white-ribboners!

Query.—What is the single tax?

Answer.—It is a tax upon land values, irrespective of improvements, to the exclusion of all other taxes. That value which attaches to land because of the growth and improvement of the community should be taken for the use of the government—national, state and local.

Q.—A county president asks, "What shall I do to interest the unions that seem to become uninterested in their work?"

A.—The W. C. T. U. was born in the Crusade. The Crusade was simply an awakening to the awful need of the hour and the responsibility of Christian women. If by device of entertainment or by some "new and attractive feature" you appear to succeed in interesting these for whom you are troubled, there is danger that when you put real work upon them they will fail. Their hearts must be aroused, their consciences pricked. Then there will be true interest and not before. So approach the laggards in the race with this in view. How? Only the great Teacher can give the special teachings needed. He will tell you.

Q.—I have many rural districts in our county that do not know just how they could carry on a W. C. T. U. in their midst. How can I help them?

A.—The regular business meetings held alternately at the homes of the members of the union can be made a wondrous source of good. At one meeting, the president should have ready an outlined program for the next, so she may mention it to the members, assigning to different ones their part. At these meetings practical papers, profitable discussions, Bible study, could be well taken up. Demorest contests are just the thing for country unions. Flower mission work can be carried on by sending flowers, eggs, fruit and "country" vegetables to city hospitals and charitable institutions. I would "take a day off" with the Annual Leaflet, sister, and consider each department of work therein enumerated, not only carefully, but prayerfully, until I had pushed my way into light.

Q.—What must be done with a superintendent of the L. T. L. who does not wear the white ribbon nor recognize the union only when in need of money?

A.—Rather a poor example for the children, is she not? Why not go to her in a loving and true spirit, show her her fault, and if she will not mend her ways, quietly ask her resignation. When even so little a member as a tooth gets unruly, if it will "not be cured" it cannot be "endured," but is pulled out.

Q.—I wish to ask if it is a usual custom for local unions to cut the membership of all women who happen to be related to men who are druggists and are keeping liquors as part of their drug stock?

A.—No, indeed. Such a spirit is not of Christ. We deal with individuals, not their environment, except as they may better it. If a union has been guilty of such an act—supposing the white-ribboner "related" to a druggist to be herself stanch and loyal to her principles—it had better disband than continue in such a spirit. When human beings begin to sift in that way, they in turn shall be sifted and fall through!

Q.—Who appoints local superintendents and for how long a term?

A.—The membership appoints them in the regular business meeting. The term is commonly one year. Any superintendent may be elected year after year if the local so wishes, but by limiting the time, if a change is desired it can be made without "hurting" any one.

Q.—Does the superintendent of a department or the union furnish money for supplies?

A.—In many cases the superintendents furnish money for supplies. But an appeal can always be made to the union to furnish from its treasury the funds needed for the work of the departments.

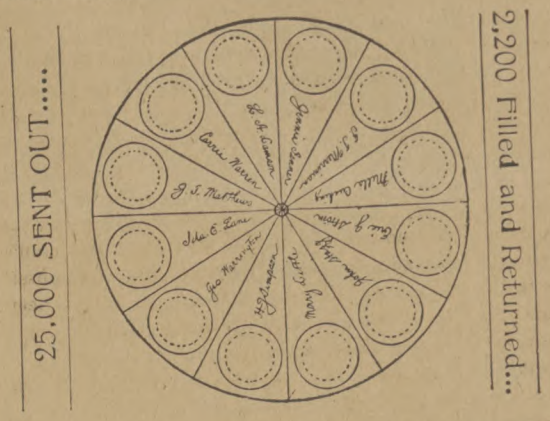
Prayer.—Lord, it is nothing with thee to help, whether with many, or with them that have no power; help us, O Lord our God.—II. Chron. 14:11.

Promise.—He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might he increaseth strength.—Isa. 11:29.



W. Jennings Demorest is the latest shining mark which death has stricken in the Prohibition ranks. No warmer, more helpful friend than he has ever been numbered among its adherents. He has set activities in motion with his money and enthusiasm which will never cease until the consuming fire shall destroy the earth and all the works of man. In the world whither he has gone the earthly wealth he left behind avails him not; he possesses only that which he gave for the sake of others' good. It was my privilege to be a guest in his hospitable home a few weeks ago. He asked me one morning to look at some diamonds he had selected the day before for his medal contests. I was struck then with the unique idea of a man purchasing diamonds so he might push to success a great and holy cause. Ah, those diamonds, who can doubt they will be transmuted by heaven's alchemy into immortal gems, that will shine undimmed on our brother's brow through the never-ending ages of eternity. Mr. Demorest was a warm friend of the Temple, his wife being one of the Trustees. It was a great regret to him that he could not see his way clear to give to the Temple on account of the large sums it required to keep up his medal contests. He was a shrewd business man, and when he expressed his opinion that the Temple Wheel would prove a gold mine to the enterprise, it gave me great encouragement.

Twenty-five thousand Wheels have been sent out. With the exception of those sent to the presidents of local unions accompanied by Miss Willard's letter, all have been ordered by unions or individuals. So far only two thousand two hundred have been returned filled. Will not our friends who hold Wheels spin them along as rapidly as possible? Dear sisters, if you only knew the vast importance of this, what you do you would do quickly. The success of the plan depends so much on the celerity with which it is done. Don't put your Wheel aside and say, "I will get it filled at a more convenient time; it will never be missed among so many." It is a small matter for you to get a dozen friends to give a dime for the Temple, but it becomes a great matter when twenty-five thousand others do the same. Besides the money in hand that it would bring in it would enable us to reach three hundred thousand outsiders. We have a letter from Miss Willard addressed to such persons that would move almost a heart of stone to give. A month ago the orders for Wheels averaged two hundred a day; now the number sent out averages over four hundred and fifty daily. The average amount received from Wheels last week was about $100 a day. We cannot give the names of persons who fill Wheels as it would take up too much space. They receive their acknowledgment in the premium sent them.

The following are the kind of letters we like to receive. Mrs. F. B. Mitchell, Keuka College, N. Y., says: "I received the dozen Wheels and the L. T. L. are all at work. I need some more, perhaps I can use a dozen. My little Charlie has filled a Wheel and I send it this morning, he wants the game of Pixies. He is at work with great enthusiasm getting another Wheel filled." Mrs. E. M. McConoughy, Washington, Iowa, writes: "Howard received his Wheel last Thursday and by Saturday he had it full. I send it to-day. He wants another, and Walter Hood and his mother each want one. Walter is the third boy we have induced to send for a Wheel. Please send me another one also. I enclose stamps." "I send you the Wheel filled," writes little Mabelle Kuner, Kittanning, Pa. I have another one and hope soon to have it ready. Mamma and I are so anxious to have the money raised for the beautiful Temple. I do hope everybody will help you and Mrs. Carse with this money, for it is an awful lot to raise, but I think God will help."

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1113, The Temple, Chicago.

WHEN CROSSING THE OCEAN.

BY MRS. JENNESS MILLER.

To thoroughly enjoy an ocean voyage one must be properly dressed to be at ease and comfortable under any and all circumstances. One learns much by experience in traveling, whether at home or abroad, and one always starts upon a trip across the water better equipped the second time than the first, unless some kind friend sets her right in the beginning, when from lack of experience the neophyte is apt to burden herself with too much baggage and with numberless unnecessary articles of clothing that will add to rather than relieve the discomforts of travel.

The first point to consider, after one has provided ways and means for a summer abroad, is that of appropriate and convenient clothing. There are always cool days on shipboard, when one must, for comfort, be very warmly dressed; there are more or less windy days, when the promenade on deck, that adds so much to the exhilaration of an ocean voyage, will be impossible in long skirts with any degree of grace or freedom from great fatigue; there are often drizzling or rough days, when one would be tempted to remain on deck in spite of the weather were one properly clothed to escape becoming drenched, and one always needs to consider a style of ship clothing that will give a sense of personal modesty and security from danger and exposure in mounting stairs little better than ladders, and, in fact, in generally getting about ship.

On my first ocean voyage I labored under all of the discomforts that the ordinary woman endures. I wore a long dress skirt flapping in the wind; my divided skirts beneath were an improvement over the ordinary petticoats, but not the protection under all circumstances that equestrienne trousers would have been, and I did not provide myself with the proper wraps. I carried in my trunks a lot of useless articles and neglected to provide many that would have added greatly to comfort. In short, I did in general what the average ocean traveler, if a woman, does—nothing that will insure the very best conditions for comfort and enjoyment, and everything that will hamper and impede.

When one begins preparations for an ocean trip she should not think of how much to take, but rather of how little. The secret of a pleasant trip abroad is to go unhampered by baggage. Over there one will wish to make some purchases for reasons of economy and novelty, and the trunks to bring these articles home should be purchased abroad. Were I to go abroad to-morrow I should go with one small steamer-trunk, and, according to circumstances, one small trunk besides. My steamer-trunk would contain undergarments for change on ship, a warm bath-robe of flannel or eiderdown to go to the bath-room on shipboard in each morning—for one of the luxuries of ocean travel is the bath, arrangements for which should be early made—a steamer-dress, shoes, gaiters, and small articles of convenience for daily use and comfort.

When one wishes to travel economically and with a minimum of trouble, especially when one does not expect to be entertained by friends immediately upon arriving on the other side, the steamer-trunk and handbags can be made to answer every purpose. One always wishes to go on shipboard and to leave it on the other side trim, dainty and fresh. To do this the dress and hat worn aboard must be immediately and carefully laid away from the effects of salt water and salt air, to be donned again as the ship goes into port.

When one makes the trip abroad at this season of the year a serviceable English suiting, or Scotch goods in light weight and appropriate color not to easily show the dust and the wear of travel, should be selected and carefully made by a good tailor. The workmanship should be excellent, the style perfectly plain, and the skirt should clear the ground all round. There should be no passementeries, no velvet, silk or satin trimmings; no ornamentation except a tailor finish of silk or woolen braid. Plainness, good workmanship and cut should mark every detail. Serviceable, comfortable walking shoes, and gaiters to match this traveling dress should be provided. Two pairs of gloves, one for wearing on the cars, the other for wearing sight-seeing upon arrival at a place; two veils, one plain tissue, the other of suitable color in net; a trim walking-hat, having no superfluous ends and feathers to be affected by wind or weather, and a plain, tailor-made outside jacket will complete an appropriate traveling dress in which a lady can at all times appear well-dressed as a traveler in Europe. Avoid all jewelry and all ornamentation, for Europeans set one down as a lady born or a parvenu from such indications. The suit described, complete in every detail, from hat and gloves to jacket, gaiters and shoes, will be the only traveling dress needed for a trip of three or four months. Such a suit should be perfectly fresh at the start. One will wear it going on board. As soon as the steamer is out of port she should retire to her stateroom and there don a regular steamer-dress.

The ship-dress should also be especial to the occasion, and appropriate in every detail. Waterproof serge should be used for this dress. The bodice cut should be simple, the skirt short and worn with knee-length gaiters. The undergarments worn on shipboard should be a warm woolen union suit, a waist boned or not, according to fancy, a pair of dark blue or black equestrienne trousers, and no petticoats. A woman should be so clothed that there will be no exposure of delicate undergarments from a fall from a sudden lurch of the ship, mounting stairs in advance of others, or from high winds. There should be no waste material anywhere to impede freedom of movement. To dress like this one should wear, first, the ankle-length ribbed-woolen union suit; over this the white washable waist, then the equestrienne trousers, and the short dress-skirt, made without a band about the waist by hanging the skirt upon a sleeveless, low-necked fitted waist, made from the skirt lining, whether it be sateen, silk or linen. A round waist of the waterproof serge completes the under-dress, and the outside ulster is made from the same waterproof serge as the dress. This ulster may be interlined with flannel—should be, in fact, to provide sufficient warmth for cold days. The gaiters should be of the same color as the suit—a color chosen with a view to unfavorable effects of salt sea and air upon certain shades. Dark brown and very dark blue are serviceable colors, and little affected by the air.

One should be provided with some kind of soft untrimmed hat. A soft felt, a cloth cap with visor, or a woolen Tam-o'-Shanter are all suitable, or even a hood to tie about the chin; but the head covering should be something in which one may lie at ease in one's steamer-chair. The hair should be plainly dressed to save blowing in the wind.

Nearly all inexperienced travelers are ill for the first day, and few escape a little morning sickness while still in the state-room. Arrange with the stewardess to bring a cup of coffee or tea, or a bowl of gruel, early before rising, then lie still for an hour, and rising quickly don the bath-robe and take the bath already arranged for. Returning, dress quickly; go immediately to the deck; and allow a steward to serve meals in the open air on deck all of the voyage if necessary, but do not remain in the state-room during the day. Persist in the effort to get on deck, however ill, and the chances are largely in favor of continued good health and enjoyment after the first day or two; and if ill in the morning one will often feel perfectly well after being on deck an hour. Do not go on board in a bilious condition. When one has a predisposition to such attacks, take a series of Turkish baths and a general treatment to relieve the condition before starting upon an ocean voyage.

One must provide herself with the necessary toilet articles, soap, camphor, etc. Remember that a quantity of little-needed articles will be found much in the way in a small state-room, and consider only such articles as will be absolutely imperative. Besides the small articles of the handbag, I have found necessary for the steamer the following only, excepting of course, the complete suit worn on board: Two changes of underwear, including night-dress, chamber-robe, knit or felt shoes, steamer-dress, steamer-blanket, head wear, outside wrap, gloves or mittens, rubbers and gaiters to match the costume worn on board. Old travelers always get along with as little baggage as possible. A few hours before the steamer reaches the port of entry into Europe, everybody puts away the steamer garb and appears in traveling dress fresh and trim.

When one goes to Europe as a sightseer only it is folly to carry several changes of dress. A few changes of underwear that can be laundered anywhere on the continent in a day, and one extra dress of light silk, lace or fancy material for appearing at dinner in fashionable hotel, can easily be made to answer. There is always a good deal of annoyance from much baggage, and expense that may better be spared. Why burden oneself with superfluities when pleasure is the object?—Jenness Miller Monthly.

"WHAT SHALL WE EAT?"

BY HENRY BABCOCK.

There is a scientific relation between intemperance, and the food and drink used by man. The food should be that which nearly as possible supplies the chemical elements of which our bodies are formed in about the same proportion that they exist in the body naturally. Very much of the food used by the higher classes of civilized people contains too much carbon, consequently unnatural heat is produced and thirst is caused.

It has been aptly said, "Thirst causes intemperance. Remove the cause of thirst, and you will remove intemperance." The vegetarians claim that meat is a highly stimulating food, and as such produces intense thirst. In an article in The Union Signal several months ago Lady Henry Somerset, while admitting she was not a vegetarian, stated that this one method of reform was coming to the front, and temperance women would do well to study its merits. The claims of vegetarians are that a vegetarian diet produces not only better physical results, but mental and moral as well. Among the points claimed are less susceptibility to heat, cold and fatigue, the more ready healing of wounds, less tendence to irritable temper, keener mental perception and activity, smoother skin and better complexion and almost absolutely no thirst. I can personally verify all these claims in my own family.

That it was God's choice for food of man, as well as beast, is shown in Genesis 1:29, where second in importance only to the family relations the food was mentioned. For sixteen centuries, over one-fourth of the world's history, this was the food of man. Then God permitted Noah to use as food "every moving thing that liveth" (Gen. 9:3). It is thought this permission, not command, was given because the earth was not in condition to yield proper food. But with the permission came laws for bloodshed and murder. And strange as it might seem to some, in less than three hundred years of this manner of living we find the first case of drunkenness on record (Gen. 9:20, 21).

Meat is often defended as a diet, because God gave Moses laws regarding it, but it should be borne in mind that He took them from the flesh pots of Egypt, and instead of putting them on the antediluvian diet, he selected the choicest kinds of meat and gave specific rules for slaughtering, which are observed now only by the Jews.

In Psalm 78:18–32 is shown God's choice as to food for His chosen people. It will be an interesting study to find how many places in the Bible eating is mentioned in connection with drunkenness. Permanent cures from drunkenness have been made by a vegetarian diet, devoid of vinegar and spices. One man was advised by his physician to abstain from meat for some local disease. Before he was aware of it he had lost the craving for both alcoholic drinks and tobacco. Many a mother lays the foundation for strong drink in the very food she places before her family.

St. Albans, Vt.

You can put into a minute of time only just so much manual labor; but you can add to the same minute thought and love. It is the action of the higher human powers which lengthens life, which turns an hour into a day and one year into ten. Some of the greatest souls who have lighted up the earth have had a short life, if measured by years, but how long, if we consider the number of their great endeavors and accomplishments. Not only genius, but goodness lengthens our days. How long are the lives of those generous souls who live for others! Most of us each day think of what we can get or do for ourselves; but there are those who acquire the habit of helping others, of comforting, of adding cheerfulness and strength, wherever they go. To those who thus give, much is given in return—contentment, trust in God, confidence in their fellow-men, sweet hopes, peaceful memories. To fill life full, you must open it upwards toward truth, beauty, goodness. Mere excitement is not life; for all excitements weary, and are succeeded by depression. The hard routine of work into which no love and no thought enter, and which is done from necessity, not duty, leaves us in a lethargy. In order to "redeem time," we must look up, and not down. Seeking things below takes our strength out of us: waiting on the Lord for His higher gifts renews our strength day by day.—James Freeman Clarke.

ONLY A BIRD.

BY MARY C. JOHNSON.

ONLY a bird, a tiny sprite,
That made the wildwood ring
With the silvery notes
From its merry throat
In the early, gladsome spring.
Wee bosom red,
Black, glossy head
And eyes with a soft, warm light.

Only a bird, Dame Fashion heard,
And her proud lip curled in scorn.
"To my taste," said she,
"'Twould better be
If a bird in the hat were worn."
So she sent her imps on their fiendish quest
To roam the wild woods through
To tear the wings from the mother's breast,
For no pity their cruel hearts knew.

No burst of song the old world missed
As it rolled unheeding on,
But the dew-drenched flowers by the sunbeams kissed
Wept tears for the singers gone;
Gone from a world whose lust and greed
Plucks Eden's flowers from its breast
And plants instead the weeds of sin
To flourish unloved—unblest.

Yet never a word
Of pity stirred
The heart of Fashion, cold;
The ears of Beauty never heard
The terrible tale that was told—
Told by the weeping flowers in the glen,
Where their voices had ceased to ring—
Told by shrieking, wee birds in the nest
Unwarmed by a mother's wing.

But Beauty smiled,
Fair, pampered child,
As she donned her bonnet gay,
A bird in front and two behind
Made quite a charming display.
So she arched her neck in becoming style,
As she tripped down the crowded street,
Calling forth the affected smile
Of the friends she chanced to meet.

Only a bird, a tiny thing,
That sat in a milliner's shop,
With ruffled plumage and stiffened wing,
And a miserable cotton crop.
A tuneless throat—alas! alas!
Held stiff by an ugly wire,
And staring, expressionless eyes of glass
That emit no sparks of fire.
Wee bosom red,
Black, dried-up head,
And eyes with a crazy stare.

LIVE TOYS.

There was once a little girl, and she loved a broom. Not but what she had toys enough. She had dolls and a doll's house, a toy kitchen with a tiny pump that pumped real water, and she used to take long rides on a rocking-horse until she had traveled miles into fairyland and it was time to come home again.

There were several reasons why this little girl loved a broom. For one reason the broom was taller than she. She named it Estelle. She played that it was a young lady, a sort of elder sister. She stood it on end that it might walk on its one wooden leg, and she put a hat on its stiff straw hair, and dressed it in a trailing skirt of her mother's, and walked about the house with her arm thrown lovingly around its very slender waist, and she was happy. That is, she was happy until sweeping day. Then—oh, how she cried!

The chambermaid had not been told about Estelle. To her a broom laid across two chairs and covered with a shawl did not seem in the least like a young lady taking a nap. The chambermaid swept the floor with Estelle; the little girl was heartbroken.

Of course everybody who loved that little girl wanted to comfort her, and how do you suppose they set about it? Why, some one said, suddenly:

"A child who will love a broom, who puts her dolls to bed regularly, and who takes good care of all her toys, should have a toy that will love her. I shall give her a live toy."

It may surprise our young people that those who loved that little girl had not given her live toys long before. We think, however, they were wise. As soon as they saw that she would be kind to a live toy and gentle with it, they gave her one, and she who had had so much experience with other toys knew what was expected of her. She took proper care of her live toy.

We know that there are numbers of boys and girls who have live toys. Are they to be trusted with them? No mechanical toy in the world is such fun as a dog or a kitten; but dogs and cats can feel, and they want to sleep and to eat and to be petted just as much as boys and girls do. If one of you has a pet, make that pet go to bed at a regular hour, find out its proper food, and feed it at regular hours. Think of the poor caged birds that wake up to chirp and sing, because, as they are in a lighted room, they believe it must be morning! Think of the dogs that grow fat and sick, and are called stupid, only because they are fed upon all sorts of unwholesome things, that would make children just as sick, and much more cross, if not stupid.

Take care of the wooden, tin and wax toys you may have, dear young people. There is no reason why a little girl should not love her doll—or a broom either, if she chooses—nor why a little boy should not take tin ducks to swim in his bath, as he could not well have real ducks for that purpose. Manufactured toys certainly have a place of their own, and a great deal of amusement may be had from them, but live toys—! Have you any? If you have, remember it is in your power to make them happy or wretched, and that they are only too glad to love you. If you have none, try to show such patience, gentleness, and loving consideration toward all creatures that you will prove to your friends how well you are fitted to care for live toys.—Our Animal Friends.

"How do you know he likes you?" her mother asked.

"'Cause he tasted of me!" answered the little girl.—Selected.

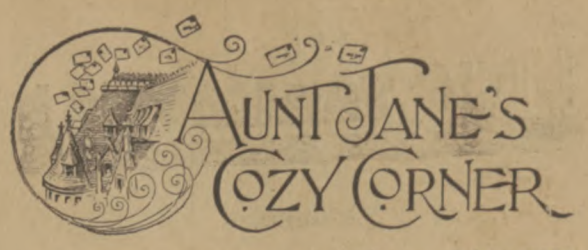
Correct answers: Chas. G. Smith; Ruth T. Elliot; Helen E. Blake; Pearl Black.



Dear Boys and Girls:—I would like to ask how many of the children who read the Cozy Corner to-day remember its beginning three years ago? A good many, I believe. It would be pleasant to know just how many are "charter members," as the big folks say. Won't you write a postal card to say so if you were, and won't you also add whether Cozy Corner has been helpful to you, and how?

This month, April, registers our third anniversary in this Corner. In that time there has been no change, and the hand which penned the first paragraph asking, "What shall we call it?" has written every week without exception since then, and hopes to write very many more Corners hereafter.

The answers came quick and fast to the question, and so many names were suggested that it was nearly impossible to choose. Over eighty were sent in. "We'll ask the children to vote," the editor said, smiling. So carefully selecting five of the names most frequently proposed the vote was asked for and received. The majority was largely in favor of "Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner."

Then our special artist went to work, and after reading over some of the children's letters, she drew a picture to represent their writers in Cozy Corner. For the central figure, she didn't ask Aunt Jane herself to pose, but represented her own idea of a venerable auntie. I have always thought that it looked like Mrs. Washington, George's wife, you know. But, boys and girls, Aunt Jane isn't white-haired yet, though she loves children just as much as if she were.

Then our letters! How they have kept coming and coming like merry sunbeams flashing on a rippling stream. I tried to put as many as possible in our Corner, but when dozens of boys and girls wrote exactly the same thing it made very monotonous reading for the others, so only the choicest and most telling sentences could be known to Cozy Cornerers.

Lately our Soft-Shelled Nuts have vacated the Corner proper, and we have been able to stretch out a little without losing any of our essential "Cozy" ness. These Nuts now number over four hundred, and have been provided in large measure by the nieces and nephews. So much for a little resumè of our Cozy Corner. May we not hear from the Cozy Cornerers, as I asked at the beginning of this letter?

ALCOHOLIC HEREDITY.

It is not unusual for the advocates of moderate drinking—those who believe in the "proper use" as distinguished from the abuse of alcoholic beverages—to point to wine-drinking countries of Europe in support of their theories regarding the hygienic and generally beneficent properties of "light wines." We would call the attention of these to the fact that in France it is the doctors who are sounding the tocsin of alarm and insisting upon legislative action upon the liquor question. They say that a "race of alcoholics" is rapidly growing up in that country. The liquor problem, they tell us, is no longer a mere question of drunkenness and its immediate effects from a sentimental point of view, but a question of the degeneracy of the people through an alcoholic heredity, which, if permitted to continue unchecked, will result in the depopulation of France.

Since 1880 twenty-three projects for dealing with the liquor evil have been presented to the French Parliament, to each of which the Deputies have responded by an ineffective law against drunkenness—for in France the wine merchants pay no special license, and all legal enactments aim simply to throw restrictions around the drinker. These projects are based upon the latest and most thorough researches of the faculty of medicine in all its branches, and the reports they embody contain information of immense value to all students of the liquor problem in every country.

The most eminent specialists in insanity and nervous degeneracy and in morbid and criminal heredity have thrown the light of their science upon the question with this conclusion—that "what is common to our whole modern civilization is the constantly increasing influence of alcohol over the development of the western races of mankind." And from this point of view they truly say that the question "surpasses in interest and importance the mere repression of ignoble and misery-breeding drunkenness; it passes from the domain of sociology into that of pathology, and is quite comparable to the spread of cancer or tuberculosis—with which, indeed, it is not without connection—or better still, with the increase of idiocy and semi-irresponsible crime!"

Dr. Pierret, head physician of the hospital for mental diseases at Bron, recently enlightened a large audience in Lyons on the peculiar character of the "unconscious alcoholic." This is the person who never really gets drunk, but who, while consuming only what he imagines to be a moderate amount, daily exceeds "the dose of spirituous liquor which the organism can safely tolerate." "The common result of this unconscious excess," he says, "is a successive getting out of order of the vital organs, stomach, liver, kidneys, followed regularly by mental and moral disorders." But the worst effect of this alcoholism is found in the children of its victims. "These are sometimes intelligent, but they are always unbalanced and impulsive often tuberculous, epileptic or imbecile and without physical resistance."

According to this authority, then, the question to be determined is, exactly what amount each individual organism "can safely tolerate." In view of the differentiations and complexities of the genus homo it would be interesting to know what these eminent specialists have to say concerning the manner in which this most important knowledge is to be acquired. Inasmuch as the physicians have drawn up a series of measures for the consideration of Parliament perhaps we are to infer that the law will assume the responsibility of defining the strength and the quantity of each man's allowance!

"Alcoholism," says Dr. Lancereaux, another high authority, "creates a special race, as well from the point of view of the intellectual faculties as from that of physical characteristics. This race may continue for a time with all its infirmities and vicious tendencies, but luckily it is wanting in the strength to perpetuate itself. Exposed to all sorts of accidents and diseases, given over to impotence and sterility, it soon disappears. . . . This question of alcoholic heredity is of the highest importance. It demands all the attention of legislators who, by neglecting it, would incur the gravest responsibility." The remarkable fact in connection with this onslaught upon the liquor evil by the doctors is that notwithstanding their alarming revelations and dire predictions not the sturdiest advocate of "reform" among them is ready to declare that alcohol must go! They would rank wine and beer as hygienic drinks and exempt them entirely from the vigorous measures they would impose on the sale of spirituous liquors.

Statistics disclose the fact that the actual consumption of alcohol in wine drinking France has more than tripled in the last forty years. The use of "harmless" beverages containing but a small percentage of alcohol has created among the French an appetite for absinthe and other toxic drugs. Indeed, a leading physician ventures to say "without fear of being accused of exaggeration that this kind of intoxication is as common to-day among women as among men." And this seems to be one of the most marked results of the general use of native wines—it leads women as well as men to excess.

Whatever the immediate outcome in France of the agitation of the liquor question from the standpoint of heredity it is sure to render material service in bringing nearer the judgment day for the drink traffic. When nations can be induced to give as much attention to applying the laws of heredity in the preservation and development of the human species as they now do in the improvement of their horses and cattle and other "live stock" the annihilation of the liquor traffic will be an accomplished fact.

MINOR PREPARATIONS FOR THE OCEAN VOYAGE.

As this is to be a miscellaneous and practical article we will introduce it with a more minute description of the linen bag, or "hold all" as it is often appropriately called. Our attention was first called to the inadequacy of our former description by this kindly query from a New York delegate: "What should be the size of that linen bag? Please explain more fully about the cord on the edge; is that for the purpose of puckering it, so that the contents may be more safely held?" One width of the material (linen, denim, or chintz) is sufficient for the width of the bag,—varying from thirty to thirty-six inches—the wider the better. The length will depend upon the size of the bundle you wish to make. Two yards will cover a very large package, and one and a half will be sufficient for ordinary occasions. Hem the ends first (one-half inch hem) then the sides (same width hem) so that the cord may be drawn through, after which it should be heavily knotted, that it will not slip back. A large size curtain string makes a neat, strong cord. The purpose of this cord, as our correspondent surmises, is to "pucker" the bag and keep in the contents. This puckering is done after the "bag" is tightly rolled and strapped, the ends of the string being neatly tucked inside the bag. As the size of the bag will vary with the size of the contents, buttons and buttonholes cannot be employed to hold it together, so it is well to have two or three safety pins for this purpose; but even these are not really necessary, as the linen will usually lap several inches, and the shawl strap will hold it in place.

Inquiry has been made concerning passports. They are not at all necessary on this trip, as the party will usually be together with a special chaperon (Rev. Mr. Docking, of New Jersey) and will not invade any remote or unsettled part of the country.

How to carry money and how much to take, has been asked. The former is much easier to answer than the latter. Very few, if any, of our party will care to carry a letter of credit, as that is never drawn for less than five hundred dollars. We have looked into the "travelers' cheques," issued by the American Express Company, and find them very satisfactory. They are issued in book form to be torn out as used and made out for ten, twenty, fifty, one hundred and two hundred dollars each, the equivalent in foreign money being stated on each check. The rates charged are fifty cents for every one hundred dollars. Unused checks will be redeemed and lost checks refunded by the company. These travelers' checks are taken not only by bankers, but by leading hotels and shops. For further particulars inquire of your local American Express Company, or address 65 Broadway, New York city, 78 Monroe Street, Chicago, or 45 Franklin Street, Boston, mentioning THE UNION SIGNAL.

If a letter of credit or sight drafts are carried, have them issued for English rather than French or German money, for exchange favors England.

As the itineracy has been so carefully planned by Dr. Lunn, the members of the party can have their mail addressed to certain places on the route, allowing nine or ten days from New York to the destination. The letters should be addressed to the care of the bank on which the check, draft or credit letter is drawn.

The amount of money to be carried can not be positively stated. If one does not intend to purchase any apparel or souvenirs (a temptation very difficult to resist in London and Paris) from fifty to one hundred dollars, above the cost of the ticket, will be sufficient. But a more comfortable sum, and one which will permit the purchase of small souvenirs and minor articles of dress and decoration, will be one hundred and fifty or two hundred dollars. It should be noted in the circular that there are several days' entertainment to be provided for in Paris and London at the end of the journey. Money is a luxury in Europe, but at the same time a highly enjoyable journey may be made with fifty dollars above the price of the tour, provided the closest economy is exercised and self-denial practiced.

As to small change in foreign currency, this may be obtained from the steward on the steamer, but if one desires a handful before starting, C. B. Richards, 62 S. Clark street, Chicago, will furnish it. It is a help to have the different coins in one's possession long enough to become familiar with the denominations and the appearance.

As an aid towards this familiarity we print below a money table showing the comparative values of the United States and other currencies.

Every passenger is expected to fee the stewards and helpers on shipboard, and as there are a number, five dollars is none too much to "go around." The table steward usually receives the largest fee, particularly if he serves you on deck, two dollars being a satisfactory sum for him. The stateroom stewardess should have an equal amount if she has rendered you special service, and the remaining dollar may be divided between "boots" and the deck scrub-boy, who has helped to find your chair and remove it to a sheltered place. These fees are usually given the day before landing.

One word as to flowers. Kind friends will send beautiful, fragrant bouquets to the ship, and nothing will comfort and rest you so much the first day, and nothing will haunt and distress you so much thereafter. The more pungent the odor the more inimical to your happiness and quietude—of stomach. A fragrant rose or carnation on the breezy deck is one thing, but in the confined air of the stateroom is quite another. So, hard as it will be to do it, throw your beautiful flowers away or give them to the stewardess (who is not so susceptible) after you have enjoyed them twenty-four hours. In the large, well ventilated salons and parlors they are not so offensive and many passengers carry directly there all but one small bouquet.

One important item and this chapter is finished. Be sure to label your baggage plainly, with name of steamer and your own name and home address, also "wanted" or "not wanted," or in more common ship parlance, "stateroom" or "hold." Baggage may be expressed directly from the train to the pier of the American steamship company within two days of sailing, but every traveler must be sure to see that it is removed from the pier to the boat. Personal responsibility in regard to baggage must be exercised during all the trip, as baggage checks are seldom given in England or on the continent. Steamer tags may be obtained by applying to the American companies' offices, at 6 Bowling Green, New York city.

THE PLACE AND ORIGIN OF THE CRUSADE.

Important documents relative to the origin of the Crusade were presented to the executive committee of the National W. C. T. U. last fall. The executive referred them, because of lack of time for careful consideration, to the general officers, who faithfully examined them, as they would on no account lightly pass over a formal request from any local union. Concerning the claims for the honors of the Crusade the officers made the following reply, the publication of which is now requested in The Union Signal:

1. Twenty-one years have elapsed since the December of 1873, in which the events occurred which are recited in the documents from Fredonia (New York) and Washington Court House (Ohio). In all that time the state W. C. T. U. of New York and the state W. C. T. U. of Ohio have never once advanced any claim for either of the towns mentioned, but in their documents, their writing and their speeches, by sermon and song, and in every method by which we are wont to refer to settled historic events, they have taken the position that Hillsboro (Ohio) was the point of origin of that "whirlwind of the Lord," called the Ohio Women's Temperance Crusade.

To say this is in itself conclusive, for if the position taken by our honored white-ribbon sisters in Fredonia and Washington Court House had been strongly defensible, it is practically certain that from the beginning there would have been credible men and women in large numbers who would have urged upon the public the justice of their respective priority of right as the starting point of the Crusade.

2. While it is true that on the night of December 14, 1873, Dr. Dio Lewis gave his famous lecture, in which he urged women to go into the saloons in the town of Fredonia (New York), and that this was eight days earlier than the date on which he gave the same lecture in Hillsboro (Ohio), it is also true that he had given that same lecture for several years in many places, and we think there is a record of not fewer than a score of towns in different parts of the country where women did go out into the saloons.

We have heard of such towns in Illinois, Michigan and Vermont, and each one considers itself to have been the first; but the great historic fact is that when Dr. Lewis gave his lecture in Hillsboro, Ohio, on the evening of December 23, 1873, the question was then and there presented to the good women in the audience, "Will you go forth to the places where liquor is sold?" and seventy rose up in token of their willingness to go, and assembled the next morning early in the Presbyterian church, were exhorted by Mrs. Judge Thompson, whom they had already chosen as their leader, and went forth two by two in the first Crusade procession ever seen in the state of Ohio; and from that day the Crusade marched on without interruption. The next date of the going forth of a band being at Washington Court House on December 25, as the sequel of a similar lecture on the evening of December 24, but by that time the women of Hillsboro had already been out one day working with the men who were in the liquor business.

In our judgment it does not matter that they first visited the drug-stores; it is well known that they also visited the saloons.

As a matter of course when Dr. Lewis went from Hillsboro to Washington Court House (but a few miles away), he stated the fact that seventy of the best women of Hillsboro had risen up in the church the night before in token of their pledge to go out as a praying band, so that the primary impulse of the Crusade which radiated from Ohio throughout the West was given by the women of Hillsboro.

It is true that the date of their going forth is but one day earlier than that of the women of Washington Court House; it is also true that much more enthusiasm was aroused in Washington Court House, and that the movement there was most ably led by Mrs. George Carpenter, wife of the Presbyterian minister; but the initial step of the Ohio Crusade occurred in Hillsboro, and when the women of eighteen states gathered in Cleveland in November, 1874 (not a year after this first going forth of the Hillsboro women), they learned from the Crusaders that it was considered that the Crusade began in Hillsboro.

There some of us first met Mrs. Judge Thompson, the leader of the first praying band. She was on the platform, and was introduced to the convention in this character; nor was there any objection made to the statement.

Doubtless those who came from Washington Court House were not pleased with it, but no public declaration against this claim (which was never made by Mrs. Thompson, but was always made for her by the Crusaders), was heard by the women who came from all the adjacent states and from New England and the far West; so that it is considered by the General Officers of the National W. C. T. U. to be conclusively proven that the cradle of the Crusade was Hillsboro, but we think the claims of Washington Court House should be remembered, and for that reason we have often spoken of it, and some of us in our books about the Crusade have declared Washington Court House to be the crown as Hillsboro is the cradle of the Crusade; by which expression we mean that the kindling enthusiasm spread from Washington Court House. This will always be told in historic books relating to the Crusade; but, so far as the priority of the date goes (and it is a principle in history that chronology is its necessary basis), the claims of Hillsboro will never be successfully impeached.

Now as to Fredonia, it is the opinion of the general officers that the first Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized in that town, because on the 22d of December,—one day before the lecture of Dr. Lewis, in Hillsboro, they organized and took the name of Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This fact ought to be remembered and brought out more clearly than it has been. This is a matter of justice and we are certain that no one will be more willing to recognize the priority so far as the name of the local union is concerned, than our sisters of the Hillsboro Crusade.

The general officers applaud the discretion of Mrs. Burt, president of the New York State W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Monroe, president of the Ohio State W. C. T. U., in bringing the documents from the contesting claimants in Fredonia and Washington Court House to the executive committee rather than to the convention; for the reason that no change is likely ever to occur by which the present understanding will be changed, namely, that while we recognize Fredonia as the town in which the first W. C. T. U. was formed, and Washington Court House as the point from which the Crusade fire radiated with most of light and heat, Hillsboro is the point from which one day earlier the first praying band of the Ohio women's Crusade that rolled round the world went forth.

THE POSITION OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. IN RELATION TO THE COLORED PEOPLE.

Certain misunderstandings on this question render expedient the publication of the following statements, drawn up in Boston, February 6, 1895. Every reader who notices the prominent names attached will be interested to learn that the signature of Frederick Douglass was almost the last one that he made.

It has come to our knowledge that wrong impressions concerning the attitude of Miss Willard toward the colored people in America have been made in certain quarters, and as an act of justice we desire to put it on record that no such criticism would be for a moment received in her own country by those who have any adequate knowledge of Miss Willard's character and career. Her ancestors were Abolitionists, her childhood's home was on the line of "the underground railway" for fleeing fugitive slaves; her father was one of the founders of the Free Soil, afterwards the Republican party; and her convictions and sympathies as proved by her speeches, books and editorial articles are with those who from the beginning of the great anti-slavery agitation have been devoted to the cause of the colored people. As President of the National W. C. T. U. and founder of the World's W. C. T. U., Miss Willard has always maintained the position that no colored line could be drawn by either society, and the women who have thus far guided and controlled these great National organizations have never sought to establish any distinction in either, but have freely and gladly accepted the colored women as officers and delegates to the conventions of both. Within a few weeks Miss Willard publicly declared that if a certain woman's club of Chicago, of which she is a member, declined to receive colored women on terms of equality, she should resign her membership.

The National W. C. T. U. is organized on the basis that each state has a right to manage its own internal affairs. In some of the southern states colored unions have been formed with the hearty concurrence of leading colored women. When these unions send their delegates to the World's or National W. C. T. U., they are received on terms of perfect equality with white women. It is due to the white ribbon movement that this statement be widely made and thoroughly understood, as the work of that society is one of wide range and womanly beneficence. In view of these facts we feel that for any person or persons to give currency to statements harmful to Miss Willard as a reformer is most misleading and unjust. Through her influence many of the state unions have adopted resolutions against lynching, and the National union has put itself squarely on record in the same way, while the annual addresses of the president have plainly indicated her disapproval of such lawless and barbarous proceedings.

Bishop of the African M. E. Church, representing two million communicants.

It has been well said that there are three kinds of lies, black lies, white lies and statistics. A fresh illustration of this is given in a paragraph now floating through the press concerning the relations of drink to the accidents treated at the Poplar Hospital, London. It seems that a register has been kept for the last six months, and the number of cases is eight thousand two hundred and seventy-six, or an average of forty-five a day, including Sundays. The Hon. Sydney Holland writes: "The result shows that the majority of these cases are caused by drink, and I think the figures may be of interest to the public: 3,166 accidents occurred at home; 2,415 at work; 1,720 in streets; 303 only as a result of drink; 155 assaults (not drunken assaults); 517 teeth extracted; total 8,276." We confess these figures do not strike us as conclusive of the point that Mr. Holland wishes to make. A large majority of the accidents occurred "at home," and we all know the inherited and acquired tendency to conceal the disgrace of drunkenness in the home, so that it is a most unwarrantable assumption that none of these originated in the drink craze. The same principle applies to accidents at work. The working man has every motive to conceal his evil habit, and among drinking men there is a sort of free masonry that makes it comparatively easy to "hush up" the fact that an injury was inflicted under the influence of liquor. It is odd that with one hundred and fifty-five assaults acknowledged not one should be a drunken assault. In short, without at all disparaging the intention of the author of these figures, it is our opinion that they will not "hold water" half as well as they hold—firewater.

A young Chinese maiden brought up in a missionary home recently requested permission of her Chinese pastor to speak at the service on Easter morning, notwithstanding that it was without precedence, and the young girl with a glow of inspiration most unusual in that church exhorted the members to study the real position of women as revealed in the gospel of Christ. She declared it to be one of complete equality, and strange to say, her words were received with much enthusiasm and were admitted to be fostered in the truth. We can but wish that some of our devoted young church members nearer home may yet "go and do likewise."

Dean Hole in a bright interview gallantly declares that English women are more beautiful but Americans "altogether brighter from the mental standpoint." I am inclined to think the Dean is right and that a reciprocity treaty between the two nations whereby the best gifts of the women folk might be exchanged would help "home rule all round."

One of the stock objections to woman's emancipation is that women do not risk their lives by fighting for their country. In this connection it is interesting to know that when Deputy Bebel introduced the Woman's Emancipation bill into the German Parliament, in February, 1895, he pointed out that between the years 1816 and 1876 three hundred and twenty-two thousand women had died in childbirth; thus proving that there was a greater mortality amongst women from this cause than the wars had caused amongst men. Deputy Bebel added that this fact alone ought already to have entitled women to equal civic rights.

It is a sad pass to which France has come when the famous skirt dancer, Miss Fuller (who we regret to say is an American) is going to represent Bible characters at her theatrical entertainments. I read that in a comic London theatre when the picture of the queen was thrown by a lime-light on the petticoat of a skirt dancer the audience arose! Upon what times have we fallen!

The German Emperor may yet find that, as the Good Book hath it, "He that taketh the sword shall perish with the sword." Perhaps no ruler has ever condensed more dynamite into language than this young man. His latest production is a literary curiosity in view of the great peace movements which are rapidly gaining ground in all civilized nations: "I could find no better present than a sword, this noblest weapon of the Germanians, a symbol of that instrument which your Highness, with my blessed grandfather, helped to forge, to sharpen and also to wield—a symbol of that great building time during which the mortar was blood and iron, a remedy which never fails, and which in the hands of kings and princes will in case of need also preserve unity in the interior of the Fatherland, even as when applied outside the country it led to internal union."

Love is not a late arrival, an afterthought in creation. It is not a novelty of a romantic civilization. It is not a pious word of religion. Its roots began to grow with the first cell of life which budded on this earth. How great it is the history of humanity bears witness; but how old it is and how solid, how bound up with the very constitution of the world, how from the first of time an eternal part of it, we are only beginning to perceive, for the evolution of love is a piece of pure science. Love did not descend out of the clouds, like rain or snow. It was distilled on earth. And few of the romances which in after years were to cluster round this immortal word are more wonderful than the story of its birth and growth. Partly a product of crushed lives and exterminated species, and partly of the choicest blossoms and sweetest essences that ever came from the tree of life, it reached its spiritual perfection after a history the most strange and checkered that the pages of nature have to record. What love was at first, how crude and sour and embryonic a thing, it is impossible to conceive. But from age to age, with immeasurable faith and patience, by cultivations continuously repeated, by transplantings endlessly varied, the unrecognizable germ of this new fruit was husbanded to its maturity, and became the tree on which humanity, society and civilization were ultimately borne.—Henry Drummond.

MINNESOTA.

SPRING ELECTIONS.

District No. 1.—Canton union is rejoicing that the saloon will have no legalized foothold in the town for one year longer; at least the voters have so decided at the recent election. New members are being added to the union and an L. T. L. has been organized, creating considerable interest among the children and young people. A Mother Goose entertainment was given during the winter which brought out a good attendance, considering the bad condition of the roads at the time. The Y of the same place was organized last summer and has been so much alive that the membership has been increased from the original seventeen to forty-two. They have had tea-meetings, gospel temperance meetings, entertainments and lectures and have raised forty-two dollars and sent two boxes of supplies to the LeRoy cyclone sufferers. They have made four wall baskets to be hung in public places. These baskets are made of wire toasters, one handle being removed. The letters Y. W. C. T. U. were painted on pasteboard and slipped in between the wires.

South Troy votes no-license; temperance is taught in the public schools and in the Sabbath-schools. Still the union finds something to do even under such happy circumstances. They had Prof. I. H. Orcutt deliver two lectures, but both evenings the weather was about as unfavorable as it well could be. The union has held one mothers' meeting and will have more. The women also sent literature to the lumbermen.

District No. 2.—Viola union for the past month has been working along the lines of evangelistic and social purity work. The meetings are small, but will be larger with settled weather. They have responded to the call for ten cents per member from The White Ribboner, and also sent five dollars to the Nebraska sufferers.

District No. 3.—The union in Blue Earth City is in better condition than for several years, one reason being the efforts of their excellent president; and another, the fact that they sent four delegates to the last state convention. Special work this year has been sending literature to the lumber camps; holding mothers' meetings once a month, and local charity, through which many needy cases have been helped. Membership day added twelve new members. Scientific temperance instruction has been worked up, and the county superintendent of schools has been made to see the importance of respecting the wishes of the union in regard to the matter. Last fall Bishop Cotter, of Winona, visited the town, and, at the request of the resident priest, the W. C. T. U. united with the Catholics in a gospel temperance meeting, the Bishop giving a very fine address. Two other gospel temperance meetings have been held, also two temperance lectures delivered.

Madelia has been a no-license town for two years past, but owing to the indifference of the village fathers the people were compelled to fight numerous "blind pigs." For a month before election these were kept closed, and the pretty town was free from the evil, but the bum element and the business men wanted open saloons, and, in disregard of the better class of the village and the protests of the farmers round about, a high license board of village officials was elected, license carried, and now in a short time several saloons will be let loose upon the town. As a result the farmers are organizing a coöperative association, which will in time include all the supplies a farmer needs, general merchandise, farm machinery, lumber, wood, coal, etc., and the village merchant will have few patrons left save the saloon element. The women of the W. C. T. U. worked, talked, plead against the saloon, but in vain. However, the very next day a silver medal contest was held and the recitations were as good as ever, and seemed admirably suited to the occasion. The union had offered three cash prizes on the best essays discussing the topic, "Have the saloons benefited Madelia?"

Delavan also went license, by a bare majority of three. The union had put forth every effort, having two or three lectures each week for two months previous to election, and the last meeting just before election was a prayer service. Though defeated, they are not discouraged, and are already resolved to work on. A gracious revival is going on there and they hope to be reinforced thereafter.

Pleasant Prairie union is a country union of ten members, living, some of them, six miles apart, yet they have met every two weeks all winter, only once hindered by the weather. They sent two large boxes of papers to the woodsmen, have taken up mothers' meetings, franchise, social purity and press work, and have also held a medal contest, all the boys and girls doing finely. The minister of the place has preached one temperance sermon. Four White-Ribboners are taken and seven Union Signals.

South Branch, another country union, has twelve members and one honorary. They take twelve copies of the White-Ribboner and bought twelve copies of the state minutes. They also take five copies of the Scientific Temperance School Journal, which they send to as many different schools. Who can say how many children shall be better instructed in the ways of right living because of this faithful work on the part of this one union.

District No. 5.—Edgerton voted for license by a majority of seventeen. Thirty-five good men and true voted for the home, among them being Hon. Wm. Lockwood, who came home from legislature in St. Paul to vote and work against license. Woodstock and Trosky, in the same county, voted no-license. A silver medal contest held in the former place undoubtedly aided the good work.

Tracy union is so busy they have hardly time to report themselves. They meet every week. When first organized they used to study the Monthly Readings for suggestions as to what to do, but now the suggestions come of themselves, and there are always several things planned ahead. A parlor meeting, after a year of attempts and defeats by storms and other hindrances, was finally brought about, and so successfully that the popular verdict took the form of the question, "Why don't you have more of them?" Among their latest efforts was a social "for our own folks," members and husbands, Y's and honoraries; object, to get more honoraries and to consult on some matters of local business in which they wished to get all interested. This union has three lots upon which it purposes to build a temple when times are better. During the six or seven years that the union has existed it has drawn to the place several speakers of national fame, as well as our own best state workers.

Fulda union was organized only last summer with a membership of eight, all new to the work except the president. Very soon after their organization Mrs. Eva Williams, of North Dakota, and the president of the district, Mrs. Crawford, visited the place, giving two or three public lectures and spending a day in house-to-house visitation resulting in the addition of more members. Some have dropped out, but others fallen into line until now the membership is twenty with eight honoraries. Professor Orcutt gave them two scientific lectures on "Microbes and Men," which were much appreciated. Rev. George F. Wells also gave the union an able lecture on the Lord's Prayer. Gospel temperance meetings are held every two weeks on Sabbath afternoons, with constantly increasing attendance. In connection with the I. O. G. T. the union circulated a petition and presented it to the city council, asking for the removal from the saloons of the gaming tables, chairs, and curtains. The council so far heeded the petition as to pass an ordinance to take effect next June, removing the tables and chairs but not the curtains. The last election was a victory for King Alcohol, and in the little town of eight or nine hundred inhabitants there are three open saloons, each paying $1,000 license. The union is not discouraged; indeed, the remarkable thing in all the letters received this month has been that no union is discouraged. If license carried they feel the need of more work, and if it did not carry they do not lay down their weapons but work on to keep the sentiment right.

MISSOURI.

PATIENT CONTINUANCE IN WELL-DOING.

The president of the eighth district W. C. T. U. writes that Mrs. Grubb has filled five appointments, increasing wonderfully the membership of the unions. Brookfield Y entertained on Thanksgiving Day and secured new members —twenty-one signed the pledge. Marceline Y gave a birthday social which was a success socially and financially. A new union has been organized at Bucklin with thirteen members.

The superintendent of scientific temperance instruction has supplied each teacher in Brookfield with a copy of Mrs. Hunt's Monthly Advices, and presented to the school board a petition signed by two-thirds of the patrons of the school requesting scientific temperance instruction in the school.

Houston union recently held a successful medal contest; a part of the proceeds was applied on state pledge.

Mountain Grove workers are planning for a series of lectures by our state president in their county, and Willow Springs union is deeply interested in an Industrial Home which they hope to have located in that town.

A parlor social was given by the Glasgow union recently, and twelve signers to the pledge obtained. Salad, coffee and crackers were served for refreshments. Literature is used in the evangelistic department, mothers' meetings are held once a month, and articles are furnished the weekly paper three times a month. Neosho W. C. T. U. continues to hold the fort, and by parlor meetings and press work keeps up the agitation which is education.

A district conference at Dixon was addressed by Mrs. Millie Lewis, the recently appointed president of the nineteenth district. Officers and superintendents were appointed, and in the evening, Mrs. Lewis lectured to a large and appreciative audience, and next afternoon addressed the children. This district is now fully officered and we hope will accomplish excellent results this year.

From Knob-Noster comes the news of the promotion to the sisterhood above of Mrs. Nettie Kelly, wife of Rev. J. W. Kelly. Her last work was finished on her sickbed in ordering papers and song books to be used in the work. In her fatal illness the physician ordered a stimulant, but she positively refused to use it, and when unable to recognize friends yet manifested her unwillingness to use intoxicants. She leaves three little girls, the youngest only three weeks old.

On the occasion of Mrs. Hoffman's recent lecture in this town, seven regular and eight honorary members were added to the union.

A Demorest medal contest under the auspices of the Shelbyville W. C. T. U. brought out a full house, the young ladies and gentlemen who were to contest for the medal being greeted with cheer after cheer. The people appreciate the wonderful amount of work which the ladies of the W. C. T. U. have done in order to provide so rich an entertainment for the public.

Elmo union writes of an oyster supper being given to fulfill their pledge for state and district work, and that the Junior Prohibition League, organized in October with twenty members, has now a membership of forty-one. They have held two contests and one lecture.

The members of Grant City W. C. T. U. held a reception for their members and friends on New Year's day. Over one hundred were present, and four honorary members were gained. For three years they have sustained an L. T. L., which numbers now nearly ninety. A column is supplied in two papers, and pockets for literature in hotels and barber-shops are kept filled. They have sent to Nebraska twenty-five dollars in cash and several boxes and barrels of clothing and provision. They have by their work in the Sunday-school department secured the appointment of a temperance secretary in each school, who distributes The Young Crusader supplement and other temperance literature and secures the enrollment of the children as pledge signers.

Thirty-five dollars on the one hundred dollar pledge to the Temple has been paid, and new members are gained frequently until now about fifty are enrolled.

Your correspondent recently visited several points in the fourth district W. C. T. U. At Union Star an Anti-Cigarette League was organized and the ladies decided to hold mothers' meetings and temperance mass-meetings. In King City the pastors who were holding special meetings decided that a temperance lecture would not be a hindrance, but a benefit, and a crowded house greeted the speaker. A new union was organized at Ford City, and new members gained at Darlington and Evone.

A Y composed of earnest-hearted girls was organized at Albany. In Bethany five other meetings and entertainments interfered somewhat with our meeting, but we found brave, true hearts there who purpose to push the work even more than in the past.

New unions were organized in Ridgeway and Blythedale, and new members gained at Allendale, which is a union six miles from the railroad, but has a membership of about twenty members, and is accomplishing great things in a quiet way.

A union was organized at Redding, Iowa, which is just over the line, but a neighbor of Grant City union, and hopes to have a visiting acquaintance.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

ANNUAL CONVOCATION.

Every winter the W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia holds a convocation in Washington (not a convention). This winter it was held in connection with the presentation of the Polyglot Petition. About one hundred new members were received. A reception was tendered these in the parlors of the Vermont Avenue Christian church, the pastor of which, Rev. F. D. Power, is secretary of the Congressional Temperance Society.

The reception took place Monday evening, April 1. The new members were the honored guests and were introduced to the officers and members of longer standing. Flowers and flags decorated the rooms. Vocal and instrumental music interspersed the social hours. Refreshments of cakes, wafers and lemonade were served.

Two days later

THE SECOND QUARTERLY MEETING

was held in Gurley Presbyterian church. Reports from twenty-three departments were received. A profitable half-hour was devoted to discussing Sabbath observance, in which discussion Rev. C. L. Pate, of North Capital M. E. Church, took part.

A paper upon "Duties of Presidents," was delivered by Mrs. M. E. Cohen, the first of our local presidents, and one on "Duties of Treasurers," by Miss Kessler, the wisest and most experienced of treasurers.

The welcome extended the delegates and officers by Rev. J. Russell Verbrycke of Gurley church, was appreciated by them as it was the first time a quarterly meeting has been held in his church. Noontide prayer was offered by Mrs. Fahetz and others. Mrs. Merrick, president of the entertaining union, invited all to partake of a repast, after which a social hour was enjoyed and strangers introduced and welcomed. Eight different denominations were represented by our rank and file: Lutheran, Friends, Baptist, Congregationalist, Christian, Universalist, Presbyterian and Methodist.

The department just now attracting most attention is that of

MESSENGER BOYS.

Mrs. Nellie Bradley has transformed from a profane and unlovely rabble a class of boys who are proving interesting and worthy.

The Y's, under their beloved leader, Mrs. S. D. La Fetra, are active in this and all other lines. They endeavor to provide weekly entertainment for the once neglected messenger boys, who by their occupation are deprived of school privileges to which our sons are entitled in this land of free schools. Their marked improvement was shown in a public meeting held by them in Foundry M. E. church, when a flag was presented to them by the Y's. Their speeches in acknowledgment were patriotic and noble in sentiment and gracefully delivered.

It would give me pleasure to delineate the work of each of our twenty-three flourishing departments, but as The Union Signal cannot afford space for it, I will close by saying that cards are out which announce the "Headquarters of the District of Columbia W. C. T. U., 910 F street, N. W. Gospel temperance meeting at 2 p. m. every Wednesday. You are cordially invited to drop in, meet the workers and rest awhile."

Dear sisters, take note of the above, and when you visit the nation's capital register at the headquarters of the W. C. T. U.

CALIFORNIA.

LEGISLATIVE AND OTHER NOTES.

There is an old adage about the jug that is too full for its contents to flow out freely. This reporter feels a similar difficulty.

A graceful act of our new Governor Budd was the appointment of Henry French, the last Prohibition candidate for governor, and an opponent of Mr. Budd, to the office of trustee of the state normal school. He has also appointed the first woman who has ever served on that board. He has distinguished his administration by the abolition of the viticultural commission through which the state has yearly expended large sums of money for the development of the wine industry.

The California legislature, as a daily paper aptly puts it, "adjourned unwept, unhonored and unhung." It was a session of more than usual interest, for many reasons. The California Protective Association, which is the federation of Liquor Dealers' Associations, publicly claimed to have elected a majority of both houses, and yet as a whole the personality of the legislature was above the average—as the results show. In spite of pledges and bribes by which so many were held, the liquor party were defeated at every point.

Mrs. Peet, our state president, stayed at the capitol during the entire session, watching every move and studying every bill with the vigilant eye of a lawyer and a woman's intuition. Never before were legislative matters so complicated. The diversity of measures in which we were interested made her task no easy one. Our chief dread was a uniform license law, and to defeat this there was excellent and systematic work done. Circular letters from state headquarters went to workers throughout the state. In response petitions were poured in and letters rained down upon the legislature. Mass-meetings were called by the W. C. T. U. in which other reform forces joined. Literature was distributed and men and women were sent to Sacramento to help. The result was a sentiment so strong that the objectionable bill was withdrawn but its dangerous features were embodied in another. However, the sentiment which compelled the withdrawal of the first eliminated the evils of the second before it was allowed to pass. Instead of destroying our local option law we have the satisfaction of seeing it very much strengthened and applicable to localities not covered by the old law. Please, dear eastern reader, do not think that local option is our highest aim. When it is all we can get we guard even that with great care.

A bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of cigarettes was passed, and the age of consent raised to eighteen. As a large number of bills remained unsigned at the close of the session, the fate of these is not yet certain, but the presumption is that they are signed by this time.

Too much credit cannot be given to Mrs. Peet for her generalship. She was ably assisted from time to time by other workers, Mrs. Purvis having special charge of the cigarette bill, Mrs. Teats of the purity bill, while Mrs. French, Mrs. Armstrong, Dr. Mary B. Mallory and others each earned the title of General Utility, than whom I have heard there is no better general.

The most popular contest of the winter was the suffrage bill. It developed unexpected strength, passed the Assembly and was killed in the Senate.

The Republican party stultified itself by the adoption of an equal suffrage platform without any intention of standing by it, and compromised itself by rejecting the suffrage bill; and then passed a constitutional amendment to strike the word male from the constitution, to be submitted to the people in November, 1897.

Had the suffrage societies thought best to join with the W. C. T. U. in working for school and municipal suffrage, that much would undoubtedly have been gained, but in the struggle for full suffrage in which the whole was embodied, the school and municipal bills were neglected until too late to get them through. The amendment was thought to be the surest way to kill the whole thing, as it is not a small task to educate the stupid and ignorant among our voters, so largely foreign born and so often unfamiliar with the simplest ideas of political economy.

Our state board meeting in January was a council of war. The April meeting was a review of the yet smoking battle-field. While we have made no great and decisive conquests, the enemy has been kept back at all points and a general advance has been made. The county conventions are now in order and the president, Mrs. Peet, starts out on a vigorous campaign, attending most of them personally.

Delegates have been elected to the World's Convention at London, as follows: Mrs. B. Sturtevant-Peet, Mrs. Anna K. Bidwell, Mrs. Emma C. Laugenour, Mrs. Dorcas J. Spencer. Alternates, Mrs. Emily Hoppin, Mrs. Rose M. French, Mrs. S. J. Churchill, Mrs. Grace M. Kimball.

The National superintendent of Sunday-school work, Mrs. Stella Irvine, has lately visited San Francisco, and while here was given a reception by the state union, at the elegant parlors of the new Y. M. C. A. building. Mrs. M. J. Farnham, president of the W. C. T. U. of China, has also looked at us, but so briefly as to make any courtesies on our part impossible; she is eastward bound now.

Now we have Mrs. Chika Sakurai on her westward way. She arrived in time to be presented at the state meeting of the Occidental Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian church, which is of itself a great missionary convention. Mrs. Sakurai has made friends among the Christian Japanese of the city and has secured several appointments through the W. C. T. U.

San Francisco can ill spare any from the list of her reformers, but congratulates Chicago that it is to be the home of that Baptist Boanerges, Rev. J. Q. A. Henry. In him all good causes here lose an active friend. His was the first church in this city to organize within itself a W. C. T. U. as a part of its own equipment for church work.

Now comes the very cream of this letter, a statement which it is hoped may instigate efforts to secure the same results elsewhere. The board of education of San Francisco have engaged our Mrs. N. B. Eyster as a special teacher of the effects of narcotics and stimulants upon the human system. She is lecturing in the various class rooms of the public schools day after day, each day before another audience. This may seem a simple story, but when it is remembered that one-third of the school census of the state is in this city, the idea grows. Still more it grows when the boards of education recognize officially our work and worker, and appropriate city funds to pay for it. Laus Deus.

VIRGINIA.

ACTIVE UNIONS.

The Roanoke unions have been holding medal contests and parlor meetings during the winter, thus endeavoring to increase the temperance sentiment. The Roanoke Stewart Y held a pink tea recently at the home of their president, Miss Bertha Kester, and since then have had to give her up to a West Virginia gentleman, who has won her for his bride.

After the convocation this city was favored with two lectures from Miss Belle Kearney, of whom the Roanoke Evening World says: "Another immense audience was present in the Calvary Baptist church last night to listen to the silver-tongued advocate of the temperance cause, Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi. This lady is, without doubt, one of the most fluent and graceful talkers on the platform and her audiences never tire while listening to her pungent addresses."

The Richmond unions and Y's held their quarterly meeting recently. The reports of the various unions showed gain had been made for the temperance cause. During the last three months the Richmond Y alone has given out to deserving poor 497 pounds of provisions; had three receptions, one medal contest and gained five new members.

Norfolk district held its quarterly convention the first week in March. Mrs. A. C. Miley was reëlected president. The Portsmouth Y has grown since last September from six members to seventeen. The president writes: "Our girls are always willing and ready to take up any good work and we are very attentive to the weekly meetings. We have organized an L. T. L. that is growing from week to week." What an encouraging letter! "Always willing and ready." That Y will be a power.

Willing workers are the great need of our unions everywhere. So often the burden is left for a few. I verily believe that willingness to be used, to do whatever our hands find to do, or what our leaders find for us to do, counts far more than great talents. Their "very attentive to the weekly meetings" means much, oh, so much, to the work.

Almost everywhere the unions speak of successful parlor meetings; that seems to be the most popular kind of work just now in the state. Cape Charles union reports two at which new members were gained and that they propose to hold one each month.

Of the Emporia union organized last September, a member writes: "The membership is increasing, thus showing the union is a recognized factor here. Our weekly intercourse seems to make us better acquainted and observe traits of character in each other to admire. The spirit of harmony pervades our meetings."

The March number of The Virginia Call contains a bright letter from India Grim, secretary of the Winchester L. T. L., saying, "We organized last November with eight members and now have thirty-nine on the roll. Our meetings are well attended and we are doing good work. We held our third silver medal contest. All the exercises were under the entire control of the L. T. L. and were pronounced a great success."

Loudoun county W. C. T. U. is planning to have Miss Frances H. Ensign for two weeks in May and hopes to organize new unions and Y's at that time. North Fork Y celebrated Washington's birthday by one of their famous parlor meetings. At this one they secured six new members.

Frederick county W. C. T. U. held its semi-annual convention at Stephens City, March 21. The three unions and one Y of the county were all represented, and the meeting was well attended. Your correspondent had the pleasure of being present and much enjoyed meeting those earnest workers. A very interesting feature of the program was "exercises by the Winchester L. T. L." consisting of several songs and a recitation. About twenty of these children were there wearing L. T. L. badges and sang from "Marching Songs" in a spirited manner that enthused all. An earnest letter from the state president, Mrs. R. H. Jones, to the convention, was read and appreciated by all.

The women of this county, as in fact all over the state, carry on the work under difficulties and with much self-sacrifice, but we are strong in the Lord, shall "stand fast in the faith" and press on to victory.

News in a Nutshell.

Good news comes from Missouri that the bill passed by the Missouri legislature, raising the age of protection for girls to eighteen years has received Governor Stone's signature and is now a law, with a penalty of imprisonment in the penitentiary.

The Sunday-school mass-meeting recently held under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. at the C. P. church in Montrose, Mo., for the promotion of the temperance cause, was largely attended. Seven schools represented a master piece for temperance; it was fine and highly appreciated by all.

Mrs. E. M. Griffin, West Suffield, Conn., the woman who suggested the homeless children work, which was accepted by the sisters of the W. C. T. U. at the National Convention, Boston, November, 1891, has had more than twenty-five years of experience with the neglected class of children in her own home. She said when the sisters took up this work, "I have seen the desire of my heart come to pass, and now I am satisfied."

The series of lectures on practical Christian sociology, which were delivered in February before Princeton Theological Seminary by Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, and received there with most emphatic favor and have since been repeated at Marietta College and to the churches of Walnut Hill, Cincinnati, are to be given in Willard Hall, in the noon meetings of May 20 to 24, the whole group of reforms represented by the forty departments of the W. C. T. U. being discussed from the standpoint of the church, the home, the school, the shop, the state.

The Temperance Conference held in Carlyle, Ill., by Miss Anna Downey, state superintendent of evangelistic work, on April 10, 11 and 12, was a very successful one both practically and spiritually. The evening sessions were attended by unusually large audiences and the day meetings were very spiritual and helpful to all who attended. The W. C. T. U. has added many to its number and the white ribbon is conspicuous on many young people. The plans for future progression in the work of the union are very practical, including gospel temperance meetings, house to house visitation and mothers' meetings, with other branches of the work which will tend to elevate the moral tone of the city.

Worthington, Minn., had a wonderful victory for temperance on March 19, and changed last year's license majority of ninety-two into a no-license majority of thirty-five and elected a temperance council. They will follow it up by gospel temperance meetings, and have organized an enforcement league. The two saloons closed April 8. The Friday previous one of their patrons went to town and took what he said was his good-bye drinks. It proved truer than he thought, for before he was two miles from town he fell from his wagon and broke his neck. His funeral was a fitting and significant event for the last day of saloons in Worthington. All the local papers gave the credit for the no-license victory to the W. C. T. U. and other ladies who did heroic work on election day and the day before.

The new union of Medford Hillside, Mass., was favored with a lecture by Miss Cummings, superintendent of the Y's of South Africa, on March 28. Nine departments of work are carried on by this union of only four months' existence, the most important being the Loyal Temperance Legion. Mrs. Rice, the National superintendent, gave the inspiration of her zeal and experience, and the white-ribboners, led by Mrs. D. C. Smith, are greatly encouraged.

A cyclonic wave of public sentiment in favor of the temperance movement as represented by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, struck Ludlow, Ky., recently. It was ushered in by the arrival of Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, of California, the National organizer, who spoke at the Baptist church, Friday night, March 22, on the "Aim and Object of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union," and again on the following Sunday night at the M. E. church, on the subject of "Seed Sowing," applying it to the work of the W. C. T. U. But on the afternoon of the preceding day, Saturday, March 23, the ladies interested in the temperance work were invited to meet Mrs. Skelton at the Presbyterian church to listen to a Bible reading, after which a W. C. T. U. now sixty in membership was formally organized.

Mrs. Julia B. Nelson, Minnesota's state superintendent of suffrage, has spent much time in St. Paul during the session of the legislature, working for the bills in which the W. C. T. U. are especially interested, striving to bring the senators and representatives to a sense of their obligations as husbands and fathers and brothers to pass the age of consent bill. Some with whom she talked assured her that they had never heard of such a matter nor thought of the need of such a law, and when it was explained to them gave their approval and promised to vote to raise the age to eighteen years. To some the need of woman suffrage was also an unthought-of matter, and this, too, merited their approbation when properly presented to them. One elderly Scandinavian senator, after listening to Mrs. Nelson's arguments for equal suffrage said seriously and kindly to her, "I think you would make a fine representative yourself."

One result of the recent visit to Los Angeles of the National superintendent of Sunday-school department, Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, was a Sunday-school temperance rally. The city Sunday-school Union was invited by the W. C. T. U. to have one, and not only consented but joined heartily in the preparations therefor. It was held in the largest church in the city—the Methodist Tabernacle, and the audience gathered Sunday afternoon, March 31, was estimated at one thousand two hundred, about one-third of which were adults. Banners of many devices were seen hung on every side of the building, the one in front of the desk reading, "Keep Thyself Pure." Many Sunday-schools and L. T. L's were represented. The Central M. E. school marched to the church with flags flying—the first being a large American one with a white silk streamer upon which in gold was the name of the school. Following that were the small flags in the hands of every scholar, teacher and also superintendent and pastor. During the singing these flags kept time to the singing which was led by an orchestra. Rev. A. W. Rider, president of the city Sunday-school union, presided, and fifteen pastors and Sunday-school superintendents (among them one woman) graced the platform on one side and the four of the W. C. T. U. committee with Mrs. E. Stephens Matthews on the other. The latter spoke for our organization, and Rev. A. C. Bane, of the South M. E. church and Hon. T. W. Brotherton for the Sunday-school Union, all of whom spoke directly to the point on the evils of drinking, gambling, profanity and tobacco using, and being lively and brief, kept the enthusiasm up to the close. Rev. C. S. Vaile told of the plans of the Sunday-school Union to canvass the city to invite every one to attend a religious service of their choice. Mrs. McClees spoke a few minutes and presented the pledge—one being given to each child to carry home, sign if parents consented and return to the teacher. A mixed quartette sweetly rendered "Lead, Kindly Light." The matter of the Sunday closing ordinance was presented by one of the ministers and it was unanimously voted to request the city officials to enforce the law.

WORDS OF CHEER.

Latest advices from Miss Willard say, "Crowd O-R-G-A-N-I-Z-A-T-I-O-N," but if our Chieftain could see the mail which is continually coming to the corresponding secretary's desk from all over the nation she would feel assured that organization is crowding itself. There is hardly a president or secretary who does not say, "Large increase in membership." At least half a dozen have reported themselves as being confident of securing the promised address from Miss Willard, and it now looks as if the proceeds from the benefit might be divided between the entire number of states. By the way, the question has come as to the exact meaning of the term, "benefit night." Many of the states have already inaugurated the plan of having a paid address at one of the evening sessions of their annual conventions. The same plan is incorporated into the National program; viz, to have the best program that can be arranged by the concurrent voice of the state presidents who have secured the five hundred members, and the proceeds to be divided equally between them. If the fifty-five states are winners there will not be a large division. If there be a smaller number the amount will be proportioned accordingly, but I am sure each state will be more than willing to have a smaller amount on benefit night if thereby the membership of the National be uniformly increased.

Mrs. Boardman writes from New Mexico: "I presented a bill before our legislature, prohibiting the sale of tobacco in any form to minors under eighteen years, which passed both houses without a dissenting voice. This law, with our W. C. T. U's, L. T. L's, Anti-Cigarette Leagues, etc., will be of invaluable benefit to our school boys." Mrs. Wylie, president of Montana, is making a tour through that state in the interests of organization, and reports everywhere speak most enthusiastically both of her ability as a speaker, and of the uplook of the work. Mrs. Irvine, superintendent of the Sunday-school department, has been making a tour through the far West, everywhere representing the work in such a manner as to win attention, and draw upon herself great commendation. Her plan of work is an excellent one, and she is thoroughly conversant with the needs of her most important department. Mrs. Morrow, of West Virginia, is also out in the field, and the new presidents as a whole, are making for themselves a most enviable record for zeal and efficiency. The latest addition to our ranks as state president is Mrs. S. H. Webb, of De Land, Fla., who at the last state convention was elected in the place of Mrs. Hill, who resigned. I am sure welcome will be extended to her from her sister workers everywhere.

Lack of space in The Union Signal affects the corresponding secretary's column quite as often as the other departments. One or two things have been crowded out for some time, and must now have the barest mention. Among them the remarkable symposium in The Arena on "Our Nation's Shame," which has been so widely circulated in pamphlet form, and which has done so much towards awakening the moral conscience in the matter of purity work. The advance in the age of consent laws, during these past few months has been over a wider territory, and has embraced more states than at any previous period, and all must feel that it is largely due to the influence of this symposium, and its systematic circulation. Those who have not yet seen it can secure it by sending five cents to the editor of The Arena.

The local union of New London, Conn., has evolved a very bright idea in the form of a new book called "Rules for Good Living." The first fifteen or twenty pages are filled with genuine rules reproduced in the fac simile of the handwriting of such noted persons as Frances E. Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, Lyman Abbott, Edward Everett Hale, Mark Twain, and others. The latter part is devoted to genuine cooking recipes, and the whole makes a most unique and attractive book. The proceeds from the sale are to be devoted to a fund for permanent headquarters for the union. We congratulate our sisters, even though the corresponding secretary is made to appear in very poor guise as a penman, through her failure to comprehend the fact that the sentiment was to be "reproduced."

A copy of the Port Jervis Union has come to hand, containing a very bright poem from Mrs. Washington, and the announcement that on May 3, the paper will be entirely conducted by the women of the town, in aid of the Y. M. C. A. Why would it not be a good idea to obtain the coöperation of our local newspapers for our W. C. T. U. work in just this way? There are very few papers which, for the novelty of the thing, and the advertisement it would involve, would not be willing to give over one issue a year to the local union. Thereby a very neat sum might be realized for carrying on the work.

Could not Decoration Day be utilized more fully than it is in our temperance work? I have been surprised to find how carefully it is shunned for public meetings, conventions, etc., on the ground that no audience could be secured, but it seems to me that a special service on Decoration Day would be just the thing to bring our work before the people we most desire to reach. If the coöperation of the Grand Army could be secured so much the better. We fail greatly if we do not make our work the central feature of national and local gala-days. Since it means so much for the preservation of the country and home, all national holidays are especially fitting for its presentation.

EN ROUTE IN INDIANA.

After the National Convention I spent six weeks at home, enjoying a much needed rest. Early in January I again began my work, and with the exception of a few days have been continuously in the field, speaking from once to three times a day. I find the interest greater, audiences larger, and collections for the work better than ever before.

I have just attended Howard county convention at Kokomo, speaking two evenings. The city papers sent their reporters and filled whole columns with the procedures of the convention. In one town in Michigan, where I was to speak two evenings, we found the church unlighted, cold and dreary as the tomb. The people came and went. We searched out the janitor who informed us there was no wood. The union was small and discouraged. A discussion was held on the church steps as to what could be done. I said, "If we give up to-night we will have no audience to-morrow night. We must at least advertise our meeting." There was to have been a political rally in the town that night but the speaker had failed to get there. Obtaining permission of one of the merchants to stand on his steps we held a street meeting in March. The young ladies sang and the audience gathered from every direction. I told them they should learn a lesson from the failure of their speaker, for if they had sent for a woman she would have been there. At the close I announced that if there was wood I would speak in the church the next night. Two or three voices from the audience called out, "There will be wood," and several loads came next morning. We had a good audience the second evening and the union trebled its membership.

When our grand white ribbon sister said, "our work requires grit, grace and gumption" she knew whereof she spoke. With these we are removing objections, surmounting obstacles slowly but steadily toward our grand ultimatum.

Imitation, the Sincerest Flattery.

There can be no better evidence of the great superiority and value of those essentially English articles, the Crown Lavender and Perfumed Salts, invented by the Crown Perfumery Co., of 177 New Bond St., and sold by them on a large scale for many years, than the manner in which attempts are made to copy them by rival houses. In some instances both bottle and contents are imitated; in others, to avoid prosecution, while the article itself is imitated, the bottle of some other house is imitated. It is our duty to warn our readers against all these disgraceful imitations, French, English and American, for while the compliment paid to the Crown Perfumery Co. is no doubt sincere, the public who buy them are the real sufferers, and only find chagrin and disappointment. The only genuine and original Lavender and Perfumed Salts, so widely known for their exquisite bouquet, are the production of the Crown Perfumery Co., of London, and have received everywhere the enthusiastic approval of the polite world for many years.—*

PRESS WORK.

Dear Comrades:—The charge of the legislative campaign in Indiana this winter for the removal of her ignominious "black cap" has so nearly absorbed my time and thought since the National Convention that it has seemed impossible to find even a few moments in which to give you a word of greeting or advice for the year's work through our National paper. The activity in the different states as shown by the letters of state superintendents in their respective state papers has, however, given evidence that you have the work so well in hand that the loss has been more mine than yours, and I write now rather to commend your faithfulness than to give any new plans.

I desire to introduce to you my staff of associates, whom you will recognize as representative journalists of different sections of our country. They are: Mrs. Esther T. Housh, of Boston, our "Queen Esther of the press"; Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, of our national capital; Mrs. Isabella Webb Parks, of Atlanta, a correspondent of several leading papers; Mrs. Ada C. Van Pelt, of San Francisco, president of Pacific Woman's Press Association, and Mrs. Charlton Edholm, of Chicago, press superintendent of World's W. C. T. U. Mrs. Edholm takes the place of Miss Irene Fockler, my former associate, who found it necessary recently to resign the position. With the help and counsel of these gifted women I hope to greatly enlarge the work and influence of the department this year.

Yet it must be remembered that the great work is to be done by the local unions. Last year there were reported 2,546 superintendents—about one-third of the unions reported. Can we not—ought we not—this year be able to report at least half the local unions doing press work? Surely no argument or plea is needed to impress upon a white-ribboner the supremacy of the press as a creator of sentiment for our cause. Its power is only equaled by its increasing friendliness, which makes of almost every paper an open door of boundless opportunity; and every such open door lays upon us the duty of entering. Let me especially urge that city unions obtain space for W. C. T. U. notes, at least once a week, in the great dailies. Very few will refuse it if the right woman has charge of the work. I must also plead for my state superintendents that every local superintendent report to her and that every local union which has no superintendent report its press work through its secretary.

Permit me again to call your attention to the helps for press workers:

1. The manual "Points for Press Workers," which condenses the best plans your superintendent has been able to collect. Price five cents.

2. The National W. C. T. U. Bulletin, a weekly paper filled with brief selections and news items, designed to complement the work of the local superintendent in preparing original matter, and help those who have a limited range of periodicals from which to obtain material. Price twenty-five cents per year. Send for sample.

3. The department leaflets, No. 111, "The Press as an Evangelist"; No. 112, "The Associated Press and How to Use it"; No. 113, "Coöperation of the Religious Press with Woman's Temperance Work." Price fifteen cents per hundred. For sale by the W. T. P. A., The Temple, Chicago.

For "Points for Press Workers" and the Bulletin send to the National superintendent, 66½ N. Penn St., Indianapolis, Ind.

I have also a limited supply left of the last annual report of press work. Price three cents per copy; five cents for two copies.

Blanks for this year's annual report will be sent out in July, the questions nearly the same as last year. May I not expect a full report from each state and territory, including the appointment of a superintendent by those yet without one?

Yours for the best year's service and results,

Lodie E. Reed,
Nat. Supt.

66 1-2 N. Penn St., Indianapolis, Ind.

AN ASTHMA CURE AT LAST.

European physicians and medical journals report a positive cure for Asthma, in the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa. A trial costs you nothing.

A very serious difficulty in the way of true reform is found in the fact that well-meaning men persistently refuse to be enlightened.

Two men, with the dirt of the shops upon them, entered a Philadelphia Institutional church, were kindly greeted, had a bath, a lunch, good reading, were rested and revived. One said in a whisper to the other, "Mike, don't it bate the divil?" "Whist!" said his friend, "that was the intintion." About the most delicate tribute to "modern methods" we ever remember to have seen!

The Duke of Wellington once said: "Educate men without religion, and you make them but clever devils."

Miss Hannah More wrote two verses which every man should read and mark and learn:

We say the times are grievous hard,
And hard they are, 'tis true;
But, drinkers, to your wives and babes
They're harder made by you.

The drunkard's tax is self-imposed,
Like every other sin;
The taxes altogether cost
Not half so much as gin.

Flossie was watching the masons lay brick, and the process interested her greatly. "O, mamma," she exclaimed, as she saw the man putting on mortar, "they're buttering bricks, ain't they?"

Simon Peter: His Later Life and Labors. By Chas. S. Robinson, D. D.

There are few Bible readers who have the facility of gathering from the various narratives therein a clear story of any one character in its setting of spiritual teaching. Just this Dr. Robinson has done, clothing historical fact with glowing divine truth and showing Peter as he really was, a loving, zealous, faulty, often foolish, follower, with whom the Lord had infinite patience, that one day He might present him faultless to the Father. Dr. Robinson's story appeals from Peter to the disciples of to-day, making the book not only valuable in exposition, but a spiritual help as well.

St. Paul and Woman. Paul's requirement of woman's silence in churches reconciled with woman's modern practice of speaking in churches. By Rev. Wm. De Loss Love, D. D., Hartford, Conn.

This is a strikingly reasonable and satisfactory exposition of the oft-argued question touching the Pauline "doctrine." The basic thought is that the enjoined "silence" was a custom expressive of the principle of woman's subjection to man as the natural head; that customs are changeable, principles never. In short, that at the time and place of Paul's injunctions concerning woman, silence and veiling were but outward symbols of an inward principle. The customs have changed, the principle abides. Dr. Love's treatment is careful and logical. He explains on quoted authority customs concerning women among the Hebrews in the early Christian Era, present Oriental customs, the influence of ancient Persians in causing the "silence" and seclusion of women, and other topics bearing with importance upon the question.

Threescore Years and Beyond, or Experiences of the Aged. A Book For Old People. By W. H. De Puy, D. D., LL. D.

It was a gracious thought that moved the author to consider the aged and design a book for their special comfort and uplift. Dr. De Puy says in his introduction: "Just previous to the winter holidays a year ago, desiring to present an aged friend with a book which should furnish him with a record of the labors, home habits and closing experiences of old people, I made special inquiry in various directions for such a volume. To my surprise and disappointment, it was not to be found in the market." The author set to work then, and the volume in hand is the result. In Part 1 brief sketches of "The Aged of the Bible" are given, with special reference to the brightness and vigor of their latter days. In the same method sketches are given of reformers, prominent founders of denominational movements, Biblical commentators, missionaries, martyrs, philanthropists, educators, pastors and evangelists and numerous others. Twenty-seven portraits, miscellaneous selections and poetic selections complete a very interesting volume of over five hundred pages. The type is English, a size easily read by aged eyes.

TO MOTHERS.

Never has there been so much interest manifested among mothers of all classes concerning the proper care and culture of children as now. The work of the W. C. T. U. along purity lines has in a marked degree awakened parents to a sense of their responsibilities in the training of children in such knowledge as shall be a preventive to the impurity which is largely the result of ignorance.

As valuable helps to mothers who have experienced this arrest of thought we commend the two little books by Dr. Mary Wood Allen, National lecturer for the purity department.

"Teaching Truth" and "Child Confidence-Rewarded."

The first aims to answer in chaste and scientific language, the queries of children as to the origin of life, and is wonderfully adapted to meet the needs of mothers. Miss Willard says: "I cannot keep a copy over night; it is an evangel to every young person in whose hands it might be placed. I would invite the public school-teachers to examine this rare little book."

Price 25c.

The second is a little pamphlet of nineteen pages, emphasizing the importance of mutual confidence between mother and child—a confidence which should possess the element of such absolute truth as to always merit the little girl's somewhat paradoxical statement, "If my mamma says it's so, it's so, even if it isn't so."

A suitable book for general distribution at mothers' meetings.

Price 10c.

HEALTHFUL WOMANHOOD AND CHILDHOOD.

BY HENRY BIXBY HEMENWAY, A. M., M. D.,

is a book containing plain talks to non-professional readers, and is the outcome, as the author himself states, of requests for a book which should tell in plain language those things that every woman should know about her physical being and the care of children. Dr. Hemenway believes that "the proper study of womankind is woman"; that purity will result from light, truth and knowledge, and that impurity, with its consequent suffering, is largely the outgrowth of ignorance upon questions concerning the physical organism and its relations. This very necessary knowledge the author aims to convey, and to convey in such a manner as shall give to the reader a more exalted conception of the bodily functions. He emphasizes the importance for both mother and child of the study of creative life; points out the prominent part a woman's dress plays in the production of disease and unhappiness; discusses marriage from the standpoint of a physician rather than that of a moralist or poet, and gives invaluable advice in the bringing up of children.

This book in the hands of an intelligent mother would, we think, prevent much needless sickness for herself and her children. It has been Dr. Hemenway's wish "to write a book which might be profitably read by all classes of society, and that, being read, it would help each to lead a more perfect life." And we think his wish finds its consummation in this volume of nearly 300 pages.

5 POPULAR BOOKS.

We will give for one new subscriber, free of all charge, the five books named below, written by

CHAS. H. SPURGEON,
HENRY DRUMMOND and
T. DeWITT TALMAGE,

The greatest modern writers on religious topics. Their works are justly famed, and these have all had an enormous sale both in this country and abroad. The books are clearly printed on good paper, and each is as complete a book as though they were bought in five separate stores, and all are bound in attractive, heavy paper covers.

No. 71. John Ploughman's Pictures. By the late Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon, the great London preacher and evangelist. This is one of the most original and popular books of the age. The author states in the preface that its object is to smite evil, and especially the monster evil of drink, and it is safe to say that the plain talks of John Ploughman, couched in Spurgeon's quaint sayings, his wit, his logic, his power for good, have accomplished more than any similar publication. This book can be read by every member of the family over and over with increasing pleasure and profit, and every mother who has a son that must face the temptations of the terrible curse of drink, will place a good weapon in his hands when she induces him to read this work. Illustrated.

SERMONS BY T. DeWITT TALMAGE.

No. 74. Talmage on Palestine. A book containing a series of sermons, by the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, about his recent and noted travels through Palestine, telling what he saw and learned there. They make such delightful reading, and so instructive and entertaining, that the book is immensely popular. On the days he delivered these sermons in his church in Brooklyn, which seated 4,500 people, thousands were turned away from the doors for want of standing-room inside the church. Even to read the book makes one thrill through and through.

LECTURES BY HENRY DRUMMOND.

Prof. Henry Drummond is without doubt the most popular writer of the age. It is with much pride that we are enabled to offer three of his most popular works. If you read one, you will want all; and if you read them once, you are almost certain to read them over and over.

For simplicity, truthfulness, gentle yet mighty force in statement, and loving loyalty to God, they are unequaled by anything ever written on the subject. They will be angels of mercy to every home that gives them a welcome place on the reading-table.—Quarterly Review.

No. 64. The Greatest Thing in the World. By Henry Drummond. This book is on love as taught by Christ and the disciples; and if any one doubts that love is the greatest thing in the world, and if they want to be made stronger in their love for all things, they must get this book, by all means.

No. 63. Changed Life. By Henry Drummond. If you want a practical solution of the cardinal problem of Christian experience, read this book on "Changed Life." You will be drinking at the fountain of eternal life.

No. 62. Peace Be With You. By Henry Drummond. This book might be called a short treatise on Rest, Joy, Peace, Faith and Light. It is so simple, yet so grand and so clear, that you lay the book down feeling that a new and brighter day has dawned in your life.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS
Of Mary A. Woodbridge.

There are throughout the country, doubtless in every state in the Union, "Woodbridge" unions and "Woodbridge" Y's, for many a local W. C. T. U. in the long list which Mrs. Woodbridge helped to bring into existence is proud to call itself by her name. Doubtless most of these already possess portraits of this beloved leader, and it goes without saying that those who do not are desirous of supplying this lack immediately. Hence we call attention to the cabinet photographs we have on sale. They are excellent likenesses and we commend them not only to "Woodbridge" unions but to all unions and to all friends of Mrs. Woodbridge.

OUR BOW PIN.

We desire to call the attention of our women to the new white ribbon badge. It consists of a bow pin of white enamel on sterling silver and will meet a very general demand for a "white ribbon" which has some intrinsic as well as distinctive value, and which—like the inclusive "aim" of the organization it represents—will retain its pristine purity and all opposing forces. Every W and every Y should wear one of these truly symbolical pins.

COCKLE SHELLS AND SILVER BELLS.

A charming collection of short poems by Mrs. M. F. Butts, known to white-ribboners everywhere by her contributions in prose and verse to The Union Signal. It is a little volume which, with its nursery rhymes and lullabys, and its sunshine verses about roses and posies, and birds and babies, will delight the little ones.

Signal Notes.

In Paris the cabmen are not allowed to smoke pipes while driving.

For the benefit of those who would like to know upon what date Easter falls for the remaining years of this century, The Christian Work gives the following: 1895, April 14; 1896, April 5; 1897, April 18; 1898, April 10; 1899, April 2; 1900, April 15.

When the board of education of Ansonia, Conn., invited clergymen of all denominations to unite in the choice of a suitable opening prayer for the public schools the unanimous choice of every sect, Protestant and Catholic, was the Lord's Prayer as found in Matthew.

Texas is considering a bill to punish lynching by providing that the county in which the crime takes place shall pay to the legal heirs of the victim a sum not less than $3,000. This seems a very indirect and inefficient measure for the prevention of so heinous a crime.

The northwestern branch of the M. E. Woman's Foreign Missionary society celebrated its silver anniversary this spring. The society has now over one thousand auxiliaries; it has sent out sixty-two missionaries, and contributed a total of nearly one million dollars to missions.

Church union is progressing in Great Britain. The Free Church Congress just held in Birmingham brought forward the fact that the various evangelical churches represented have formed councils or federations in over one hundred and fifty British centers of population. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes was made president of the Congress for the ensuing year.

On the occasion of his eightieth birthday celebration at Clarendon Hall, Watford, England, recently, Dr. Frederick Richard Lees, the able temperance advocate, was presented with an address by the executive committee of the Scottish Permissive Bill and Temperance Association. Dr. Lees, through his writings, public speeches and travels, has done valiant service in the great cause.

Rev. H. Loomis, of Yokohama, writes The Christian about the encouraging progress of Bible distribution among the Japanese soldiery. Ninety thousand Gospels and Testaments have already been given out, and a copy of some portion of the Scriptures will be placed in the hands of every soldier and sailor in Japan. All this is done with the approval of the authorities, an encouraging sign for the future progress of Christianity in the Sunrise Land.

May promises to be a field month for temperance in Chicago, if the aims of the National Christian Citizenship League are carried out. Topics for Sabbath afternoon mass-meetings in different parts of the city are announced, and an enthusiastic round-up is planned for May 26, which all pastors are requested to make a grand day for temperance by sermons in church and special exercises in Sunday-school. All uniformed temperance societies are requested to be in evidence, and all W. C. T. Unions, Prohibition clubs and Young People's Societies asked to coöperate in every possible way.

The chief of police in an important American city has recently made a statement to the following effect: He says, "Intoxication has grown almost rusty from disuse in the past few years. I mean among our native population. Our books do not show more than three arrests a day for drunkenness and we have a large western city with over three hundred saloons in it. Only a few years ago we thought if we did not have from twelve to twenty arrests it was an off day. The fact is there is far less disorderly conduct and fewer bar room brawls than we had a few years back. I think there are two causes. One is the stringency of the times, the other is that public opinion has set strongly against the excessive use of intoxicants, and public opinion is mightier than law, indeed, mightier than anything else you can mention. I have talked with police chiefs from all over the country and the general opinion is that drunkenness has decreased in all sections, and although this is more marked among the well-to-do, drinking is not what it was among the laboring classes. Railroads, life insurance companies, mutual aid societies and many other organizations have refused membership and work to men who drink." This testimony comes from an unusual source and should hearten all good men and women in their efforts to promote a sober life.

MONTHLY READINGS.

The Bible Reading for May is by Mrs. Mollie McGee Snell, and the subject is

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

All Bible students have tasted of the rich spiritual food which is so abundant in this, the "universal prayer," and Mrs. Snell's exposition of it impresses us more than ever with its illimitable heights and depths, and will help us to comprehend more fully the heart significance of a prayer that is so often upon our lips.

The Responsive Reading for May deals with

and is prepared by the W. C. T. U. specialist in this department, Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, than whom no one is better qualified for the task. It is a valuable contribution to the literature of that important department, and every local superintendent should see to it that her union uses this reading. ### A Chance for Practical Genius.

The Press Claims Company, of Washington, D. C., has adopted a unique method of encouraging American inventors. Every month it makes an award of one hundred dollars in cash to the inventor having the most meritorious invention, who may apply for a patent upon the same through the medium of this great combination of American newspapers, effected for the protection of the American people against unscrupulous patent attorneys and claim agents at Washington. Three awards have been made already; one to C. L. Jordan, of Pellahatchie, Miss., one to J. H. Rogers, of Philadelphia, and the third to R. C. DeVault, of Philadelphia, Pa. Mr. DeVault lives at No. 1429 S. Juniper St., in the City of Brotherly Love, and his device, which receives the award of merit for the current calendar month, is a car fender, simple in construction, practical in operation, and no doubt of great commercial value. The Press Claims Company sends out an interesting little booklet called "Hints to Inventors," which the readers of this paper who are interested in obtaining patents would do well to secure. They can be obtained gratuitously by the readers of this paper who mention that fact, and who inclose a clipping of any advertisement of the Company which may appear therein. Backed up, as its attorneys are, by the influence of nearly two thousand of the most potent papers of the country, the Press Claims Company is now in a position to secure prompt and speedy justice for all classes of claimants against the General Government, and the readers of this paper who have this class of claims to prosecute would do well to communicate with Philip W. Avirett, Managing Attorney of the Company, 618 F Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The Illinois senate has favored pensions for teachers.

Japanese residents of Chicago held a grand peace celebration, April 25.

General Ballington Booth, of the Salvation Army, has become a citizen of the United States.

Sir Robert Hamilton, credited with being the first framer of the British home rule bill, is dead.

The well-known Canon Farrar, archdeacon of Westminster, has been appointed Dean of Canterbury.

The next $500 uniform liquor tax law signed by the governor of Michigan, April 25, goes in force in May.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Presbyterian Board of Missions of the Northwest has been held at Detroit, Mich.

Venezuela has agreed to pay Italy an indemnity of $100,000 for damages done to Italian property during the late civil war.

British troops have taken possession of Corinto, the principal port of entry for Nicaragua, in order to enforce payment of the indemnity.

THAT "organization is the watchword" of the present year in white-ribbon extension is conclusively proven by the latest report received in our office. The good news came on a postal card—that brevity of wit and wisdom—and read as follows: "Poyor Creek, Ind. Ter., April 23, 1895. Yesterday morning I organized a Somerset Y in the Cherokee Girls' Seminary at Tahlequah, Ind. Ter. Chooweescoowee, whose father was chief forty years, is completely captured by our work. I was entertained in the home of the late Mrs. Jane Stapler. (Signed) Clara C. Parrish." How the past and the present, the red man and his relentless enemy, the white race, are linked in such an organization as this! Blessings on the brave young organizer and the new Cherokee Y!

A NATIONAL conference of many political faiths has been called to meet at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, June 28 to July 4. The liquor problem, tariff, anti-monopoly, government ownership, civil service reform, tax and currency reform, woman suffrage and demonetization of both gold and silver, are some of the leading questions to be argued, the discussion to be open alike to those who are friendly or unfriendly to the measures proposed. All political reform organizations are invited to send delegates—one to every twenty members. "If possible," says the Voice, "without a violation of principle, the friends of political reform should enter the next presidential campaign united. No harm can come of a frank talk along these lines." We lend our hearty endorsement to the object of this conference and are glad to see the name of our leader on the call.

THE seventy-third birthday of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant was observed very generally in the United States, April 27. Undoubtedly, the largest celebration was in Chicago. Mrs. Grant, her daughter, Mrs. Sartoris, and her granddaughter were present at the Auditorium exercises Saturday evening, and received an ovation as they stepped into their flag-draped box. The leading orator of the occasion, Gen. O. O. Howard, made a special point of denying the current stories as to Grant's use of liquors. He denounced them as libelously untrue, and said: "He was free from every appearance of drinking during the war. His clear eye and natural complexion afforded unmistakable evidence against the prevailing falsehoods to which I have referred." Coming so unreservedly from such a pronounced total abstainer as General Howard, this denial should have great weight with temperance people.

THE old Crusade church is to be torn down! Mrs. Dr. McSurely, wife of the Presbyterian pastor, who, in her own language, "assisted at the birth and helped to rock the cradle of the Crusade," writes as follows: "The old historic church from which Mother Thompson (on the morning of December 24, 1873) led out the seventy original Crusaders, will soon be demolished, that a new and more modern building may take its place. Many white-ribboners have expressed a desire that in some way the old church be preserved. We know of no other way than by pictures and souvenirs, bricks, gavels, etc. If your readers have any wish in the matter they can address Miss Maria Stuart, Hillsboro, Ohio." We suggest that the original Crusade Band, organized at Cleveland, O., just after the National W. C. T. U. Convention in 1894, take this matter in charge, promising cordial coöperation from THE UNION SIGNAL. Let us hear from a score of Crusaders all at once.

SATURDAY, April 27, was a gala day for white-ribboners in Chicago. All the week previous, certain preparations, known only to the initiated, had been proceeding, but it was not until nine o'clock Saturday morning that the business people adjacent to the Temperance Temple realized that something unusual was about to take place. At that time groups of bright-faced children began to besiege the Temple entrances, asking eagerly where the "rehearsal" was to be. A good many of them, with their mothers and leaders, took the elevators and filled the Headquarters and business offices on the eleventh floor, but by 9:30 all had found their way to Willard Hall, and were soon divided into the Loyal Temperance Legion sections and addressed by Mrs. Helen G. Rice, who had come from Boston for a very important event. This event was nothing less than the dedication of Willard fountain, the children's Columbian gift to the city of Chicago. Our readers well know the history of this fountain and the necessary postponement in dedication. But this attempt—the third—proved to possess the legendary charm, and the exercises, to which the public was invited and accepted in large numbers, were successful in the fullest degree. Much of the preliminary work was done by Mrs. Katharine L. Stevenson, assisted by a local committee, of which Mrs. H. L. Clark was chairman. Willard Hall never looked prettier than on this occasion, for in addition to the beautiful gildings, pictures and statuary, were the gay-colored banners and flags of the Loyal Temperance Legion and the bright costumes of the children. Mrs. Rice was the presiding genius and she had oiled the wheels so skillfully that they went around right merrily. Her own address was a comprehensive review of the history of the fountain, closing with this eloquent paragraph: "As this maiden of the fountain stands thus for us in the very heart of this great city, where good and evil are so strangely intermingled, she will speak continually of that larger womanhood which is so rapidly coming to its full flower in this evening of the nineteenth century; that womanhood which, because it finds that 'the dearest spot on earth is home, sweet home,' goes forth to make the whole world homelike; that womanhood which has found its highest exemplification in our honored leader whose name this fountain bears, Frances E. Willard." Arthur Sanford, of Evanston, a boy of about twelve years, presented the fountain to the mayor of Chicago in a speech so neat that Aunt Jane will give it in full on the children's page next week. The mayor was not present, by reason of previous engagements, but Corporation Counsel Palmer represented him most acceptably, saying that it was with solemnity and difficulty that he met the acceptance of the beautiful and emblematic gift of thirty thousand children. "This is a cosmopolitan city," said Lawyer Palmer, "and it is fortunate that rude and foreign customs are to meet with such gentle and purifying influences as are typified by this fountain." Referring to the day as General Grant's birthday, he said: "Glad am I that the children of to-day are taught to go forward, not with bullets and arms, but with emblems of love, instead of hate, which, under the W. C. T. U., will yet win the world." Little Dorothy Horning, granddaughter of Mrs. Barker, in a very taking rhyme, presented the care of the fountain to the Illinois Humane Society. This will also be given on the children's page. The acceptance for the society was made by a member, Mr. J. T. Dale, who declared that while the Humane Society had received some precious souvenirs, none were more precious than this living emblem of the divine principle of love and helpfulness. Beautiful greetings were read from Miss Willard and Miss Gordon, the former by Mrs. Clark and the latter by Miss Ada M. Melville, editor of The Young Crusader. These greetings will be published next week. The formal program was completed by prayer by Mrs. Carse, the children were marched out of the hall in orderly fashion and around the Temple block, carrying their banners and beating their drums. Although not in a liquor district, in their short march of ten minutes they passed, by actual count, thirteen saloons, waving their world-wide legend, "Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up." Returning to the fountain they quickly filled the open space guarded by a squad of policemen, and, at their leader's signal, broke forth into their favorite song, "Saloons must go." Ere they finished the third verse many voices of the thronging crowd in street and office windows joined in the refrain:

"With prayer and work, the world we'll show, Saloons, saloons, saloons must go!"

At the close of the hearty singing a tiny blonde maiden, in blue dress and red cap, and a little boy in sailor costume, drew the satin ribbons that held the American and Spanish flags over the fountain, and then the bronze maiden, from whose wrists hung silver cups attached to white ribbons, stood revealed to the public. Immediately the water gushed up into the outstretched cup, and the mission of Willard fountain was auspiciously inaugurated.

IN MAY.

BY LUELLA CLARK.

When winds were bleak and skies were gray,
And fields were heaped with snow,
How could we think the breath of May
Would change the sad world so?

But now the swallows on the wing
Bring summer gladness near;
In every lane the thrushes sing
And blue-birds pipe their cheer.

Each year the miracle we see
Of bud and leaf and bloom,
The life renewed of turf and tree
From winter's darkened tomb.

Take courage, then, O doubting soul,
No day so dark and drear
But holds amid its dearth and dole
Promise of gladness near.

The seed thou sowest may slumber long,
How long thou canst not know;
But some sweet May-time, glad with song,
The precious germs will grow.

And nursed by summer's warmth and cheer,
And fed by dew and rain,
They shall, some autumn, far or near,
Yield store of ripened grain.

REVEREND BALAAM BULL'S NIGHTMARE.
In Five Chapters.

BY JEAN CALVIN.

CHAPTER III.

"It is now the twenty-fifth century, and we are to describe the historical changes which take us out of the male's ministry of the Word into that of the woman's," continued Theodora Parker.

"Is this woman insane?" asked Balaam Bull of the stranger at his side. "No," replied the stranger shortly, for he was eager not to lose a word.

"The masculine ministry, as the parables imply, began first—and it lasted nearly two thousand years. The historical events which led to its overthrow was a wonderful fulfilment of the prophecy recorded in the twelfth chapter of Revelations, 'The earth helped the woman.' The male had, up to this period, claimed his supremacy over woman and set forth as his charter of rights, 'Thy desire shall be unto thy husband and he shall rule over thee,' quite ignoring the fact that God had described that relation as the one of Cain toward Abel as well as of Eve toward Adam; so that if woman was appointed to meet all its fulfilment by God, and the male appointed by God to see to its fulfilment, then, by the same sort of reasoning, God appointed Abel to be murdered, and appointed Cain to do the murdering."

Balaam Bull moved uneasily in his seat. He was perplexed beyond measure by the woman preacher's wild inaccuracy as to dates, and angered by her constant reiteration of the phrase, "women and males," "women and males." But for all that, her magnetic voice again engaged all his attention. Theodora Parker continued:

"Now common sense should have taught the male that there could not long exist a spirit of love between two so unequally yoked together that what was arrogated as the privileges of one was the curse of the other. But the male would not change his disposition because of his love of power, and woman could not change so long as she was held in subjection. The first-born son of such an unequal fellowship was a murderer, and children of unions based on Adam's type for generations after were but little better, and they called this old Adam type of yoked-up dominion and subjection 'holy matrimony.'"

"This woman," said Balaam Bull to the stranger, "ought not to make these sweeping denunciations. Many women have counted it all joy to minister to the domestic comfort of their noble husbands, and while, to be sure, the right to have dominion over the woman is God-given, yet for the most part a kind man would be ashamed to exercise that dominion. Now my wife, I have often heard her say, has all the rights"—"Hush!" said the stranger, "Listen!"

Continued the preacher, "But there was another power at work beside this perverted scriptural interpretation to keep woman in subjection. It was a common saying in those days that because a woman could not fight, therefore she could not vote—could not have any part in governing herself. So that subjection was preached to woman both by the godless and the religious. In fact, the doctrine of 'might makes right' in the ungodly world so exactly accorded with the teaching within the churches, as to lead to the grave suspicion in the minds of all students of history that there had been a perversion of Scripture teaching to please the ungodly who had crept inside the church. For the theologian and libertine worked in strikingly parallel lines; the theologian to justify subjection, the libertine to work it out in its most repulsive forms of crime. Nothing suited the life of the libertine better than the theological dogma of the subjection of woman.

"The truth is, subsequent history plainly indicates that the deification of the male—which is the heart's core of heathenism—had left its mark on the character of males, who were nominal Christians, and at the bottom of the dogma of the subjection of women in the nineteenth century was the exaltation of physical force as the only practical working power even in the church during that age of materialism. This point is not hard to prove. There broke out in the year 1894, a fierce war between Japan and a country then called China. This war from its very beginning was urged on by the eulogies of many who were considered the best specimens of Christian manhood that age produced, although it was well known that on the part of the Japanese it was a most brutal murder of the defenseless, and no sufficient excuse could be given for their beginning the war. More than that, many of the missionaries who had gone among these peoples, professedly to preach the gospel of peace and goodwill to men, urged on the war. And incredible as it may seem, the religious press of both America and England, or the most part praised the 'valor' of these conquering Japanese. One church paper of that day declared, 'war is the handmaiden of the gospel.' As a fair sample of the literature of that day on the war, I will read you what appeared in a New York periodical which professed to exist for the express purpose of promoting the highest possible phases of spiritual experience."

Taking up a volume of history the speaker read:

"'The greatest hindrance to the progress of the gospel in China is the supreme self-consciousness of the Chinese. Their crushing and humiliating defeat before the Japanese may lead her to open her doors to the same influences that have brought such strength and success to her successful rival. We cannot help thinking that it is the most important providential movement of the present century. Surely the children of God should be found lifting up their hearts in ceaseless and earnest prayer to God that He will overturn and overturn until the highest results of Christianity and the coming of Christ shall be brought about in China.'

"It will be observed that this quotation, when its meaning is analyzed, amounts to this: First, warfare is attributed to the influence of the sort of 'Christianity' taught to the Japanese in that day by a masculine ministry; second, warfare is prescribed as the proper power to be used in humbling a nation so that it might, like a little child, enter the Kingdom; third, murder is a 'providential movement' and God is to be besought to keep the murderous spirit alive in the Japanese through which to overturn until the 'highest results of Christianity' are wrought; fourth, the sword is prescribed for Christianity as it was for Mohammedanism, as the best way of preparing the Kingdom—for the coming of the Prince of Peace! No reasonable person can fail to see, in short, that the power relied upon by the writer of this article, is the power not of the Holy Spirit but of brute force. It causes the head to reel and the heart to grow faint even to think of it!

"Shortly after this war broke out Russia interfered with Japan's growing power in the Orient. Then Great Britain interfered with Russia, and Japan, at the mercy of two such mighty nations, appealed to the United States for military help, which was granted. Then the Mohammedan power in India tried to throw off the British yoke. This stirred up those of that fanatical religion in every part of Europe and Asia,—in fact in an incredibly short time all the East was bristling with bayonets. The European powers had been sowing the wind for years with their standing armies, and now they were to reap the whirlwind in the most remarkable series of wars that ever cursed this poor earth; war succeeded war for a full century.

"Now the time had come when the true spirit of this spurious religion, which exalts physical force, began to show itself in all its repulsiveness. The males could no longer keep themselves interested in peaceful pursuits. Even the boys could be held in the churches only as their teachers substituted drills in murderous motions with firearms for lessons from the catechisms and Bible; and women were accounted of no worth but to bring forth male children. For the 'Red Dragon'—military power—stood before 'the woman which was ready to be delivered for to devour her child as soon as it was born,' just as the book of Revelations prophesies.

"At last the men shut their Bibles, vacated their pulpits, left their universities and colleges and went to war. They wished to close the churches and schools until they returned, but the women rebelled at this. Then our American women set to work a revolution. Whose heart has not thrilled with enthusiasm over the story of how a host of women, led on by Polly Carp and St. Augusta gathered up all those abominable expositions of idolatry—called the Greek and Latin classics—and consigned them to the flames! They spared only the Greek lexicons, Septuagint and New Testaments. Following their example the English, French, German and other European women undertook this same work in their countries, that there might never more be taught the youth of the nations the horrible doctrine that war was a virtue. 'And now,' said Martha Luther, in her day when all this mighty work had been accomplished, 'let us have an English translation of the Word worthy of this twentieth century,—which will do full justice to the teachings of the Old and New Testament on the question of war, of Bible wines and of the position of women, for we all know that while the sacred text itself, in the original being the work of inspired writers is clear on all these points, the natural prejudices of male interpreters have left the teachings somewhat obscure at many points.'

"They builded better than they knew! and the result is an English translation used for two or three centuries. It was concluded best to alter many words that had led to misconception. To insert the word 'person' for 'man' in all places where the masculine sex was not specially designated, and 'any one' for 'any man'; likewise 'no one' and 'some one' for 'no man' and 'some man,' etc. The effect upon the mind of the reader after these changes had been made was truly marvelous. For nineteen hundred years the male minister had been preaching salvation for every 'man' from the penalty of sin. If asked in general what he meant by the term man, he said he meant all. But if asked more particularly as regarded woman's place in the scheme of salvation, it was evident that the male minister did not quite mean all. Woman was told that she, because she fell first, was to live perpetually under the penalty of sin, which was, for her, 'thy desire shall be unto thy husband, and he shall rule over thee.' The word of the Lord was quoted, 'No man can serve two masters.' When asked, But who does 'man' mean in this passage? the male theologian would reply, 'It means all, every one.' 'Very well, then, do you say that no woman can serve two masters?' 'Oh, no! not exactly,' the male theologian would reply, 'she must have two masters, God and her husband.' So this jugglery with the word man went on. 'Man' included woman when a threat or punishment for sin was prescribed by Holy Writ, and 'man' excluded woman when a promise of enlarged liberty in the gospel was set forth. In truth, the male ministry had indeed planted the seed 'in his own garden.' The law was preached for the woman, the gospel for the male, and all the efforts of women to set themselves right were defeated until they expunged the English translation of its constant and unnecessary reiteration of the word man, man, man."

"Oh, bosh!" said Balaam Bull, aloud, "do you, sir, accept such mischievous teachings as this?" The stranger nudged him to keep quiet.

REFORM PROGRESS FOR FIRST THIRD OF 1895.

I.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

In these days most of the legislation and religion and reform is crowded into the first third of the year. For this reason and because May 1st is the world's labor day and because labor reform is now the center of the whole circle of reforms, that day is an appropriate time for a review of sociological progress.

There is nothing to which Americans give more attention than to the gathering and reading of news and there is nothing which they do less skilfully. Only those who have access to many papers and make a study of them know the most important news, and its significance is not even manifest to them until they or others have crystallized the miscellaneous facts into classified and orderly history. This we seek to do in the brief notes of this and following articles which show the chief reform gains and losses of the year thus far.

BALLOT REFORM.

The formation of a widely extended Ballot Rights League in the South with a view to the reform of state politics, a movement supported by leading Democrats, Populists and Republicans of that section, is quite as important as the more noticed municipal civic revival in the North. Political tricks devised for the use of whites against blacks having been used by Populists against Democrats in one state, and by Democrats against Populists in another, the seriousness of such attacks upon the rights of suffrage is seen in a new light, and ballot reform, which had previously carried the whole North, is likely now to win a solid South, which is a subject for rejoicing, however occasioned. Michigan has won the championship for hostility to ballot reform by a bi-partisan attack of the two leading parties on the two parties at the other end of the line in a law, since sustained by the State Supreme Court (we hope the National Supreme Court may reverse its decision) forbidding the placing of the same name upon two party tickets, thus outlawing fusion candidates, which is certainly neither just nor wise. In some states improvements on existing ballot reform laws are pending, and in more are needed, especially stricter limitations of campaign expenditures. Since New Bedford has discovered that by paying many nominal "workers" for a municipal ticket $5 in case of victory, only $2 otherwise, the secret vote can be bought by making victory of personal advantage to such voters.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

This reform should be greatly promoted by the "horrible example" New York city has afforded through the four months past as before, of the cancerous curse of patronage to the body politic. Two of the greatest of non-partisan reform victories, those of New York city and state, have been nullified by a Republican "boss," who refuses to allow his henchmen, the state rulers, to pass the reform bills asked for by the non-partisan "Committee of Seventy," that represents all elements of good citizenship in New York city, unless his services are engaged by a "retainer" of patronage. Even if the statements of the open letter which the agent of this boss has published in his behalf are true, it is only a confession that his coöperation in reform was rendered only on a promise of patronage.

He does not charge that Mayor Strong is not administering his office efficiently, but only that he is not keeping alleged promises of patronage. If any good citizen does not see in this whole affair the proof that the spoils system is an unmitigated curse, his eyes must be like those of mammoth cave fishes, dried up by lack of use. The whole scene also pictures to the world the fact that spoilsmen, not statesmen, fill our elective as well as appointive offices. Cornelius N. Bliss, Elihu Root, Joseph H. Choate, Rev. Dr. Josiah Strong, Anthony Comstock, Wm. F. Round, Rev. Dr. J. H. Ecob, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, Mrs. Emilie D. Martin and others, who ought to be lawmakers themselves, are at work in the third house, trying to persuade petty politicians to do their sworn duty in restraining vice and promoting the public welfare. That civil service reform is not fully applied in New York state politics even with Republicans in full power was made vividly apparent by a letter received by the writer a few days ago from one who signed himself "Clerk of Senate Litarature Committee," saying he had sent me a "coppy" of the proposed education bill, of the need of which the clerk furnished the "horrible example." On the background of the alliance of New York's "boss" and legislature in defense of spoils, Chicago's triumphant vote for complete civil service in all its city departments stands out like a resplendent illumination at midnight. On the whole, civil service reform is gaining in the nation and in states and cities, but the reform is still too much left to capitalists and scholars. Labor reformers and woman suffragists should see that the people would be much more ready to extend politics to the new fields of enlarged suffrage and government ownership if such extension were to be preceded or accompanied by the removal of spoils and ignorance.

CATHOLIC QUESTION.

The Roman Catholic riot in Savannah, by which an expriest was unwisely as well as unjustly denied free speech, was one of many instances where the friends of a cause have made themselves its worst foes by a lawless defence. The local clergy of the Roman Catholics so declared, in substance, but Cardinal Gibbons has been criticised for speaking too apologetically of the riot, which Savannah authorities and citizens resented and subdued. Similar riots have, however, occurred elsewhere since then, and hardly better were the riotous words of low abuse poured upon the Pennsylvania house of representatives by Bishop McGovern, of Harrisburg, on the passage of the law against public school teachers wearing a religious garb, against which not only Protestants but also the Catholic Citizen of Milwaukee has protested as "sectarian instruction" by symbols, and so both unconstitutional and unwise, a precedent for other sectarian proselyting in the public schools, which should unify our citizenship, not divide it. On the other hand, we condemn the kindred spirit shown by Manitoba Protestants in proposing lawless resistance to the order of the British Privy Council that the abolished Roman Catholic schools shall be renewed and supported by the state. The proper remedy is lawful agitation, which in a Protestant empire certainly can not be said to be hopelessly biased against the just claim of Manitoba that public schools should no more be sectarian than partisan.

CHARITY REFORM.

Calling at the national capital of charity, the United Charities Building of New York city, I learned that the Society for Improving the Condition of the Poor were to adopt and enlarge the happy thought of Mayor Pingree, of Detroit, to use vacant city lots as garden plots for the unemployed. New York will not only allow men out of employment and widows with boys able to work to plant and raise garden truck for themselves in many of the seventeen thousand vacant city lots, but will also employ and pay day by day many who can not wait for the crop. Mr. Chas. D. Kellogg, of the Charity Organization Society, told us that its Loan Bureau had compelled several pawnbrokers to come down to its own reasonable rate of interest, one per cent per month. It was the writer's privilege to hear a paper on charity by Mrs. Josephine Shaw Lowell at the same recent visit to that building. She is inclined to believe that all relief giving might best be left to individuals, and organized charities devote themselves wholly to the higher charity that helps the poor to help themselves.

THE JAPANESE WOMAN.

I.

BY ADELAIDE DAUHADAY.

"The heart in thee is the heart of all."

"One blood rolls uninterruptedly in endless circulation through all men, as the water of the globe is all one sea, and truly seen its tide is one."

What does leisurely journeying around the world, or prolonged living in a foreign land teach us but that the great heart of humanity beats alike under all skies, and among "all sorts and conditions of men." Alike, and yet with a difference, for racial distinctions, national sentiment, and personal peculiarities modify the outward manifestations of our common nature, and we are what nature and environment have made us. In America there is individuality; emotions, aspirations, and faculties are directed and trained, not repressed. In the East cast iron customs, old traditions, the contempt with which woman as woman is regarded under all ethnic religions, has crushed out independence of thought, stifled aspiration and dwarfed the entire nature. To understand the surroundings and influences that mold the character of Japanese women, the most favorably situated of all in Oriental lands, let us trace the history of a little girl of the higher middle class from babyhood to wifehood, and contrast her environment with those living where a pure form of Christianity prevails, for it is only by Christianity that woman has been emancipated from oppression and degradation, until practically, in all enlightened countries, she occupies a place of equal freedom and honor with man. When the Japanese baby girl enters upon her earthly existence, she is not unwelcome, especially if she be the first child, although a son would be preferred. The first years of her life are passed very much the same as that of babies generally, excepting that owing to the crowded condition of the cities, which allows but a few feet of garden in the rear of each house, her nursery is the public street. The open street life has its advantages, for in spite of the bad-smelling drains, the air is probably purer than within doors, and she gets the sunshine as she could not in her home, as most Japanese houses are built so as to exclude sunshine.

It is an interesting psychological question as to what extent the varied panorama of the street aids in the development of her intellect, for she sees a great deal of the world as she looks upon it over her mother's shoulder, or, as is oftener the case, views it from the back of some child not very much larger than herself. She soon becomes a red-cheeked, jolly little maiden, often precocious, rather afraid of her father, but a small tyrant over her mother, who, if she had any ideas about the government of children, which she has not, would yield every point rather than have the quiet of the master of the house disturbed. Besides, she is living constantly under the eye of her mother-in-law, a lady of the old school. But the discipline of life begins for our little girl. In winter the house is cold and dark, and her few toys and picture books are marvels of ugliness, big-headed distortions, or grotesque figures of animals. Her dolls are safely packed away for the annual festival sacred to little girls, but her motherly heart is satisfied with a roll of cloth tied on her back in imitation of the real baby that in a year or two she will probably be carrying about.

Where the home is one of poverty, food is scarce and coarse, yet generally a considerable part of the pittance coming in for the family support is wasted in sake (rice wine). Where means are more abundant there are very often other children in the household. These are sometimes cousins, as the patriarchal customs of Japan lead the sons to remain in the ancestral home. If there are daughters only, young men are adopted to marry them who take the family name and live under the paternal roof. But quite as often in unchristian homes of wealth these children claim the same father, but there are different mothers residing in the same house; therefore heartaches, anger and jealousy destroy the true home feeling, and the house becomes merely a place of shelter, with no tender associations clustering about it. It is difficult for the Japanese to comprehend the depth and purity of the sentiment, "Home, sweet home."

Besides, as a rule, changes of residence are very frequently made, so strong attachment for the native province seems to take the place of home affection. To us with our pronounced individuality and love of independence, the family remaining a unit, all personal matters being settled by family conclave, married sons, themselves fathers, submitting to dictation as during childhood, daughters disposed of in marriage according to the decision of the household with scant, if any, respect paid to individual preferences, divorce taking place at the demand of parents, these things would be an insupportable tyranny. A young man of my acquaintance who was sincerely attached to his wife and little child yielded to his mother's command and divorced her, although the parting was with tears on both sides. Many Japanese chafe under their bonds, but there is a sort of fatalism prevailing in the country, a feeling that it is useless to struggle against manifest destiny, so the saying constantly on the lips of the people is, "Shikata ga nai," (there is no help for it).

Several years ago a father when dying made his large family of sons and daughters promise they would never separate, would remain under one roof, and continue his business, that of the manufacture of tabi, the cotton foot mitten. They continued loyal to this promise, although it changed the lives and interfered with the prospects of nearly all the family, and the business afforded but scant support to so many. A daughter, one of our school-girls, when calling to take leave, after saying it was a death-blow to all her hopes of getting an education, could only sob out, "Shikata ga nai."

During the absence, or upon the death of a father, the oldest son becomes the head of the household. This is usually a change for the worse, as his love is not so unselfish as the father's, and he is often young and inexperienced. I know of one family consisting of mother and grown sisters controlled by a boy of fifteen. Two young men of strong intellectual aspirations, confiding their troubles, said, "There is plenty of money in the family to educate us, but our older brother has decided upon a certain business for each of us, and says we already know enough for the duties of each." Another said, "I have been secretly studying Christianity, and believe it to be the truth, but dare not go to church as my brother is so violently opposed." Often a high-spirited young man feels tempted to rebel, but instead of defying one individual he would have the censure of a large circle of relatives of three and sometimes four generations to brave.

Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Among the women of power whom it was my good fortune to know as a consequence of our sojourn in Boston last winter, the name of Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton stands well at the front. Mrs. Moulton is undoubtedly among living women our leading American poet. Her tuneful lines have gone into all of our best homes; her tender sympathies have warmed the hearts of millions. She has been called the Mrs. Barrett Browning of America, and her books entitled, "In the Garden of Dreams," "Swallow Flights" and "Poems," have been spread before the home folk of our nation in the newspapers of many years past. Mrs. Moulton has been a familiar figure in London literary circles ever since 1876, when the late Lord Houghton gave a breakfast in her honor at which Robert Browning, Jean Ingelow, George Eliot, Thomas Hardy, Gustave Doré and other celebrities were present. Her publishers are Macmillan & Co., which fact fixes her literary status across the water. Even the Atheneum, one of the most critical magazines, has said of her poems that they "exhibit delicate and rare beauty, marked originality and perfection of style, and what is still better, they impress us with a subtle and vivid imagination and that spontaneous feeling which is the essence of lyrical poetry." But perhaps the highest praise comes from her humbler readers who have said again and again that her poems "seem to put into words all the dumb, unutterable thoughts of their hearts."

Mrs. Moulton's family was originally English. She was born at Pomfret, in Massachusetts, and was an only child. She was passionately devoted to her mother, who was to her as "prophet, priest and king," and when she lost her mother three years ago it was a severance that seemed to carry with it so much of her best self that she has never quite recovered. Encouraged by this blessed mother's sympathy, Mrs. Moulton had recognition as an author in her early girlhood. Six weeks after she left boarding school she married Mr. William Moulton, then a well-known editor, and went to live in Boston, where her home has been from that day to this, except that she comes to England almost yearly for a visit with her many literary comrades. She has a deeply religious nature, but in her complex temperament a spirit of intellectual skepticism is combined with the utmost longing for the light and life of the gospel. Although she does not count herself a Christian, her writings are permeated by the best spirit of New England faith and practice, and one can but hope that for her earnest soul, if not before, "at eventide it shall be light."

Mrs. Moulton is a handsome woman, of fine proportions and stately bearing and one of the best conversationalists to whom I have ever listened. She has a sympathetic quality of mind without which no talker can be helpful or entertaining. Her wide outlook and varied vicissitudes have made her a true woman of the world in the best sense, and if there were space I should be glad to record here some of the many good and bright things that I heard her say at various dinner parties, tête-a-têtes and in her own home, where on Friday of each week she receives her literary, artistic and philanthropic friends. At the banquet given by the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., in honor of Lady Henry Somerset, one of the most charming features was the "Rondeau," which was printed in THE UNION SIGNAL at the time.

WILLARD HALL NOONTIDE LINKS.

He was only one of the great throng hurrying by, but full on his ear fell the songs of the noontide hour.

He came in and sat through all the service, and to the gentle woman sitting by the door, who offered him a pledge card he said, "Once I was loved and honored, a leader in the Epworth League, but now! Oh my God! the drink, the drink."

Great tears, bitter tears, such as strong men weep, rolled down his cheekr, but he signed the pledge, knelt and prayed for himself, and passed on, out into the world.

. . . . . .

They stood in a quiet corner, two saintly women with arms close clasped about a younger woman, a waif from the street. Poor tired child, how tired no one but God knows.

I heard her say, "Oh, Jesus, help me," and then I hurried away, fearful lest I might mar the scene, knowing full well that it was "holy ground."

. . . . . .

They were evidently from the country—two dear old ladies with snowy cap frills beneath their old-time bonnets—but they lingered long in Willard Hall entrance reading the gold inscriptions on its gleaming sides, and then joined the company that gathers from day to day at the noontide hour to find rest for body and spirit in this quiet place.

"Blessed assurance, Jesus is mine," over and over again they sang the dear old song. Now loud, now soft. It was supplication, triumph, rest, the spell of it was on all hearts, and Jesus Himself was there.

IN MEMORIAM—MR. DEMOREST.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—All classes of temperance workers in the world sincerely mourn the recent death of one of their leaders, W. Jennings Demorest of New York city. Nothing has ever made so profound an impression upon the young people of the Old Bay State, as no one loved him more than they. His name is a household word. Over five thousand of our brightest youth have engaged in contests for the various grades of medals he so generously gave them. These youthful, but dead in earnest prohibition orators have appealed to audiences aggregating over two million citizens of Massachusetts. Mr. Demorest was always welcome and the center of all attraction when present at contests for the higher grades of medals held in Massachusetts.

His last visit was at the Diamond Medal Contest for all New England, held at the Northeast Chautauqua Sunday-School Assembly, South Framingham, Mass., July 13, 1894. No one present on that occasion will soon forget the great interest he manifested in the representatives of the various states, as they so earnestly expressed his sentiment in their splendid and almost pathetic appeals to the large audience to "lend a hand" in this great work. With voice broken by deep emotion, he presented the diamond medal to Miss Elizabeth Randall, of Attleboro, the successful contestant, in "the best contest he had ever attended." He was proud of the young people of Massachusetts and expressed himself personally many times to me, as greatly pleased with their splendid work and assistance given him in medal contests.

He has gone from us; his work is done; but oh, what a grand record he has left, in trying "to make the world better" through this one agency alone!

Over forty-two thousand medals awarded; over two hundred and fifty thousand of the flower of the youth of the world engaging in this grand reform, and they in turn appealing to audiences aggregating over fifteen million people of the best class of citizens. Who can estimate the influence of this grand feature of temperance work?

I am confident no person in the world has ever reached so many young people, individual hearts, lives and homes, or helped so many to decide once for all their position of "right against wrong," thus establishing them in the principle of truth and righteousness, as W. Jennings Demorest, by these same medal contests, and eternity alone will reveal his good work.

All nationalities have been included in his benefaction, no one excluded on account of creed, sect, sex or color; his work and ambition was to lend a hand to the weak and oppressed, and help lift up humanity nearer to God. His hand was outstretched, his purse open and his heart overflowing with love to all the oppressed of all nations, from the drink curse.

His work accomplished is the best monument he possibly can have. It will stand longer than a shaft of marble, for "though dead he yet speaketh."

"What next?" is the question asked me by the young people of Massachusetts. "Who will take his place?" "Is the good work to cease?"

Most assuredly I must say, No, this grand work must and shall go on. He has done what he could, and his message (with that of John B. Gough) to every young man of Massachusetts is, "Keep your record clean," and (with Lucy Stone) to all the young people, "Make the world better." Take a firm and unyielding, uncompromising stand against the legalized liquor traffic, and having done all, stand, with influence, example, voice, prayer, work, and at the ballot box—for prohibition.

Oh, young men and young women of not only Massachusetts, but of the whole world, send out in reply with loud voice, that everybody may hear, "I am but one and cannot do everything, but I can do something. What I can do, I ought to do, and what I ought to do, with the help of God, I will do—for prohibition. Here I stand, I can do no other, God helping me. Amen."

NEW YORK NOTES.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Prohibition workers everywhere will be encouraged to know that the magnificent work our late leader, W. Jennings Demorest, has been doing will not cease with his death. His wife and children will continue the medal contests, The Constitution and other lines of work to which he was devoted. I suspect the prohibition workers of the nation have never known what a united family of Prohibitionists Mr. Demorest's family has been. Mrs. Demorest is and always has been deeply interested in prohibition, W. C. T. U. and charitable work, and Mr. Demorest's two sons have always agreed with him politically and sympathized with his activity and generosity in behalf of the cause.

The Ainsworth bill, the provisions of which I described in my last letter, has been reported favorably from the committee on literature in the senate, referred to the committee of the whole and recommitted for a hearing, retaining its place in the committee of the whole. It should be mentioned that this bill has already passed the house. A hearing was held on the 4th inst. Charles R. Skinner, the new superintendent of public instruction, led the opposition. Mrs. Mary H. Hunt replied in advocacy of the bill in one of the most effective speeches she ever made. White-ribboners could not conceal their pride in the successful manner in which she replied to the arguments of the state superintendent.

Speaking of the need of a mandatory law or the addition of a penalty to the law of 1884 requiring instruction along temperance lines in the public schools Mrs. Hunt sums up the situation in this state as follows:

"The need of a mandatory law is at once apparent, when you discover, as I have, that New York state schools are not teaching what the law of 1884 requires shall be taught on this subject. Superintendent Charles R. Skinner of the department of public instruction admitted this while making a recent argument against the bill, when he confined his statistics to those parts of the state—for the most part in the country districts,—where it has been taught and is being taught after a fashion. He did not call attention to the way it is being taught in the cities of the state where the population is densest, the foreign born citizens more numerous, and the necessity for temperance instruction greatest. He did not, for he could not. To-day, with a law declaring that it shall be taught, there is not a line of the curriculum or a moment of the school year devoted to the subject in New York, Brooklyn or Buffalo. The law is not observed in the three cities whose combined population is 100,000, more than half the population of the state. A penalty is needed to make the law operative. As long as there is no penalty it is observed or not as the people choose. No punishment follows transgression, and it is both transgressed and neglected."

During the past month fully a half-dozen liquor bills, designed to give liquor dealers greater privileges, have been introduced in the assembly. It is useless to describe them as there is absolutely no chance of the passage of any of them. The Brewers' Journal says, "The legislature has been flooded with petitions and addresses, and bored with delegations from prohibition localities, would-be reformers, and so-called temperance societies to such an extent that the probability of the adoption of a rational excise bill for the sale of malt and spirituous drinks on Sundays is now out of the question." The Wine and Spirit Gazette says practically the same thing. Morris Tekulsky, lobbyist of the liquor dealers, concedes as much. It now looks as if the state would not be disgraced with a Sunday saloon law, but it should be borne in mind that the liquor dealers have not entirely given up the struggle yet although they concede defeat.

The Brooklyn law and enforcement society is energetically prosecuting its work to compel officials to enforce the law. The executive committee, of which Rev. Dr. A. C. Dixon is chairman, in a recent address, said:

"The committee on excise has given special attention to collecting legal proof that the excise laws are violated. The difficulties in the way of a successful prosecution of an excise case in Brooklyn are very great. It was the purpose of the present law, it seems, to increase these difficulties, but, notwithstanding this, we find that it is possible to convict before juries in our police courts. Our attorneys have secured five convictions, three of them by juries, and we have sufficient evidence to convict in nearly one hundred other cases. It is not the purpose of this society, however, to form itself into a new police department, for the arrest and conviction of law-breakers, but to compel the officials paid by the people, who have sworn to execute the law, to do their duty."

New York, City. MRS. C. B. HOPKINS.

THE NEED OF SYMPATHY AND HELP FROM CHRISTIAN WOMEN TO THEIR ARMENIAN SISTERS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Mr. Herant M. Kiretchjian, a graduate of Robert College, Constantinople, who was the delegate from the Armenian church to the Parliament of Religions, and who has a license signed by several bishops of the Episcopal church, spoke recently most eloquently and movingly at Bryn Mawr College and at the Episcopal church in Bryn Mawr regarding the outrages inflicted by the Turks on the Armenians. After hearing and talking with Mr. Kiretchjian I feel more strongly than ever that it is the plain duty of all Christian women to do whatever may lie in their power for the help and protection of the women and children who are, because of the incredible supineness of Christian governments, daily and hourly exposed to a possible repetition of the unspeakable horrors of the Sassoun (and other) massacres.

Those who desire to get a clear idea of the terrible situation are advised to read "The Armenian Crisis in Turkey," by Frederic Greene, M. A., who was for several years a resident in Armenia. This book, just issued, has an introduction by Dr. Josiah Strong, also a moving appeal signed by prominent persons, our own Miss Willard among the number. It is published by G. P. Putnam's Sons and is sold for fifty cents. It can be ordered of the Phil-Armenian Association of America, 424 West 57th St., New York city, or of me, a few copies being in my hands.

By paying a fifty-cent fee any one can join the Phil-Armenian Association. Those who do so will receive leaflets telling of the progress of the movement. The object of the association is "to present the cause of Armenia to the civilized world, and induce the powers of Europe to keep their pledge and establish the security of life, honor, and property in Armenia." Mrs. Julia Ward Howe is president of the Boston branch of the association. Superintendents of the department of mercy who may feel moved to assist in this Christian and humane work will be pursuing a course in full harmony with our aim, which is to uphold and promote universally the observance of the divine law of mercy.

A CORRECTION.

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—I wish to correct a mistake made by myself in giving the Age of Consent Law, as recently passed by the legislature of this state. It passed the house for twenty-one years, but meeting with great opposition in the senate, only passed that body for eighteen years; it yet awaits the governor's signature, which will probably be given, as one of the planks in the platform of the party that elected him was to raise this age.

Mosca, Col. SOPHIA N. REDDIN JENKINS.

DEAR SISTERS:—I want to thank every one who has cheered our weekly council by pertinent word or awakening question, and to ask you to continue in the good way. If some one has added her quota and failed to find a response from week to week, I can only crave her patience, for not an item is lost and all that can possibly be fitted into our needs most assuredly will be.

---

Here is a good word that is not only encouraging, but suggestive for others to do likewise. Our sister, Mrs. Dorcas J. Spencer, writes: "This is not a special difficulty but a that I am bringing you, and it comes in the line of the greatest achievements of locals. One of our women, having made her own way and earned a reputation as a specialist by lecturing for the W. C. T. U. in the public schools on 'The effects of narcotics and stimulants upon the human system,' has been appointed a 'special teacher' by the San Francisco board of education, in that specialty, on a salary from the board of education. Her duties are to give lectures in the various class rooms, going constantly from one to another, as the principals shall arrange."

SPECIAL SUCCESS

"This is given as precedent," adds Mrs. Spencer, at the close of her letter. We hope that it may have a wide following.

Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, Washington, D. C., is so kind as to send us out of her own experience most valuable testimony and practical hints. The following might well be inserted in italics:

"Every individual member should consider herself a recruiting agent to enlist new members. She should keep always at hand pledge cards, or tablet, leaflets and white ribbon. She should carry ever on her heart a burden of love and anxiety for the prosperity of our great society. Why, sisters, think of what the W. C. T. U. has been to this nation; what her influence has been in millions of homes; what her every success has meant to the children; what a mighty force she has been in the development of woman and the uplifting of humanity; what her record will be in history and what will be the unspeakable influence of her labors upon future generations; think of the power of her evangelical work; think of her standing upon the topmost heights of sublime devotion to principle and right, the target for the jeers, the hatred and the curses of all the powers of darkness; think of all these things, and then say can it be possible that you will miss a single opportunity to enlist a sister in our ranks? Oh, women, have a glorious pride in our organization, and do strong personal work to increase our numbers.

"So much—so much of the prosperity of a local union depends upon the attitude toward our organization of the local pastor or pastors. A pastor can be a tower of strength to a local union or he can be a slow fever, sapping its strength, draining its vitality and causing its death unless it possess unconquerable stamina. Undoubtedly one reason, and a very patent reason, why many pastors are not more favorably inclined toward the W. C. T. U. is because they know little about it from a W. C. T. U. standpoint. Local unions in city or country should see to it that pastors are supplied with THE UNION SIGNAL and with our leaflets, our Bible readings, our general literature. This would be an eye-opener and a mind-broadener to many, and give an impetus to our work which would a hundred fold repay the small expense involved. Rev. Walter H. Brooks, D.D., in his address before the Conference of Reform Forces in this city, said: 'If we wish to win we must educate the clergy. They have a powerful influence, and before we conquer the saloon we must have their earnest enthusiastic support.' Sisters, ponder this. Local unions, raise a fund at once to supply clergymen and other leaders of thought with our own literature."

And now we will turn our attention again to the ever-recurring

SPECIAL DIFFICULTIES.

QUESTION.—Not long since, at a social given by a society of which I am president, cider apple sauce was served. I did not know of its presence until asked to offer it to our W. C. T. U. president. I declined. However, she ate some. I was publicly assailed as a crank. Are my views too extreme? Does not the W. C. T. U. stand on that same ground?

ANSWER.—Too extreme? No. Are true white-ribboners with you? Yes. Why not drink cider as well as eat it? Be comforted. You are in a glorious majority who have separated themselves from the unclean thing.

Q.—Will you give the laws in the state where the mother has the prior claim to the child? I understand the states are Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Oregon, Washington and New York.

A.—A law student has looked the matter up, and sends us the following clear answer:

"Every state in the Union still adheres to the common law, in so far as the paramount right to the custody of minor children is concerned, in vesting that right in the husband. Where the husband and wife live together the law in every state presumes the father as the head of the family, and will look to him for all actions pro and con of his minor children. Upon the settlement of divorce proceedings, in absence of any disqualifications, with the exception of minors of tender years, the father has the paramount right of assigning the custody of his children below the age of fourteen. Above that age the wishes of the child are consulted. However, the court will, in all such cases, look into the welfare of the child. There is a tendency now in all legislatures towards increasing the mother's rights in that the child shall not be apprenticed without the consent of both. Every statute in the Union gives the father of ordinary qualifications the right of changing the infant's domicile, the right in his property, etc.

"Professor Thompson said: 'While there are many women infinitely superior to some men, yet it would be absurd to say that all women are, and thus take away the right vesting in the father and giving it to the mother. It would be a revolution without a change for the better, for after such revolution the law would necessarily be obliged to look to the mother for all actions concerning her children. Her life would thus become more burdensome, and society would degrade in so far as it would lose its protection from its men. That law (recognizing the father's prior right) is found in the law of nature, and thus must forever continue.'

"I have consulted the statutes of the states mentioned, and all those statutes recognize the father's paramount right to his children."

Q.—How should one address the W. T. P. A. in writing to it? "Dear Madams"? or "Women," in place of the customary "Dear Sirs or Gentlemen"?

A.—The inquirer accuses herself of foolishness in asking these questions, but its answer may save correspondents finding themselves in a similar dilemma. If you want to use a special form of address, "Friends," or "Kind Friends," covers all the ground, but the most business-like and direct form is simply,

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
Chicago,
Inclosed please find,—or whatever the opening sentence may be. No one will ever find fault with that, and space, time, ink and perplexity be saved.

Q.—Did Miss Willard, at the Ohio convention or at some other meeting, ask white-ribboners to take the twelfth chapter of Romans, commit the same to memory and live by it?

A.—We do not know that she did, but think the suggestion an excellent one. As you say, until one does this they will "never know how many good things are in that chapter."

Q.—What shall be done with the woman who, being county president, seems to think she must also control the local union of which she is only secretary?

A.—Such matters as these ought to be settled by quiet, friendly but perfectly frank words, said privately by someone in authority to the mistaken one in question. Such a spirit of admonition will conquer nearly every time. If not, let two or three of the members wait on her together in the same spirit. But if this desire to "control" amounts only to an annoyance perhaps it would better be accepted in the spirit of that good word, "Love beareth all things, . . . endureth all things."

Q.—Can any one or two members of a union take money from the treasury and use it as they may see proper without orders from the president?

A.—I quote from "Roberts' Rules," p. 143: "The duties of treasurer vary in different societies. In probably the majority of cases he acts as a banker, merely holding the funds deposited with him, and paying them out on the order of the society signed by the secretary." This is a manifestly fair arrangement, since the money belongs to the body as a body and not to individuals.

Q.—Has not the superintendent of literature a right to use the money she collects on Fund Card for Literature to be distributed, to the best of her knowledge, if she gives account to the treasurer?

A.—There seems no reason why she should not do this.

May your busy hands and eager hearts find rest in much accomplishment!

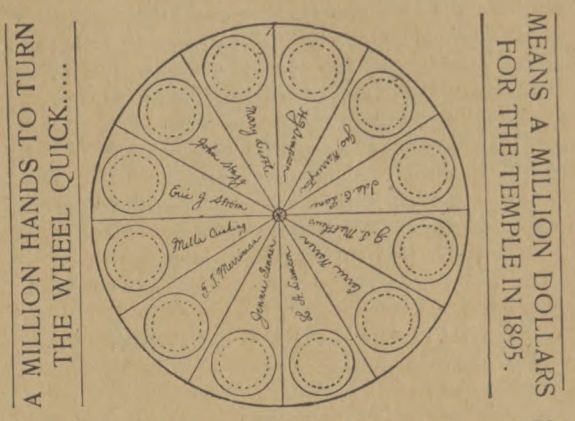
BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

PRAYER.—Now, O Lord God, let thy promise be established.—II. Chron. 1:9.

PROMISE.—All promises of God in him are yea, and in him Amen, to the glory of God.—II. Cor. 1:20.



Dr. Phoebe J. B. Wait, president of Central union (No. 1), New York city, sent for one hundred Wheels for her union a few weeks ago; she has secured the filling of fifty Wheels, for which $60 has been received, and she promises the other half very soon. Beside having the name of the union placed upon the New York tablet in Willard Hall, all persons filling Wheels received a premium. For instance, ten Temple souvenir teaspoons are among the premiums returned for the filling of the above fifty Wheels. From this our friends can see that it costs money and requires some capital to work our end of the Wheel; up to date we have sent out 30,000 Wheels, and have had returns from about 2,500. The success of the enterprise is assured, but it cripples us greatly just now, when we have been at so much expense to inaugurate the plan, to have the returns come in so slowly. We beg all who hold Wheels to have them filled at once and send them without delay. If you are too busy with spring housecleaning, let the children take your Wheels and have them filled.

The girls in the composing room of the W. T. P. A. have all taken Wheels to fill. The first one returned is from Miss Kate Lewis, with a request for another. Mrs. A. E. Pratt, who is in charge of THE UNION SIGNAL composing room, and has faithfully filled this position for many years, writes: "I send another Wheel from one of our girls; more will follow soon. We are all anxious Marshall Field shall pay his $25,000. Please send another Wheel." An old Crusader from Philadelphia, Mrs. R. G. Chandler, now on a visit to her son among the beautiful mountains of Georgia, sends $5 to the Temple, and incloses stamps for three Wheels. She writes: "I see such a field here for temperance work. I am informed that almost every man, woman and child in this beautiful valley use tobacco and rum." "I came here this spring to the foot of Mount Nebo," writes Mrs. Anna Angier, Starr, Utah. "My husband is here with an irrigation company. I am the only woman, surrounded by ungodly men. The thought came, Must I lay down the temperance work? What can I do situated as I am? Something said, Why not send and get a Wheel? I sent for two; got one filled and sent it the first of the week; the other one is now full—will send it to-morrow. It seems to me if our women only looked at it in the right light and went to work, we could pay for the Temple this year. It is the grandest monument to the faith and ability of women the world has ever seen. The Mormon Temple at Salt Lake City is admired by tourists the world over, and it does not compare with ours. The former was built by making the people pay a tithe, and Solomon's Temple had the power of a great and mighty king back of it, but ours is built with offerings of love for fallen humanity. When I think it is open every day in the year for prayer and praise, I wish we might have such a place in every city." Mrs. M. G. Smith, Springfield, Mass., writes: "With this I mail four Wheels, filled. Please send the souvenir teaspoon as premium. My friends seem so willing that I think I can fill another Wheel if you will send it to me." We give the above extract from letters to show what some of our white-ribboners are doing for the Temple. If all were as faithful, we could pay for it this year, as Mrs. Angier has said.

Two hundred dollars was received this week from a noble white-ribboner in Ohio who does not wish her name mentioned. Mrs. Sarah C. Moore, St. Paris, Ohio, sends $7.50, which completes the hundred dollar pledge for Champaign county. Mrs. Moore writes: "I think our women will take to the Temple Wheel with a great deal of interest; it is certainly a very easy way of raising money." Mrs. Mary Demaray sends $10 for the Canton, Minn., W. C. T. U. The union pledged to raise a Baby Band, but only succeeded in getting fifty names. Miss Olive Stevens sends $5 on the Rollo, Minn., W. C. T. U. pledge. Mrs. Harriss sends $25 on the $100 pledge of the Mexia, Texas, W. C. T. U.

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple, Chicago.

NOT BY ACCIDENT.

Thou cam'st not to thy place by accident,
It is the very place God meant for thee;
And shouldst thou there small scope for action see,
Do not for this give room to discontent;
Nor let the time thou owest to God be spent
In idly dreaming how thou mightest be,
In what concern thy spiritual life, more free
From outward hindrance or impediment;
For presently this hindrance thou shalt find,
That without which all goodness were a task
So slight, that virtue never could grow strong.

A BIT OF MAY-DAY BRAVERY.

BY MARTHA YOUNG.

In all the street of the bustling city of smoke, grime and factories, there was only one sign of May-day: a basket of hawthorn blossoms hung out of a window high up in a tenement house.

A fortnight ago Kate had come to the city. When she found herself wrapped in the ceaseless noise of the great town she had felt just as she had on that afternoon of red sunset when she had plunged into the hustling waves of Black Falls creek, just above the rapids, to save her little brother from drowning. The whirr and dash of waters had deafened and bewildered her then, but she had kept her wits enough about her to hold her head above water, and to repeat again and again to her own heart: "I must save him! I must save my brother!" And she had saved him. Just so on the night that she had reached the city had the waves of human life seemed to buffet and almost to bewilder her.

Mehitable Barrow, her school-mate at the little mountain school, had persuaded her to come to the city.

"Kate," Mehitable had cried, as soon as she had her off the car, "you don't know what a piece of luck for you! Forty dollars a month, for it is expected to be a new feature. Just mixing drinks and juleps and that sort of thing, for a brand new hotel. You are so steady, a place like that wouldn't hurt you. I said you could fix juleps all day and never touch a drop; couldn't you? And you look that fresh and rosy like a mountain camelia, that you'll make all the men think of real old-time moonshiners' stills up on the mountain."

As they walked rapidly along the streets Kate was dazed with the sights and lights and the bustle and noise all about her, but she kept her wits enough to keep repeating to her heart: "I can't do it. I can't do it. I can't go help folks to drown 'emselves in ruin. I've seen enough of that with the moonshine whisky on the mountain."

"Hetty," she said at last aloud, interrupting Hetty's story of what forty dollars a month would buy, "Hetty, I can't do that! I can't!"

"You are throwing a good chance away. It's just good money gone. Somebody 'll take the place, and do the work. It's just loss for you. That's all."

And this was what Kate had had to hear day after day of all the time she had been in the town. She had been trying all the while to get work, no matter how hard or how humble, only not the one place that was offered.

"You can't expect to pick and choose, 'specially in these hard times that have come. I got you a place like I promised I would and you won't take it," Hetty reiterated daily. "You are just afraid to take the risk, you are afraid to do what's new, what hasn't been done before."

With high courage Kate had turned her back to the weather-beaten cabin home on the spur of Lookout. Hetty Barrow had talked at the Jones' quilting-bee last harvest of factory work, of living out, of clerking; she had said then: "Come, Kate, I'll board you cheap till you get work."

Kate had come, brought hither by the hoarded coins of many a hard day's work at the sewing machine, or labor in the field among the harvesters. That little hoard was almost gone. Hetty had shown plainly enough this morning that her welcome also was well-nigh exhausted. Kate felt, too, that the little sums she had given Hetty from her small store had been insufficient for her keep. If dependence on her own kin had been hard to bear, how much more bitter to her was this. She had been courageous enough as she had started city-ward. She had told Aunt Mercy and Uncle Si that she would run up to the farm before long to get her little brother; she had said, too, that she hoped to be able soon to repay to them something of their kindness and care for her. Her courage was all gone now.

Hetty had put on her bonnet and shawl with a jerk and had started out for a day of hard jobs. "Anyhow, Kate," she had said, sharply, "you can mind the child."

Kate longed for the old home to-day, for the wide views, hazy and blue in the distances, with nearer slopes, gray faintly shadowed with coming greenness in the early spring. Looking out of the window at the stretch of tall tenement houses she longed for the "rare blue hills," for sight of the warm nooks where flowers for many May day garlands grew.

She longed for the homely warm interior of the old log cabin. So deep was her dream of home that the red glow of that stormy afternoon when she had rescued her little brother seemed to be all about her.

Little Joe Barrow trotted hither and thither in their poor room, solemnly engaged in some games whose purport and enjoyment only he could fathom and find.

It had been chilly enough in that bare room five stories up, but now, to Kate, so wrapped in musings of her old home, all coldness seemed suddenly thawed out of the morning. She felt delicious warmth rush all over her as she had on that afternoon so long ago, when the home-folks had crowded her and her little brother close to the ruddy logs in the old stone chimney; her heart warmed up at remembrance of Uncle Si's hearty voice praising her for the rescue and calling her: "Brave Kate! Brave Kate!" Was it possible she was grown such a coward now that she feared to face another day's search for work?

No, she would make one more effort, if only Hetty would be a little more kind, would bear with her a little longer, would not talk any more of the place she could not take.

She was sharply awakened from her reverie by little Joe's crying out, "'Ook, Kate, 'ook, Kate!"

Starting from her crouching position on the floor, Kate looked this way and that, and cried out in horror. From the windows below her rolled volumes of smoke. Snatching Joe in her arms she rushed to the door of their little room. All beneath her was a sea of flame. A whole floor on fire below her, and she imprisoned five stories above the earth. Holding the child tightly in her arms, she ran to the window. The street was filled with excited people.

Out of the lower stories down which the fire had not yet surged poured a mass of frightened inmates. The house was swept of people in a minute. In the whole honeycomb of building only two human beings were left, Kate and the child.

A great cry went up from the crowd below as one and another pointed to where Kate's pale, pain-drawn face shone out from the clouds of smoke. Little Joe clung to her. Like a picture of Madonna and child, with souls filled with prophecy of the great anguish to come looked the two figures in the lofty window.

After the first inarticulate cry of horror that went up from the crowd came clear calls from one to another: "Save them! Can no one save them?"

"The whole fourth floor is a sea of flame," was the reply that fell like lead on the hearts of the people.

"She must throw the child down," cried a loud voice.

"No! No!" cried a hundred.

"She is suffocating. She must throw the child, or they both will be lost."

Through the terrible asphyxia that was devouring her senses Kate heard the clear command, and gathered the child in her arms to obey the voice.

On the instant a woman's wild shriek rent the noise of the crowd below. Frantically pushing aside the crowd, crying aloud in her agony, rushed Hetty Barrow.

She heard the man's command.

She saw Kate's motion to obey.

"No!" she shrieked. "Hold the child! Do not dash him to certain death. Hold the child!"

Red swords of flame flashed through the smoke clouds and darted their bright blades nearer to Kate and Joe.

"Throw the child! It is the only chance of life!" cried the voice below.

The crowd seeing that instant death from the flames would be the price of a moment's hesitation, took up now the cry of, "Throw the child."

"I have faced death a hundred times," murmured an old soldier in the crowd; "I have done many a deed that was called brave, but never have I seen a time when I could be brave enough to take the one chance in a thousand by throwing the child."

"But it is the only chance."

"I'd be coward enough to take certain death, but not the chance of that throw and that leap," declared the old soldier.

"Throw the child! Now!" commanded the clear voice.

"Throw the child," went up from a hundred throats.

But from the mother's heart and lips went up the cry: "No! No! Hold the child!"

Kate took one look at the dizzy distance. One glance at the sweep of red flame now close upon her, then gathering Joe away from her neck where he clung, she leaned far out of the window and dropped the tender weight of life from her arms.

Sick with terror for his fate she closed her eyes. All through the smoke-clouds gleamed the child's yellow hair, like the flash of a falling star. Silence like the silence of a dead world lay in the street below.

A second's space and a great cry rent the air: "Saved!"

In an instant the mother had snatched her boy to her arms. Then all eyes turned to the window where Kate leaned far out. At the great cry of joy she had opened her eyes and she saw that her brave decision had had life-saving for its reward. Lurid blazes almost laid hold on her. She was almost too stifled to realize that chance of life was slipping from her swiftly, when she was waked to sudden sense by the same commanding voice: "Jump from the window! Jump, now!"

Gathering up all energy left her, she leaped out over the thickening smoke-clouds. Behind her on the instant rushed the ruddy flames. The bravest, readiest men in all the crowd had, as by one of those inspirations that come to the truly brave, drawn close together as she made the saving leap. This way and that they leaned with arms of all uplifted, following with straining eyes and swaying forms her fall. They caught her high on their lifted arms. Swaying this way and that they lowered her gently. She lived.

The air rang with joyful acclaim. Now again may she justly be called "Brave Kate!"

Hetty Barrow, with Joe's head on her shoulder, looked into Kate's eyes with a wealth of unspoken, unspeakable gratitude in her look. No more fear of unkindness there for Kate. No more calling her a coward, afraid to do something new, something that hadn't been done before. Hetty's wealth of gratitude for priceless courage would sweeten Kate's search for work now. As they walked up the pavement together, some lightsome spring breeze loosened a hawthorn flower from the basket Kate had noted that morning. The fluttering harbinger of sweeter, warmer days to come fell on Kate's shoulder to be grasped by her eager hands. To the mountain girl it was like a breath from home, bidding her to be courageous and patient, and success comes always to those who hold to courage, to patience, to right.

"THAT BOY."

President Weston says, in one of his matchless sermons—the quotation made from memory is tamely done—that to the child in early years the father occupies the position of God; the boy comes to the father for everything, confidently asking impossibilities; asking with all simplicity and perfect trust for gifts that would impoverish an emperor; looking to his father for daily food, raiment, protection; fearing no harm while he holds his father's hand; accepting as truth every statement made by him; in all respects bearing himself toward his father in trust, confidence, loyalty, reverence, as we try to stand in our relation to God.

The father does not assume this attitude. The boy makes of him this ideal. Is the man, knowing his poor acquirements, his narrow limitations, his faulty character and imperfect life, to foster this ideal? There comes a day when the child, wise or foolish, knows his own father. Let the man, then, be honest with his boy. Let the boy understand that his father has not forgotten the days of his own youth. Let the boy feel that his father wants to be his close companion and friend as well as his counselor and guardian.

Don't be a hypocrite before your boy. When he believes you to be infallible don't encourage the belief. Take him into your life as you desire to be taken into his. Don't tell him that when you were a boy you never gave your parents a moment's uneasiness; were never cross to your little sister; never disobeyed your teacher; were never cruel to dumb animals, and always kept the Golden Rule. Be honest with him above all things. Don't be too dignified with him. The more he loves you, the more he lives in your arms, the more he plays with you and the less he fears you, the more profoundly will he respect you. Pity the man, who, in order to secure and retain proper respect from his children, has to wear at all times an uncomfortable veneer of artificial dignity.

You want him to be a man—it doesn't make so much difference whether he is a "gentleman," so called, or not. But a man is a man the world over. Your boy shall be a man, and the model of his life you will help him to find in the manhood of the New Testament. Meekness of spirit, noble aspirations, a merciful disposition, gentleness, purity of heart, cleanliness of thought, chastity, right conduct, moderation in speech, generosity, magnanimity, forgiveness of wrongs, modesty, loyalty to duty, charity in judgment, practical wisdom—all these he will find in the Sermon on the Mount. All the cardinal principles, the sure foundations upon which the pure, true manhood is builded, he will find in the teachings and the model of the New Testament. There is no other standard, no other model of faultless manhood.—Before He Is Twenty.

ARTHUR.

BY LILLIAN L. TROTT.

"Teacher, quick! Arthur—Eddie—on Bradley—hurry! He's killing 'im!"

Susie reached her first with the halting news, and the breathless boys could only tumble up the steps and into the schoolroom, as Miss Norton directed them by a glance. Without stopping to carry her bell inside she ran to the rear of the house, in the direction of the hill called "Bradley." A few steps and she met Arthur, for even the luxury of a fight could not induce this most obedient of boys to ignore the call of his teacher's bell. Farther on, with a step less prompt, came Eddie, his face and hands spattered with tears and blood.

"How did it happen?" she asked. He was not much hurt, bodily, but his sense of equality—of muscle—was severely ruffled.

"Arthur—Bradley—nose bleeds—kicked me!" His tale of woe was almost as lucid as the stammering Susie's.

"You've been fighting, you mean," severely. Miss Norton did not allow her scholars to fight, but Eddie was of "the big room," and thence her authority could not reach.

She went back to her charge. A moment later Miss Haleigh emerged from the "big room," leading Eddie to the pump. Miss Norton found Arthur engrossed with his history, looking, and no doubt feeling, as though American battles were the most important that ever were fought. The dark looks from every side were thrown at him for naught. He saw them not nor heeded. But they told Miss Norton that the sympathy of the school was with the vanquished Eddie, though he ranked with the pupils of the higher room, and Arthur had always been hero of this.

It was a country village, boasting a school of two departments, Miss Norton presiding over the lower, her scholars passing thence as soon as they could meet the requirements of the next.

Four o'clock, and as they marched out she requested Arthur to remain behind his fellows. He returned to his seat and waited, such remarks as "He'll ketch it!" "Hope he will." "Serve him right!" coming to him from boys and girls who but this morning were just as hearty in their comradeship.

"How did it happen?"

"I hit him in the nose," he said, looking at her without appeal and without apology.

"Whose fault was it?"

"Mine," as unhesitatingly as before.

"You weren't here at the beginning of the year when I forbade fighting?"

"No; but I understood. There hasn't been a fight before since you've been here."

"And you haven't broken a rule before. Did you forget?"

"No'm."

"Then why did you do it? Tell me all about it."

"Well, I was mad, mostly."

Miss Norton took one brown fist in her hand. "You might have killed him with these hard knuckles,—because you were mad. That moment's fury you couldn't undo in a lifetime."

An expression, half incredulous, half frightened, crossed his features. Then he pushed up the sleeve and examined the arm, meditatively.

"I could," he said, reflectively: "his muscle is flabby," with a hint of scorn in his voice. Neither spoke for a long time, Miss Norton wondering how to touch his dormant conscience, Arthur evidently pondering his chances of becoming a criminal. He broke the stillness in a tone of relief he did not try to conceal, "You saved me from that, though,—ringing the bell on time, sharp."

"What are those strong arms for?" his teacher asked him.

"I'm just the same's the only boy; Craige's no use. Then there's Floss 'n' Mame. 'N' mother can't wash forever. I work out. That's why I ain't here regular."

There was another blank. The girl's memory came to her in time to smother a question. The father of Arthur was a ne'er-do-weal.

"Yes, your hands were given you to work for those who can't work for themselves, not to hurt the weak. You would think the boy a coward who would strike your weakly brother."

Arthur gave her a quizzical glance. "Before you came," he said, "the big school was always picking on us little ones. We had to fight or run. Miss Haleigh never interfered, and our teacher had no control over the big school. You stopped it by telling us you would have no fights, with big or little. So our school keeps out of the way of the other, and so keeps out of fights—"

"But you did not?"

"I wouldn't run! 'N' if I'd got beat I wouldn't 've cried."

"But, Arthur, can't you see? It is just as contemptible to hurt a big boy as a little one, if he is weaker."

"I didn't know he was weak till I tried him."

She was silenced. What could she say? Unwittingly, he helped her: "One thing I was wrong about, fighting when you told us not to."

"You say you did not forget?"

"Some o' th' fellers sung out, 'You'll ketch it if teacher finds it out.' But I thought if I had to take a licking anyway I'd rather take it from you than him."

Miss Norton laughed now, but Arthur was in earnest. "I promise you I won't fight him again; I won't get the chance," grimly.

"He is from the Orphans' Home, isn't he?" she asked. "I saw a cigar in his mouth the other day."

Arthur flushed. "I smoke sometimes," he said.

Miss Norton knew it, but she only said, "I'm sorry."

"Eddie can't remember when he learnt," he went on. "He says he hankered for it when he was in the Home. I wonder if that is what makes his muscles 'flabby'?" Arthur gazed again at his own brawny wrists. "I haven't been using it long."

"No. Your cheek is as hard," passing her hand over it, "and your color as firm! And you are taller and broader and sturdier looking than Eddie, though a good two years younger. And you haven't that wizzled, shriveled, old-man look of his."

"Is that what makes him look so!" There was a note of awe in his tone.

"I suppose he's so wedded to the habit that he couldn't break away if he tried," she suggested. "You know such things do get so strong a hold that there's no conquering them." By the sudden straightening of his figure and the brightening of his eye she knew she had chosen the right word, "conquering."

"It'll never get any such a hold on me," he resolved, firmly; "I hate to be conquered!"

"Eddie's native town is the same as mine," his teacher continued, ignoring his reference to himself. "He is worse than fatherless. Old people say that when Mr. Hanson was a boy there was not a more promising youth in the place. But he fell among 'wild' companions and adopted their vicious ways. Have you ever noticed how much a boy looks and talks and walks like his father? Eddie is a small edition of Mr. Hanson, figure, face, voice, are all like his father's, and he has the same weak inability to resist anybody or anything that is determined to conquer him."

Between the beatings of his heart Arthur faltered, "Why don't some one tell him?"

"Grown people by the score befriended him even before the charitable institution found a home for him here. But you know that is not as though a boy talked with him."

"I will!" he sprang up eagerly, then recollected himself and cowered back ashamed, all the bright color dying out of his face. "I forgot; I'm 'sbad's he is," when excited Arthur always ran his words together, "'n he knows it. He knows 't I smoke 'n' fight."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Sitting behind me on a suburban train the other morning were two gentlemen evidently Grand Army veterans, who were discussing the arrangements for Decoration Day. Some of their conversation caught my attention.

"And," said one, "we must have the new Liberty Bell. Just think how glorious it will be to have it ring forty-seven times, once for each state in the Union. It will be a great expense but we must have it." "Where is it now?" asked the other. "Oh, down on the South side in Chicago, stored away," was the reply.

As their conversation went on my mind reverted to the big canvas covered truck which I had recently missed from its former location on the Lake Front park, near Battery D, where it had stood all winter, its precious cargo tucked safely in from storm and wind. Then I thought of the last time I saw the beautiful bell as it glistened in the sunshine and crowds directed by policemen were slowly walking around the new truck commenting and admiring.

Perhaps Cozy Cornerers would like to hear about this remarkable bell carriage which was the gift of Terre Haute, Ind., people. It was made by skilled workmen who donated their labor. The solid wheels are of polished oak and rock elm and the hubs are made from the overflow metal from the bell. The caps on two of the wheels are of silver with the heads of Washington and Lincoln surrounded by thirteen stars. The other two caps have the names of the donors of the material and the workmen who fashioned the handsome carriage. Altogether this was quite the thing for the new Liberty Bell to be rolled about on, you will agree.

Next week I'll have something further to say about this bell and the arrangements for it. I have taken it for granted that Cozy Cornerers know all about the great bell and how it came to be. What! some haven't heard? Then look in next week's Cozy Corner.

Affectionately,

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

I belong to the W. C. T. U. and also to the Junior League. I spoke a piece at the memorial service of Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap entitled, "The Ribbon White." Our family consists of six. We are all Prohibitionists. Last fall my aunt and I took a trip up the Hudson River. We had a delightful time. I should have liked very much to have visited "Eagle Nest," Miss Willard's home. I have been to Ocean Grove camp-meeting and also to New York city. LILLIE ALBERTSON.

Hope, N. J.

You are quite a traveler, little niece. Do you show your colors everywhere you go?

There are no saloons in our town, but I am glad to say there is one church and a W. C. T. U. of which mamma is a member. A temperance girl, AMY ELLIOTT.

The last part of Amy's sentence accounts for the first, doesn't it, Cozy Cornerers?

My mother offered a pair of canary birds and a cage to the one bringing the most over ten boy members in our L. T. L. in a given time. It has brought in about thirty already. We have about forty or fifty members in all.

Aurora, Ill. LEIGH SMITH.

Now won't the boy or girl who received the birds write and tell us about it?

Mamma is a W. C. T. U. member and she and I take THE UNION SIGNAL (it comes in my name), and I have been an interested reader of the Cozy Corner and would like to join it. My brother Frank, aged sixteen, and myself signed the pledge and joined the L. T. L. Papa is a Prohibitionist and honorary member of the W. C. T. U. We heard Mrs. Frye, our state superintendent of W. C. T. U., lecture in our Methodist church and she is a fine speaker. I am very glad to say Byron has no saloons and I truly hope it never will have. FLOY GILBERT.

Byron, Minn.

I am sure it never will if there are many more families as straight on the side of the right as yours, Floy.

I would like to join the Cozy Corner. I belong to the Westerly L. T. L. My mother is superintendent. We are not quite six months old and we have 188 scholars. I want to grow up to be a Prohibition man. I am only ten years old but I am going to do all I can for temperance.

Westerly, R. I. CHARLIE LINDLEY.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

The special Flower Mission number of THE UNION SIGNAL will be issued May 23. It will have a dainty cover, designed by our special artist; will contain a sketch of the life of Jennie Casseday, the originator of flower mission work, and the first National superintendent of this department; a program, contributed articles, editorials, and other helps for the appropriate observance of June 9, one of the most prominent red-letter days in the W. C. T. U. calendar.

We would urge local unions to "celebrate" Flower Mission Day, wherever practicable, by holding a mass-meeting. It is an opportunity none should let slip of presenting to the public one of the most "taking" departments of W. C. T. U. work. Our Flower Mission number, together with The Young Crusader supplement, will furnish abundant material for an evening's entertainment and instruction. This is an occasion, too, upon which the Y's will naturally come to the front as "promoters."

And let it not be forgotten that a public meeting of this kind is a splendid time for the distribution of temperance literature, especially leaflets along the line of W. C. T. U. effort.

As there are frequently several unions in the same town, it is important to give the name of the retiring superintendent, so that the list of representatives may be kept absolutely correct. If you fail to receive your credentials, please ask yourself if you sent the name of state as well as town. We have no way of discovering, for instance, whether Springfield is the one in Illinois, Ohio or Massachusetts, unless you designate it in your letters. It is better to be too explicit than to omit any necessary details.

It goes without saying that all L. T. L's will observe Flower Mission Day, June 9, and that they will want to use the program arranged by Miss Ada M. Melville, editor of The Young Crusader. It is issued as a supplement to that paper, and is now ready. It will furnish a delightful evening's entertainment for young and old, for an exercise in which the children are the performers is always enjoyed by the grown-ups. The program is in two parts; the first is a "meeting held by the flowers"—flowers being represented by seventeen children in appropriate costume. The second part consists of a recitation exercise by the flower-children, a Responsive Scripture Reading, and Rhymes for Recitation—the whole program being altogether charming. The supplement contains also "Further Suggestions for the Observance of Flower Mission Day."

It is none too soon to "begin to commence" definite arrangements for June 9, and as there is sure to be a large demand for these programs, unions would do well to send in their orders early.

Price of Program Supplement without Young Crusader: 100, 65 cents; 500, $2.75; 1,000, $5. Young Crusader and Program Supplement: 100, $1; 500, $4.75; 1,000, $9.

GRADUATING EXERCISES AT THE TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

On Monday evening, April 22, the roomy parlors of the National Temperance Hospital, 1619 Diversey Ave., were filled to their utmost capacity, the hall and stairway accommodating the overflow of guests who had gathered to witness the annual graduating exercises of nurses from the training school department. Mrs. Matilda E. Kline, president of the hospital board, was "master of ceremonies." Promptly at eight o'clock nine nurses arrayed in their attractive official uniform—blue and white "stripes," snowy aprons and caps—filed into their places. Four of these were graduates.

As we sat waiting for the exercises to begin, we thought of the significance of the event; a well equipped hospital, whose watchword is, "no alcohol in medicine," standing in the heart of great Chicago; its upper chambers filled with those upon whom sickness has laid her heavy hand and who are recovering without that once universal "cure-all"; while in the guest rooms were assembled men and women, who by their simple presence gave an amen to the principle of non-alcoholic treatment; leading doctors of both schools, who not only indorse but practice this good method; and young women in their days of their bloom about to seal their adherence to the work of caring for the sick, without the help of that poison which more than any other is cursing the earth.

Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson, the leading woman physician of Chicago, president of the regular staff of physicians, was the chosen speaker of the evening. She began her address to the class by referring to her attitude toward the principle on which the hospital is founded, previous to the acceptance of her present position therein. She said in substance: "I had always supposed I was a temperance woman. I never used alcohol myself and never gave it, except in dire necessity. I had always been opposed to its administration in chronic cases, but felt free to give it in acute cases when the patient was bordering on a state of collapse. When I came here I had a case which I thought called for the use of brandy and I asked for it. Of course, it was not forthcoming and it was only after I had repeated my request of the nurse in attendance for the third time that I fully realized that I could not use it at all in this institution. I have now learned, however, how thoroughly we can meet exigencies of all kinds without the use of alcohol in any form and that we have at our command remedies that are better. I find that the use of coffee and tea and alcoholic drinks create in the system such a condition that when alcohol is administered to the patient the system fails to respond. Carbonate of ammonia dissolved in milk I find to be an efficient substitute. Thus I may say to-night I am indebted to the National Temperance Hospital for a new view of therapeutics, and in accepting this position on its staff I have received fully as much as I have given."

Dr. Stevenson then proceeded to bear witness to the efficiency of the members of the class before her, speaking from her own standpoint of twenty years' medical experience, during which she has had rare opportunity of studying a nurse's necessary qualifications, her position, responsibilities and duties. "They are as thoroughly perfect as any nurses of which I had any knowledge, and are in themselves a tribute to the domestic management of the hospital, as well as to its training school department." Dr. Stevenson also embodied in her most pointed address a word concerning the necessity for perfect domestic arrangement and service in every such institution, as doctors and nurses more than any other class of people require pure diet and bright, wholesome surroundings, all of which, she stated, were embodied in the administration of the domestic side of life in the National Temperance Hospital.

Dr. John R. Boynton, one of Chicago's leading physicians, and president of the homeopathic staff, presented the diplomas in a short and pithy address. In his opening tribute to the nurses and their cheering presence in the sick room, he said: "And they have something to make them happy in that they do not administer that poison, that abominable, God-cursed engine of death—alcohol. I regard this," continued Dr. Boynton, "as the finest hospital, all told, in the country. Regulars and homeopaths never quarrel here, and I think we are setting an example for our brothers the world around." He then presented the nurses with their well-earned diplomas, giving them words of commendation and encouragement.

Books especially adapted to their calling and flowers "to give the finishing touch" were presented by several patients and directors, including Mrs. L. H. Plumb and Mrs. M. M. Hobbs, to the graduates, and the very acceptable program was further brightened by music, recitations and refreshments.

What could be more significant than this happy occasion of the ultimate banishment of the rightly-called "engine of death." From almost universal customs of wine drinking to the almost equally universal abolishment of private sideboards the reform has swept, and is now carrying in its course the wine and brandy bottle from the physician's medicine chest and obliterating their name from prescriptions, until we may see representatives of the two leading schools of medicine clasp hands in this common cause under a roof erected to protect the sick and suffering from the bite of the serpent.

ALONG THE LINE.

On page 2 of this issue appears the first of a series of articles on "Reform Progress for the First Third of 1895," from the pen of our valued contributor, Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts. From his vantage ground, the National Bureau of Reforms, Mr. Crafts is in a position to look over the whole battlefield, to note the lines of march and to report the movements of the different divisions of the grand army of reform for the benefit of any branch thereof. He has long ago discerned the "Fraternity of Reforms," as our readers know, and the series of articles now begun is the result of an exhaustive survey of the entire ground of necessarily corelative reforms, and will be found a valuable contribution to current history.

It is highly important that all reformers should know where they stand. Such knowledge reveals both our strength and our weakness; it both encourages and spurs on to redoubled effort. And the facts which Mr. Crafts has "crystallized and classified into orderly history" for our benefit can not fail to be both encouraging and stimulating to white-ribboners.

The first article gives a review of Ballot Reform, Civil Service Reform, the Catholic question, and Charity Reform. The three following will treat of Divorce, Impurity and Mormonism, the Anti-Gambling Crusade, Immigration Reform, Law and Order, Labor Reform, the Liquor Problem, Municipal Reform, Newspaper Reform, Prison Reform, Peace and Arbitration, Sabbath Reform, and Woman Suffrage.

Pessimism we believe to be largely the result of ignorance. If the people could know more of the operation of the forces of good—forces which work "without haste and without rest"—present and future would take on brighter hues and the increase in the world of the volume of faith would wonderfully accelerate the coming of the better day. The added light, while revealing evil, would also reveal a way to overcome evil. If our daily newspapers were to "change about front" and emphasize the good news, the clean, wholesome news—news in the line of human progress—instead of the bad news, the impure, and the horrible, what a tremendous obstacle would be removed from the path of human evolution.

The atmosphere to-day is full of reforms—in nebulous state, many of them in the popular thought, but certain, sooner or later, to solidify and take substantial form as foundations upon which to reconstruct a "new earth." There are good citizens in plenty who desire to see these various reforms brought about; some being more interested in one kind, some in another, but, as Mr. Crafts intimates, the mass of them are not interested enough, they do not care enough about any reform to give it more than a passing attention. They express verbal approbation of the efforts of reformers along different lines, but they stop there. If every man and woman who are "for" any particular reform would give it active instead of passive support, the evil it seeks to overcome would soon be swept from the face of the earth.

Is it asked why reform progress is not more rapid? It is the "good citizen," man or woman, who forgets that there are sins of omission quite as unpardonable as those of commission, that is responsible for this "slow" pace.

Considering the apathy or cowardice of the many whom one would naturally expect to find "hasting to the fore" in the battle for God and humanity, the victories of the reform forces are truly wonderful. The noble army of reformers, though small in numbers, is causing no little fear and consternation in the ranks of the enemy, and if Mr. Crafts' "review" happens to catch the eye of any of them it certainly will not tend to make them less subtle and watchful.

A BROAD FIELD OF INQUIRY.

The following editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association, under the above heading, will give encouragement to the earnest white-ribboners and Prohibitionists who have long waited for an "arousement" in the medical ranks on the subject of total abstinence.

"Some months ago two leading teachers of the faculty of the medical college at ——— refused to sign the diplomas of four medical students, because they were known to be beer drinkers, and had been intoxicated during the lecture term. They had passed all the examinations with credit, and fulfilled all other requirements, and two of them had been cautioned by a professor in regard to drinking, the previous year. The majority of the faculty were disposed to grant them diplomas, on their promises of change, and by signing the pledge. The minority refused stoutly, and the matter was deferred. Recently, this has become a serious question; some influential friends of two of these students demand a final decision by the faculty. Several exciting meetings have been held, and the authorities are almost equally divided. It is held that these students are still drinking, and will disgrace the college which grants them diplomas. On the other side the drinking is doubted, and the past drinking is affirmed to be only the reckless overflow of generous convivial spirits, that will subside when engaged in active life work.

"The defenders of the students refer to several members of the faculty who are moderate drinkers, and urge that these students should not suffer because of the narrow, fanatical views of persons whose habits differ. The battle is still going on, and it is needless to add that several good men are greatly excited over the issue of this case.

"In another part of the country the same questions recently came to public notice in this way: Two medical men appointed by the legislature on a very important medical commission, were rejected by the governor. The surprise and disappointment roused a bitter feeling which since the late election has brought out an explanation concerning the reasons for this rejection. The capability and respectability of these men were affirmed, but their habits of moderate and occasional intoxication were considered dangerous weaknesses, of which designing men might take advantage. The governor declared that as the report of this commission would decide very influential interests he was not willing to have any one whose judgment might be influenced by spirits.

"Still another bitter disappointment is made public in an Eastern college town. A young physician of superior talents who has been an assistant, and has been acting professor in an important chair that is vacant, finds himself put aside and another man placed above him. His superior endowments and training, with influential friends are ignored, and an inferior man given the honors. The usual wild protests and indignation bring out the reason that he is a wine drinker and has been seen intoxicated at the club. This opens up a bitter field of personalities and a newspaper war of letters.

"These incidents are significant of a change in public opinion, and a sharp tendency to make an issue of questions that would have been passed over in silence a few years ago. The capacity or incapacity of a moderate or excessive user of spirits attracts attention and is discussed seriously in cases where the question of brain vigor and health is involved. Business and practical men approach this question without any sentiment, and demand the facts sustained and confirmed by common experience The medical profession have a great duty here which they have much neglected. The disputed questions concerning alcohol are purely medical fields of study, and yet the profession has scarcely been heard as either pioneers, students or teachers along this line. In the place of scientific study, two great parties are battling each other; one of wild-eyed emotional reformers who denounce alcohol in every way, and the other party who support it and extol its value as a food, medicine, and beverage. The profession stand aloof—indifferent, or tacitly support either one side or the other. In reality, no topic in modern science is more vital and more intimately associated with disease and the sanitary interests of the community. The physician who is looking round for new fields of study and research will find vast undiscovered stretches of country awaiting the explorer along this line. The strangest and most significant fact of all is, that public opinion is far in advance of the physician in interest in this subject, and in some respects in knowledge concerning it."

BOYS' BRIGADES.

The resolution on Boys' Brigades and military drills in public schools and colleges, referred to the General Officers at the National W. C. T. U. in Cleveland last November, resulted in the following statement:

"We would call attention first of all to the Annual Leaflet of 1894 (page 36), where the accepted definition of the objects of our department of Peace and International Arbitration may be found, which reads as follows:

"'This department aims to secure such training for children in home, Sunday-school, public school and Loyal Temperance Legion as will make them despise physical combat, and will lift them to a plane where the weapons are arguments, parliamentary usage and law; all of these having above them the "Sword of the Spirit," that weapon which is, above all others, worthy of reasonable and responsible beings.

"'The department also contemplates International Arbitration as the method that shall universally replace war, and in this interest literature will be circulated, public meetings addressed, petitions signed and coöperation with the Peace Societies of this and other nations sought.'

"It should be apparent that a society committed to the official declaration of such principles would be lying in the face of its own record if it should adopt resolutions favorable to the new military movement among our youth and young men.

"While we do not call in question the good intentions of those who favor such a movement, it would be as inconsistent for us to aid and abet in its development as it would be for the society called Friends, which we so strongly resemble in our principles and spirit, and which is so largely comprised in our membership. This statement is in itself a sufficient reply to all the arguments that may be urged against us. In the opinion of the general officers it is not necessary for us to antagonize those who are committed to the military movement; but it is our part to work more diligently than ever to strengthen and multiply the Loyal Temperance Legions which embody our concepts as to the best training of the young, namely, that they are committed to a triple pledge against the use of intoxicants, tobacco, and impure and profane words; and they are trained in such habits of thought as well as action as will make them pure patriots, practical Christians and active expert temperance workers.

"We believe this is the best use of such an amount of influence, time and money as we can give to the cause of the rising generation, and we call upon all good people to bear witness to the consistency of this course of action on our part and to the earnestness with which we are trying to build into the character of boys and girls, youths and maidens, those pure principles and habits which mean soldiership in His army who is the Prince of Peace."

A REMARKABLE LITTLE WOMAN.

It is probable that among the fourteen hundred millions of people now living no one is more truly remarkable than little Helen Keller of Alabama. When eighteen months old she became blind and deaf and until within a few years was unable to utter articulate sounds. She is now fourteen years of age. Miss Sullivan, of Boston, Mass., her instructor, has spoken the magical words that have released this gifted girl from the great silence in which she dwelt so long. This earnest woman has devoted herself to Helen for seven years and has taught her to speak so that she can carry on conversation—her teacher telegraphing her, so to speak, by placing her fingers on the hand of the child and the child replying accurately. Helen is a beautiful girl, her face glowing with every pure and noble sentiment. A great man who had gazed upon it with much emotion said, "That is the only face I have ever seen or probably ever shall see whose expression combined perfect innocence with the light of intellect and the flame of genius."

At the World's Fair this child selected by means of touch the statues that pleased her, distinguishing the antique from the modern and those that expressed lofty ideas from the commonplace.

Recently in New York city, when some of the most noted literary people came to see her she repeated extracts from their works, and when they left, although the group was large, she was able by a touch of their hands to call each one by name. She reads readily from the raised letters of print for the blind and is especially fond of Tennyson. When asked what poem she liked best she answered, "I am very fond of the Princess, but I think, although it is very hard to say which I prefer, that the one I am most fond of is a very short one of only six lines," and lifting her face, filled with an exquisite purity she repeated:

"Flower in the crannied wall,
I pluck you out of the crannies;
Hold you there, root and all, in my hand,
Little flower; but if I could understand
What you are, root and all, and all in all,
I should know what God and man is."

AN APPEAL TO THE CHURCHES.

The following letter has been addressed by Frances E. Willard to Christian ministers of all denominations:

Private letters which I have myself seen, from a number of American residents in Turkey, of unimpeachable character, have fully confirmed the worst reports of the recent massacre of Armenian Christians by the Turks and Kurds. This is only the climax of a systematic course of heart-sickening oppression and persecution extending over many years.

It is only under the pressure of aroused public opinion that governments take action. After the Bulgarian massacres, four hundred public meetings of protest were held in England. I would therefore earnestly urge that every Christian minister devote one Sunday evening meeting to a consideration of the situation of the Armenian Christians in Turkey, and that the meeting pass resolutions similar in their general tenor to those lately adopted by the Evangelical Alliance, urging our government to use its utmost influence with the European powers to make a repetition of such horrors impossible, and urging it also to take a firm stand in behalf of the endangered lives, liberty and property of American citizens in Turkey.

Any minister willing to preach on the subject can be supplied with documents and data, free of charge, by addressing Mrs. Isabel C. Barrows, 141 Franklin street, Boston, Mass. FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Mrs. Mary Davies, a widely known and popular English singer, who participated in the Grindelwald conference last year, adds the weight of her personal evidence to the well known fact of the evil of alcoholic stimulation. She says: "I am a great believer in temperance and consider stimulants injurious to the voice. Proper and sufficient food and a regular mode of life are absolutely necessary for singers, especially when they are young, and the voice is just developing."

A very beautiful and graphic ideal of the commonplace domestic art, cooking, is that of Ruskin: "Cookery means the knowledge of Medea and of Circe and of Helen and of Rebekah and of the Queen of Sheba. It means the knowledge of all herbs and fruits and balms and spices, and of all that is healing and sweet in fields and groves and savory in meats. It means carefulness and inventiveness and willingness and readiness of appliance. It means the economy of your grandmothers and the science of the modern chemist; it means much testing and no wasting; it means English thoroughness and French art and Arabian hospitality; and, in fine, it means that you are to be perfectly and always, ladies—loaf-givers."

Comparing the two island nations, Great Britain and Japan, Mrs. Isabella Bird Bishop, the traveler, states the suggestive fact that Japan, in time of peace, spends twice as much upon the elementary schools as upon the navy, while Great Britain spends more than twice as much upon her navy as upon her elementary schools.

An amusing story is told anent Lord Wriothesly Russell, canon of Windsor, who became an abstainer late in life. In giving the reason for his conversion to teetotal ideas before a recent meeting, he assigned as the cause for his change that "for forty years as a parish clergyman, he had been trying to cure drunkards by getting them to indulge in moderation, but had never once succeeded." His amazement may be imagined when the next day he read in the newspaper that he himself had been trying "for forty years to drink in moderation, but had never once succeeded!"

Our cause is marching on. We read good "signs of the times" in the "fad" (?) which has lately been taken up by newspapers and periodicals. A number of papers have given to the local W. C. T. U. or to the women of the town the privilege of contributing to and editing one issue, giving thereby an occasion for much legitimate merriment, but more than that, an opportunity to prove what women can do and, for once in her experience, room to tell what she has done without the cruel limitations of from "two hundred words" to one column! The St. Louis Christian Advocate met this "fad" with quiet dignity, and its Easter issue was a "woman's paper" in a very rare sense of the word. The cover page presents, clustered around a picture of the scene at the Lord's empty sepulchre on the day of His rising, the portraits of seventeen leaders of good women, among whom we recognize many of "our own,"—the text-word of the page being, "Last at the cross and first at the sepulchre." The three columns of the first page are filled with brief items, each respectively headed, "Woman in Prose," "Woman in Verse," "Woman in Fact." The leading article is by Lady Henry Somerset upon "Ministering," and is followed by no less than seventeen articles from the pens of women, all on appropriate themes. One article from a brother-in-law on "Christian Womanhood" in no wise breaks the harmony. We welcome every such mark of "favor," knowing it heralds the day when favor shall have grown to a fully acknowledged, gladly shared right.

On Duty.

THE BEAUTY OF THE INNER LIFE.

BY HESTER M. POOLE.

That each one of us is dual is a commonly accepted truth. There is always an inner and an outer, a subjective and objective, a reality and its phenomenal expression. Our acquaintances are familiar only with the salient points of the latter, its mountain peaks as it were. They are ignorant of the table-lands, the smiling valleys, the blossoming gardens that lie nearer the real hearts of ourselves. Still less are they acquainted with our inner lives, with those sublime moments in which our souls seek communion with the Giver of all good, with the real man or woman, not the garment in which it is clad or the instrument through which it acts.

True it is that this organic instrument fails to wholly conceal that which gives it form and expression. In all the universe there is no such thing as a living lie. In some shape or manner the truth will find expression. It softens the rugged features, it molds the plastic clay into some likeness, however blurred and inelegant, of the true individuality.

Yet at best, how rough, how superficial, is the finest manifestations in comparison with the soul that inhabits it. The wisest, the sweetest, the noblest person who ever lived, struggled against his limitations and mourned over his incapacity to reach his lofty ideals. There it stood in the great beyond, beckoning him on, fair, pure and beautiful, yet perhaps his most intimate friend failed to comprehend how he longed to realize that grand image. It may be doubted if ever there breathed one so low and imbruted that some yearnings for a better expression, some longings for a higher life, stirred not uneasily at the dark center of his consciousness. Forever God dwells in the hearts of His children, and the strivings of the spirit are never quenched.

To the aspiring, the inner life is the only one, or, rather, it is the base of all the external. More sedulously ought it to be cultivated than any other thing. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." That is, as his affections, the core of his inner life, vitalize and warm his intellect, so is the manner of man.

We are molded into the likeness of whatever we love, and love is life. Is that pure and unselfish? Then, in time, will we grow to the pattern set by our volition. It is our inner world that is real.

In every family there ought to be set apart an hour when each inmate could have time for self-communion and self-culture. I do not mean mere self-consciousness. But I do mean self-examination, the analyzation of governing motives and tendencies and the contemplation of ideal perfection: What do I love best? What are my aims in connection with my friends and humanity? Am I free from envy and jealousy, deceit and uncharitableness? Do I strive for a rounded development, for a judicial spirit? Do I seek to see the angel beneath the surface of even the least worthy? Do I forgive as I would be forgiven? Is the beautiful in character more precious to me than gold and gems or the admiration of my neighbors?

I mean also by the interior life an intimate acquaintance with and a culture of one's individuality, with that portion of ourselves which is allied to spiritual things, the fundamental stratum of being, the innermost. This it is which must be continually fed from the Father of all spirits. No matter what may be our work for humanity, here lie the springs of action and growth.

Hence the young should be early taught to have seasons of solitude and to love them. To live continually with others, no matter how dear, is to be constantly drawn away from that interior communion with the higher life that should day by day renew and refresh the spirit. Show me a person who shrinks from ever being alone and I will show you one who has no depth of character, no sacred chambers devoted to monitions of ineffable beauty and holiness.

That superficial existence that only seeks pleasure in social life, in the life of the senses, is to-day far too common. A craving for excitement, a feverish susceptibility to impressions, a desire to see something or go somewhere every day, kills all the springing flowers of the inner nature. To live within one's self seems then impossible. Life is "dull, stale, flat and unprofitable" without something new.

I do not mean that there ought to be a sharp dividing line between the objective and the subjective world. Life is a unit, but a unit having gradations. That which is urged is, that the kind of thoughts indulged in our profoundest moments, the affections that we cherish, inevitably fix individuality and mold character. It is in the silence and solitariness of the closet, when we stand face to face with the images created by our thoughts and wishes, that we are really at the judgment seat. There upon the walls of our chambers are fixed the models to which our actions conform.

Not in ceremony or form or ritual, however helpful these may be, but in utter solitude, when the latent faculties of the soul, closed to the outer world, awaken to spiritual monitions, are we in a condition to clearly see what we should do or leave undone. Here is the place to harmonize the human with the divine will, and to realize that spiritual joy that neither sorrow nor loss can disturb.

Here, too, is the realm of ineffable beauty. Then the jar, the fret, the fever of our imperfect earthly existence are hushed, and we respire an atmosphere of peace and rest. In a condition of receptivity, the soul attracts that harmony that is another name for happiness, from that infinite reservoir with which our Father has filled the universe. To each who is prepared to draw from this divine storehouse, it takes the form peculiar to the person. But it is always upbuilding, refreshing, heart-filling, spiritualizing. It bestows confidence, strength, sweetness, charity, peace.

Even Marcus Aurelius (can he be called a heathen?) was impelled to write, "Let your soul receive the Deity as your blood receives the air, for the influences of the one are no less vital than the other. There is an ambient Omnipresent spirit that lies as open to your mind as the air you breathe into your lungs. But then you must remember to be disposed to draw it."

When we have attained that fulness of communion that is the fountain of all true and rounded development, we shall find new meanings in all the familiar things in everyday life. It will be felt, as well as seen, that

"God's glory lies not out of reach,
The moss we crush beneath our feet,
The pebbles on the wet sea-beach,
Have solemn meanings, new and strange."

RHODE ISLAND.

THANKOFFERING DAY.

"'Hitherto hath the Lord helped me.' That He has given me adequate strength for each day's duty, enabled me to resist the evil in myself, and kept my dear ones in both worlds in the hollow of His hand, fills my soul with gladness and touches my life with praise."

A truly thankful heart will show itself in a generous life. As the subject of systematic and proportionate giving is kept constantly before our minds by our faithful superintendent, Mrs. A. M. Paine, the conviction is borne in upon one after another that, while all that we have and are, come as a gift from God, to be used as He may direct, some definite proportion of it should be set aside for His special work, to be ready and waiting when the call comes.

But among the Jews, aside from the tithing, was "an offering made as an expression of gratitude for favors received." At our annual service, our superintendent quoted passage after passage to show that the gifts God loves are those freely and gratefully given from hearts overflowing with love to Him.

She said, "It is this love in men and women that makes them forego lives of comfort and leave their homes and friends and go to foreign lands to work for the souls of those for whom Christ died, or give their time and selves to lift up the fallen in the dark places of our cities, to bear reproach and ridicule and even death for Christ's sake.

"When we arrive at that place where all tears shall be wiped away, shall we regret that we have given too much of money or time or self to Him who is the light thereof? Let us redeem the time, and next year may we have so many occasions of thankfulness that our gifts shall go far beyond those of the past. Above all let us give ourselves anew to the work of saving souls. Then may we hear the Master say, 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me.'"

When the offerings were counted, it was found that they came to over four hundred and fifty dollars, this sum being entirely independent of the thousand dollars pledged at our annual meeting six months ago.

The semi-annual report of our corresponding secretary shows that the true thought has entered many hearts and self is included in the gift.

"HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE."

Our afternoon meeting was a welcoming home of our beloved Mrs. J. K. Barney after her stay of several months in England. Clergymen of various denominations, prisoners' friends and white-ribboners united in words of appreciation and love.

Our president, Mrs. Babcock, was the first speaker. She gave a brief outline of Mrs. Barney's connection with our work. How at the second annual meeting in our state she heard the inward voice of God responding to the outward call of her sisters to lead the work. She was president for eight years, and then the National called her to a larger field, and now the World's union claims her as the head of one of its most important departments. As the "prisoner's friend," no one can number the darkened souls to whom she has carried the light of life, while her tracts in many editions have multiplied her words and carried her influence far beyond the reach of her voice.

Mrs. Paine spoke tender words from a full heart. Touching upon the thought, "What would it be if she were not here to greet?" she gratefully acknowledged the Father's love in bringing her back to us safe and well, while loyal hearts responded "Amen" to her promise, "Wherever you lead we will follow."

Rev. Dr. Vose, pastor of the Beneficent Congregational church, where the services were held, cast a forward glance and said, "You, with her, will go on to still better and nobler work."

Mrs. Freeborn Johnson, aged eighty-six, the oldest member of the Providence union, spoke simply and well. It was she who introduced the word "Christian" into the name of our organization.

Joseph Atwater, a Friend minister, dwelt upon the time, twenty years ago, when they worked together in the prison Sabbath-school. Sophia Little was with them then, he said, and it seemed appropriate that the speaker following him was Mrs. Hopkins, matron of the Sophia Little Home, of which Mrs. Barney is a trustee. She spoke of Mrs. Barney's interest in that Home and of the loving regard in which she is held by its inmates.

Mrs. Loomis as a tribute brought an offering of flowers, with an appropriate quotation.

Hon. H. B. Metcalf, a prominent Prohibitionist, went back in thought nine years to the contest waged in our state between righteousness and iniquity. He spoke in glowing terms of her wonderful ability in planning and directing all the details of its management, and said if she would organize a similar campaign again, he would do all in his power to bring it to a successful issue.

Mrs. G. F. Martin, too, went back to the night when they waited hour after hour for news from the polls, until at last came the joyful message, "Prohibition of the liquor traffic is the law of Rhode Island."

Rev. Floyd Tompkins, rector of Grace church, claimed Mrs. Barney as of the true apostolic succession of those who are determined to do God's will. He urged another united effort to make Little Rhoda a prohibition state and thanked God for His own divine leadership in every work for the betterment of humanity. We are glad to welcome to our state another minister who is in such hearty sympathy with our work and workers and who can so ably present the cause.

A letter from the president of the Woman's Council expressed her regret at being unable to be present. Mrs. E. Burlingame Cheney and others also sent regrets. A bunch of pure white roses tied with the white bow of ribbon was presented by Miss Nichols, and then Mrs. Barney briefly responded. A few bright reminiscences of her trip included the suggestion of some of her friends on her departure for home, that they should take her picture as "a woman who spent five months in England and didn't have time to go shopping." A glimpse of the work here and there as it is carried on by our English sisters, an acknowledgment of the love which prompted such a welcome and an uplook to the love divine that overshadows all our work and ways, and the meeting came to a close.

It was a glad occasion, for "her women" delight to honor her who has done so much to build up our organization and to inspire our workers with somewhat of her own zeal and consecration.

An important feature of the convention was the choice of a delegate to represent Rhode Island at the presentation of the Polyglot Petition and at the World's convention to be held in London, in June. Our president cannot attend and the unanimous choice of the convention was our corresponding secretary, Miss E. P. Nichols.

NEW MEXICO.

HERE AND THERE.

The workers in New Mexico do not want to merit the reproach, "Thou wicked and slothful servant . . . thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers . . . Take therefore the talent from him and give it unto him which hath ten talents."

Though not favored in the temperance cause as are the toilers in other parts of the Lord's vineyard, yet we do believe that the constant effort to make the most of our one talent will by and by bring an increase to us. Our W. C. T. U. women scattered over the territory realize that individual work is the price paid for the advancement of the cause of temperance.

On March 10 a union of eleven members was organized at Flora Vista. A week later four more united with the new band. There were also added to it seven honoraries. The officers are: Mrs. Mary Sizer, president; Mrs. M. Page, vice president; Miss Edith L. Tully, corresponding secretary; J. L. Runsburg, recording secretary; Miss Avice Hood, treasurer.

On March 21 a union was formed at Malago consisting of seven members, with Miss S. P. Butty, president; Miss Lena Beeman, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Eva Hakes, treasurer.

The union in Las Vegas is taking on new life. Its able president, Mrs. J. A. Carruth, has done much toward building us up in the work here. We have just purchased seventy dollars' worth of new books for the public library, which is under the management of the W. C. T. U. We are preparing to give the entertainment, "Extra Session of the Legislature," which will cali into activity many excellent women who have not yet declared themselves "strong for temperance." March 26, Miss Emma L. Swartz, of South Dakota, lectured in the Methodist church under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., who tendered her a reception at the close of her address. Refreshments were served and all seemed to enjoy the evening's exercises.

OREGON.

I leave but a short time between my last report and this, because I find that in consequence of my change in address some items failed to reach me for insertion in my last.

There was one legislature fact I neglected to mention. Although of no immediate moment, its ratification at the next legislature will allow woman's suffrage to go before the people for a popular vote in June of next year. The question passed the senate 17 to 11; and the house 41 to 9.

The report of Umatilla county convention should have found a place last time. There were five superintendents present to speak of their own departments, the other four were done by proxy. Mrs. Unruh said, "The county president, Mrs. Freeman's address, 'The Three Boys' would have done credit to many an experienced speaker. She made us feel proud of our dear women." About that time Mrs. Unruh visited six unions in eastern Oregon, planting L. T. L's where she found none. The account of her visit to the Warm Springs Agency is quite touching, pinning the white ribbon on nine Indian women and eleven Indian men. Several months later the corresponding secretary, Miss Lizzie Kamtzis (educated at the state school), who Mrs. Unruh says reminded her of Helen Hunt Jackson's "Ramona," writes as follows: "Our members are mostly all earnest Christians, and we hear many beautiful testimonies from them. I have interpreted at several meetings. We have had several readings on alcohol by Mrs. Richards."

The Multnomah county convention took place the last days of January. It was gladdened by the unlooked for presence of our state president, Mrs. N. W. Kinney, likewise that of Mrs. Graves, Y secretary of West Washington. The afternoon session opened with a memorial service for Mrs. Lathrap, when touching personal memories of her were given by Mrs. Kinney and Mrs. Mead, state evangelist.

A very able lecture on the "Evolution of Woman" was given in the evening by Dr. Frances Cady.

Simultaneously with this, Marion county held its quarterly meeting at Turner, when one evening Mrs. Unruh gave one of her bright lectures; on the other a Demorest medal contest was held. With the exception of two, all were reform school boys, one of whom won the medal.

I am glad to say that Mrs. Unruh enrolled the names of one hundred boys of the Reform school in the L. T. L. They are to have regular meetings and systematized study every week. With the usual clean sweep of a new political dynasty (so often a great disaster) the superintendent and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks, who were always anxious for the good of the boys and welcomed this organization, have been displaced for newcomers. The seed will be fostered by Mrs. Bessie Dillon, of Salem, a regular visitor at the school.

Mrs. Unruh reports nine unions visited on her eastern trip, and six organized later. Marion, with Mrs. Artilla Hadley, for president; Highland, Miss Ella Pickett Brooks; Mrs. M. A. Royal, Arlington; Mrs. Margaret Johns, Fletcher School House; Mrs. Alice W. Fletcher, Harrisburg; Miss Susie Davis.

Mrs. Sadie Clark, president Union county, reports a new union at Island City. Mrs. Unruh tells of three new L. T. L's.

Mrs. Harford with her husband has done good work this winter on our southern coast, staying many days in a place, working up and adding many new members to the existing unions. They visited and lectured at sixteen points on the line of railroad. Mrs. Harford says: "No announcement brought out larger audiences than that of a lecture on Franchise." This year she has held twelve meetings in different places. When South they assisted in holding the Douglas county convention at Roseburg, the point for our state convention next month.

Portland has been struck with the wave of municipal and social reform, which has made itself felt in so many large cities. The work is being done by delegates from the Christian Endeavor and Good Templar societies; they have been the means of influencing the police to close up the low saloons and houses of ill repute.

There have been consequently two thousand fallen women left to be cared for by the Christian women of Portland. Nobly these have come to the rescue. A house of shelter named "The Open Door," has been provided for them and every effort is being made to lead them to a better life. Our own Mrs. A. R. Riggs is on this committee of workers, which is indeed, with but one exception, composed entirely of W. C. T. U. women.

I see in our papers that the town of Florence elected women exclusively on its city council. There was some political ruse at the bottom of it, I believe. Time will show whether they will be allowed to act.

In the Ferry Canyon School District, Gilliam county, two women are on the school board and a third is elected school clerk.

Mrs. Additon has just returned from her visit East, lecturing at many points on her route. The W. C. T. U. of Portland tendered her a reception on her arrival.

SPRING NOTES.

We have lost our winter guests, and feel bereft. We worked them so hard, however, that we drew a long breath when they were fairly launched on the ocean wave. Dr. Frances and Lady Isabel are fruit-bearing people—the heavily laden sort—and therefore they are both loved and abused. "It is only at fruit trees that thieves throw stones," and the critics have thrown some stones only to have them rebound against their empty heads. Lady Henry Somerset, titled and of great wealth, is arraigned for not managing her affairs to suit everybody! And Frances Willard is too high, too noble, too good to be without her cross in this direction.

Of all the chapters of their experience here the one of most absorbing interest is Lady Henry Somerset's day with the "prisoners of hope" at Sherborne Reformatory Prison for Women. See Woman's Signal, London, March 21 and 28.

God bless our noble leaders! "God be with you till we meet again."

THE CHURCH OF JOSEPH COOK.

We have had our annual privilege of a course of lectures from Joseph Cook. Four walls may enclose a pulpit and a man, but no more truly than Mr. Cook is enclosed in the minds and hearts of earnest, thinking people. For the twentieth time the Boston Monday Lectureship has been heard in behalf of reform and of leading gospel truths. The preludes have dealt with grave questions of the day, including that of temperance as one of the most vital. Mr. Cook does not believe in "state control." He knows it is "the alcohol, not the way it is sold" that works the harm.

The series closed with a reception given by Mr. and Mrs. Cook, when the "Armenian Question" was most ably presented by Dr. Greene, of Constantinople. The discussion that followed was of great interest, and resolutions were passed urging our government to take some action in reference to the Turkish horrors. In such ways as these Mr. and Mrs. Cook meet the amenities of life, and their work in reform, social, literary, missionary lines, is made to tell.

RESTRICTION VERSUS PROHIBITION.

You have doubtless heard the verdict from the Massachusetts legislature on the Norwegian system, virtually two to one against—128–65. The Transcript says "it has doubtless seen its best days, but may come smiling up again next year." The "Life of Frances Power Cobbe," just now before us, has a bit of history prophetic of this system in Massachusetts. In 1875, Lord Shaftesbury wrote to Miss Cobbe: "I judge the object of the society [anti-vivisection] will be restriction, not prohibition. Prohibition, I doubt not, would be evaded; restriction will, I am certain, be exceeded. But you will find many who think that by surrendering the principle you have surrendered the great argument." It did not take Miss Cobbe very long in her great work to realize that Lord Shaftesbury was right; restriction was always "exceeded." She discovered that it was needful to reach the germ of the disease, and not merely to allay the worst symptoms; that "it was the passion itself that must be sternly suppressed, and this can only be done by stopping altogether the practice." She adds, what is truly significant of all the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, that "the delay and failure of our earlier efforts helped fix the attention on this culminating sin." These restrictive efforts being made here in Massachusetts are fixing attention on another culminating sin. The temperance question has been discussed as never before. The Norwegian advocates say "the W. C. T. U. does not understand it," (!) but we have had about as good opportunities as any in the field. This was a blow aimed at Susan Fessenden's level head, but it is safe to say her brain is equal to the situation.

Williamstown, Chester, Great Barrington, and Ware have voted for license by small majorities; Williamstown for the first time in four years, but no licenses were issued then, and since 1876 it has had no regular saloon. We hope this beautiful town in the Berkshires will continue clean and sweet.

THE EASTER SALE, ETC.

The Massachusetts union is in the midst of an "Easter Sale" to replenish its treasury. Temperance workers have no money—to speak of—and no wealthy constituency like the church. The 200,000 members of the National W. T. C. U. are mostly church members, and naturally look to the church for sympathy and coöperation; but what can we expect when the missionary organizations are distressingly in debt! Reform is progressive, however, in spite of many obstacles. We have no Norway system, no Sunday theatre, no "dark cells," and we have reform in the abuses of child insurance, and even contemplated legislation against "the iniquity of big sleeves." It has come out that the old town of Dedham had a statute in 1639 which reads as follows: "And be it further enacted, That hereafter no person whatsoever shall make a garment for women or any other sex with sleeves more than half an ell [a yard and nine inches] wide in the widest part, and so proportionate for bigger or smaller persons. And for present reformation of immoderate great sleeves and some other superfluities which may easily be redressed without much prejudice or spoil of garments, it is ordered," etc.

It is said to be quite common in Boston for women to remove their big hats in the theatre, but whether they will remove their sleeves is doubtful. And yet, old Dedham is seriously contemplating a revision of its ancient statute and a revival in the work of dress reform. As state superintendent of health and heredity your Massachusetts reporter may be allowed this expression of encouragement in her department.

Mrs. M. S. Howes, our lively superintendent of work among foreigners, sums up monthly a valuable record of work. She is, perhaps, our most breezy worker; but of course no one can surpass Helen G. Rice in the amount accomplished. It is rare that we get even a glimpse of her at the headquarters. Pen portraits of our superintendents is a large field for a letter and I may get to it yet.

The Temple number of THE UNION SIGNAL has made a sensation in Massachusetts. Everywhere the unions are making the Wheels go round, and there is no question but Mrs. Cheney will use to the utmost this lever to propel THE UNION SIGNAL as well as the Temple.

One thing more ere I close this belated letter. A most significant event of last month was a "Woman's Memorial Service," for Dr. A. J. Gordon, the beloved pastor and preacher, citizen and friend. The full notes of that meeting, which was one of great interest from beginning to end, must be curtailed to a few lines. Its significance from the character of speakers and audience, was most impressive. Nothing in the religious life was foreign to Dr. Gordon. The testimonies were numerous that he was a grand religious cosmopolitan.

OKLAHOMA.

IMPORTANT LEGISLATION.

IN THE UNION SIGNAL not long ago my former co-worker, Mrs. S. A. Thurston, closed her account of W. C. T. U. legislative work in Kansas by saying she was "glad her work was in a Prohibition state." Her sisters in rum-cursed Oklahoma do not find their lines cast in pleasant places, when they undertake to look out for the moral elevation of this commonwealth through the avenues of the legislature. Guthrie union took upon themselves the duty of caring for W. C. T. U. interests during the late session. Early the judiciary committee reported a refusal to raise the age of consent from fourteen to sixteen, recommending that it be lowered to twelve; one member wanted it reduced to seven years. One of the members of the union was very sick when the discussion was on, but from her sickbed she wrote a number of appeals to the members of the legislature, begging for it to be raised to eighteen years. She wrote to the wife of one member of the house, pleading with her to influence her husband to favor eighteen; told her if it was lowered every church bell in the city would be rung and indignation meetings held. As the outcome the age is raised to sixteen; the bill is not all that we desire, but it has an upward tendency.

The W. C. T. U. also fostered a bill forbidding the sale of cigarettes to minors; it passed both houses, but we hear rumors that it was last either at the clerk's desk or on its way to the governor.

A bill was introduced favoring prize fighting, under the misleading title of encouraging athletic sports. The white-ribboners of the capital gave much time and hard work to prevent its passage. An indignation meeting was held in the M. E. church instead of the weekly prayer-meeting; a committee was appointed, consisting of four preachers, three lawyers, two laymen, one M. D. and ten W. C. T. U's; each one was to buttonhole one or more, or all members of the legislature, and work as long as strength and faith held out, trying to secure votes against the passage of the bill. When the bill was discussed in the council, the chamber was packed, a few of the members were personal and insulting; one senator said none but Guthrie ladies and Guthrie cranks would do so disgraceful a thing as to try to dictate to intelligent statesmen how they should vote; he was tired seeing old women "philandering around, home was the place for them." The speaker left the chair to defend the bill; said "it was a damnable shame," the pressure that was being brought against that "innocent" amusement bill. He would not be a good father if he neglected this opportunity to provide measures to develop his boy; that he must raise his voice for not only his own boy but for others; that he must do what he could to keep this cosmopolitan territory from being ruled by cranks and Puritans; he did not believe in the sickly sentiments he had seen exhibited. Home was the place for the people." The senator from Logan county spoke against the bill, and bravely repelled the attacks upon the women; said it was a credit to them, and an honor to the council for so many of the moral and intelligent class to come out to hear the speeches upon the bill. The W. C. T. U. placed a beautiful bouquet on his desk; they also gave him the Chautauqua salute, upon which the chairman screamed out, "If those demonstrations ain't stopped the sergeant-at-arms will remove the offenders."

During the discussion a motion was made to banish all women from the floor but wives and members of families of the councilors. But "our sisters" just "sat still." Members stated that they had been offered money to vote for the bill. The Populist members were against it and yielded their time to Mr. Scott of Oklahoma county, a young Republican, who championed the opposition. His arguments were unanswerably eloquent and brilliant. In answer to the slur upon the Puritans, Mr. Scott traced them from the Mayflower to the present and drew comparisons between their work and that of the pugilist. The lobby was crowded with the rough element, and with unmistakable force Mr. Scott asked, "What meaneth the toughs in the lobby, if this is an innocent amusement bill?" One senator said that two years ago, when the Wrightman's gambling bill was up in the legislature he had voted for it, and had for his co-helpers ministers, professed Christians and reformers, and since its passage these persons had done nothing towards enforcing it. Several senators entered their protest against the insults offered by speaker Pitgor and others against the moral part of Guthrie, saying it was not only their privilege but their right to protest. The vote stood three for the bill, all the rest against it. The white-ribboners wended their way home singing in their hearts, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow." The "third house" in the building where the legislature met, occupied several rooms, all in accord with the saloon business, and the patronage by many of the solons was liberal. The father of the fighting bill asked the speaker during the discussion if he could not go down stairs for "something"—he needed rest and refreshments.

Under the shadow of an awful tragedy, the brave and noble champion of prohibition principles, ex-Governor St. John, of Kansas, has been in Oklahoma City; in token of their appreciation of his temperance labors, the W. C. T. U. of the city placed upon the coffin of the wife of his son Harry, a beautiful bouquet of calla lilies tied with the white ribbon.

News in a Nutshell.

Makanda, Ill., through the efforts of the district president, Mrs. M. A. Phillips, of Carbondale, has now a promising W. C. T. union of eleven members. Their first work is to introduce The Union Signal.

Mrs. Annie W. Clark, Ohio's superintendent of state and county fairs, presented at the recent meeting of the Ohio Agricultural Board, an excellent paper urging greater recognition of the W. C. T. U. and women's influence in connection with fairs.

Mrs. Henrietta Skelton has been laboring in Kentucky for the past four or five weeks and has done most efficient work, organizing six unions, three of them colored, and in places where no union existed before. She has added one hundred and ninety-seven members.

At the golden wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Bradstreet, April 8, in Beverly, Mass., among the many valued gifts received, none was more acceptable than a copy of The Union Signal. This is a good idea for anniversaries of all sorts among our friends and well-wishers.

A temperance coffee house and an employment bureau are to be opened under the auspices of Hope Mission, 226 Milwaukee Ave., Chicago. The formal opening will occur May 6, and exercises will take place Sunday afternoon, Mrs. Carse presiding and other members of the Central W. C. T. U. taking part.

That the Plattville, Wis., W. C. T. U. has been doing excellent and far-reaching work is evidenced by the report of the year by its corresponding secretary, Mrs. Ella Marshall. Its home talent lecture course for the benefit of the free reading-room was well patronized and brought $136.72. This is an excellent suggestion for other unions.

Effingham, Ill., Band of Hope is the first juvenile temperance society to have a commencement. It took place Sunday morning, April 28, the local churches deferring their services in order to take part. The closing exercises, awarding gifts and rewards for work, were held in the afternoon. On Friday and Saturday evenings, the Juniors and Seniors gave their recitations, orations, songs, dialogues, etc. The whole was a living demonstration, not soon to be forgotten by those who were fortunate enough to participate.

Mrs. Emilie D. Martin, our National superintendent of the department of purity in literature and art, is having a special jubilee just now because of an accumulation of "victories" for this one arm of our blessed cause. Among these victories she enumerates the 60,000 signatures for an elevated, purer press in New York and Brooklyn; the translation into English of Max Nordau's book on the recent manifestations of degeneracy and disease in literature; the "exit of Wilde"; the presentation of the Mullen bill in the New York senate against the nude and for honor to woman and her form; the forward sweep of personal interest of mothers themselves for the purity of the home: of the "good men who are standing by this department as counselors of the denunciation by leading journals of the low form of the drama," etc. Is the world being made better? The old question is surely being changed into an avowal, "Surely, the world is being made better."

The third annual convention of the third district W. C. T. U. has just closed a successful session at Patterson, La. The local union has gained twenty new members and fresh interest has been given to the cause. Mrs. M. M. Snell, National evangelist, spoke to the largest audiences ever assembled in that conservative and picturesque old town. Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, of Michigan, patiently taught business methods to women inclined to ignore parliamentary usages, and by her courtesy won them to more systematic methods. Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi, was present and added to the interest of the occasion. Her address, with experiments, for the Loyal Temperance Legions, was a lesson for both adults and children, and was just the right thing. Mrs. A. M. Zable, of New Orleans, state corresponding secretary, gave invaluable service with her sweet voice in song. The pastor of the Methodist Church South gave the ladies a cordial welcome in a public address and a loyal support all the time during the convention. This state has a good temperance educational law but it was plainly seen from the district superintendent's report that the law is not generally enforced, either by the school board or the teachers. A glowing tribute was paid to the work of the W. C. T. U. and a loyal welcome by Rev. Father Holtgreve in behalf of the Catholic church.

FRANCHISE.

Ill news travels fast and so of course you have heard that we lost municipal suffrage in the Massachusetts legislature this year, 137-97. Last year there were 119 in favor in the house, so this year special effort was directed toward the senate. In the meantime members of the house made a systematic effort to defeat the bill; they canvassed the members and secured pledges to vote against it. And this in spite of the fact that 210 petitions, representing over 130,000 petitioners from 186 cities and towns, were sent in requesting municipal suffrage. The size of the remonstrance is represented as 748!

This same legislature of '95 defeated the bill to raise the age of protection for girls from sixteen to eighteen years, 108-55. Comment is unnecessary. Women's hats and women's sleeves are among great themes for legislation here and elsewhere!

In a recent prelude to a Monday lecture Mr. Joseph Cook advocated woman suffrage with the safeguards of an educational qualification, and a compulsory vote. The National Superintendent of Franchise wondered if women must wait until these things are brought about? Also, if they are desirable shall we not be more likely to get them after women have the ballot than before? Also, is a compulsory vote likely to prove a benevolent one, i. e., of much value for the general good?

The following is the reply, Mrs. Cook being the scribe:

"Dear Mrs. Purington:—Mr. Cook asks me to say that Miss Willard approves of his watchword, 'No simpletons, no shirks, no sex in suffrage.' She authorized Mr. Cook to quote her as in favor of both the reading test and of compulsory voting as safeguards for universal or equal suffrage. David Dudley Field championed compulsory voting in a famous speech at Boston a few years ago. Proposals for compulsory voting came within a few votes of passing the Massachusetts senate. They have been made also in Maryland and the New York legislature. Compulsory voting is the rule in some of the cantons of Switzerland. It is found to work well. The object of it is to prevent the enormous mischief of absenteeism. More than 2,000,000 voters fail usually to go to the polls in national elections in the United States. This colossal mischief might be increased by woman suffrage were there no law for compulsory voting. If a voter has no reasonable excuse, such as illness or necessary absence, and fails to perform his political duty, let him be fined a moderate sum—say five or ten dollars—and the proceeds put into the educational fund of the state to which he belongs.

"Mr. Cook's proposal is nothing new and he has often defended it in print in Our Day and elsewhere. In a speech at the recent Cleveland W. C. T. U. convention he defended the above watchword, and Miss Willard, who was in the chair, expressed her approval of the positions taken. Of course it is understood that Mr. Cook favors immediate municipal suffrage for women even without these safeguards, but his watchword applies to the wide field of equal suffrage for the sexes and to men as well as to women."

WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS.

DISTRIBUTION OF FREE LITERATURE.

Dear Sisters:—The work at Ellis Island was kept up so successfully last year by what is called "faith," that I am trying the same plan this year in providing needy unions with literature for foreign speaking people free. Any union that can not raise the money to send for tracts and leaflets, and that will distribute them carefully and intelligently, can have them by applying to me. The only condition to this is that they report such destitution and any incidents connected therewith that are obtainable. If postage can be sent for transportation it will be very acceptable.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

The list of questions sent to the corresponding secretaries of each state for compiling the report of 1895 will not differ materially from that of 1894. Mrs. Woodbridge had enough blanks printed to last for two years, and therefore the only difference will be the addition of two questions. The first will ask the number of total abstinence pledges secured during the year, and I earnestly hope that each state corresponding secretary will incorporate this question into her own blanks. The second question will relate to organization. A report has appeared in some foreign papers that the W. C. T. U. is not organized in more than half the "twenty thousand counties" of the United States. As there are only between two and three thousand counties in the United States the statement bears its falsity upon its face, but it has occurred to me that it would be well if we could know in exactly how many counties we have no organization, that we may turn to those as the objective points in our future campaigns. Therefore, I shall ask each state corresponding secretary how many counties in her state are without county or local unions. If the secretaries can take the trouble to investigate and answer this question now, as well as later, I shall be greatly obliged. The National secretary does not furnish report blanks for the state secretaries to send to the local unions. Each state is supposed to attend to that matter itself, as questions are likely to differ in varying localities. I make this statement as I have already had several requests for blanks.

Miss Alice Palmer has been invited to attend the Provincial convention at Winnipeg, Manitoba, early in July. She would be glad to make engagements in Wisconsin, Minnesota and North Dakota, along the lines of the Northwestern and Great Northern roads. In order to reach the largest number of points and do the most good she will go for ten dollars and address an entertainment. She will speak upon "Some Relations between America and South Africa," or upon "Unity in Christian Reforms." This is too good an opportunity to be lost and I hope Miss Palmer will find herself "snowed under" with applications. Address her at Franklin, Ind.

Mrs. Marion H. Baxter is to have charge of the Willard Hall noon meetings for the ensuing month, and is entering upon the work with her usual enthusiasm. She is hoping to bring about conditions which shall cause the cosmopolitan nature of these meetings to be better known to our great constituency.

The phonograph is in its place, and though no cylinders have as yet been received we are having most favorable responses to the requests sent out to the noted men and women whom we have, in this way, asked to aid the Lathrap fund. One of the attractions will be a recitation by Miss Eva Shontz, who is elocutionist par excellence for the W. C. T. U. I have never heard a voice of such sweetness and compass as hers, and her renderings are to be remembered for a lifetime.

I am writing with my trunk checked and everything in readiness for my Southern trip. I hope you will all remember to pray that it may be blessed of God to the upbuilding of our great work. I shall send you notes of cheer "all along the line."

My especial work so far this year has been for the children. In November, after the National Convention, I addressed one of Boston's grammar schools, with eight hundred pupils, on the subject of cigarettes and tobacco.

Up to the present date I have addressed six Sunday-schools; all the public schools in Olneyville, R. I.; the high school in Portsmouth, N. H.; given four addresses in the schools of Holyoke, Mass.; an address to the grammar school of Bondsville; spoken to the Junior Y. M. C. A., of Worcester; the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Baptist church, of Worcester, and the Boys' Club, of Lynn.

I have given to adult audiences eleven temperance addresses and nine on the subject of tobacco and opium; have presented the subject of narcotics to three county conventions; have visited, to help and advise, eight W. C. T. Unions, and have organized a union in Merrick, Mass.

At a legislative hearing on the question of additional legislation in regard to the raiding of opium joints in Massachusetts, facts and statistics (relative to the prevalence of the habit not only among men, but among women and children) were presented, which ought to arouse every white-ribboner to the need of a crusade against any and all of the narcotics which are debasing the bodies and souls of thousands of victims, "who did not know any better" until it was too late.

With 1,500,000 opium victims in the United States to-day, there is work for every union and the sooner we come to a knowledge of the extent and power of this evil, the better it will be for thousands who are struggling in the dark and fearful wave that is hurrying them down to destruction. There is no opportunity to discuss, in this column, the whys and wherefores of the fact that there are many child victims to morphine and opium, but that the cigarette is an important factor in making an appetite for opium, can no longer be doubted.

I wish the unions which are rather tired, discouraged and do not know what to do next, would study up this new departure, the Anti-cigarette League; interest the boys, aid them in forming the leagues and thus save them from the misery and suffering which may now be found in our children's hospitals and reformatories.

M. ELLA A. GLEASON.
